Law Lib.
v. 46
(Cong. 44, sess. 1)

VOLUME IV, PART VI.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD AND APPENDIX.

FIRST SESSION, FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

498135

AUTHENTICATED
U.S. GOVERNMENT
INFORMATION
GPO

shall be preserved and opened for public inspection in the city of Washington. And the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of boxing, transporting, and preserving the same, as well as for fitting up and maintaining a proper place for the reception of the same, and the establishment of an educational library and museum; and the same, when established, shall be under the control of the Bureau of Education.

The educators, teachers, and patriots of the land, in view of the good it has done and of the greater influence for good it is accomplishing, will sustain the Bureau and enlarge its usefulness.

Thus, hastily, have I reviewed the action of Congress and its legislation in reference to common schools, agricultural colleges, and the Bureau of Education; have pointed out the defects of early legislation; and in the bill offered as a substitute the minority have drawn their inspiration from past legislation, embraced in its provisions those features and characteristics which former legislation has adopted and experience shown to be wise and proper.

The bill of the majority provides—and I quote from the speech of of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. WALKER:]

At the close of each fiscal year the Secretary of the Interior is directed to certify the net amount of the proceeds of the public lands for that year to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall within one month thereafter apportion the same among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia on the basis of population, to be applied by the local authorities of such States, Territories, and District, in accordance with their local laws, to the education of all the inhabitants thereof between the ages of five and sixteen years. For the first five years the whole amount of such net proceeds is to be thus apportioned; for the succeeding five years, one-half the other half; and after ten years the whole amount, to be invested in United States bonds, only the interest on which shall be thus apportioned, and the investments thus made to remain as a perpetual fund for the benefit of free education throughout our entire country. During the first ten years the apportionments are to be made on the basis of illiteracy, but forever afterward on that of the whole population. While the bill leaves it optional with each State to accept or reject its distributive share, yet when once accepted it must be faithfully and honestly applied to the purposes therein indicated, under the penalty of forfeiting all right to any other apportionments until full compliance be made with the conditions prescribed.

But by this substitute the proceeds of the sale of the public lands are to be invested perpetually in 3.65 per cent. bonds, payable in coin.

The agricultural colleges having received about one-fifth of the gross amount of land donated, many of them are still weak and struggling to maintain themselves; and recognizing the wisdom and forethought that governed the early legislation as well as the legislation of 1862, this bill appropriates one-fifth of the fund to the agricultural colleges and the remaining four-fifths to the States, Territories, and District of Columbia, according to population, for the support of free schools.

In this we recognize the fact that the United States is the trustee of the whole people, and in the commencement of the centennial year we insist that the United States should do even and exact justice, and that she shall hereafter execute the trust according to its terms.

The appropriation to the different States and Territories is made through the Commissioner of Education, but it is to be expended by the States and Territories through the officers and channels designated by the laws of the same, and only for educational purposes. The only power that the Commissioner is invested with is to adjust the amount of appropriation and to see that the money is placed in the hands of the proper officers designated by the State, and to be expended for educational purposes only; and if any State or Territory fails to expend it in the proper way, any further payment shall be withheld until the amount misapplied is made good.

The bill further provides for the punishment of the officers for the misapplication.

This misapplication of the funds of 1862 by some of the States, as well as the misapplication of the Peabody fund in certain districts, should serve as a reminder that the strictest accountability should be demanded of the disbursing officers, and severe punishment should follow the defalcation of him who, intrusted with the expenditure of this sacred fund, attempts to divert it from its legitimate channels.

With a country like ours, so vast, so extensive—girded upon the one side by almost a sea and line of ice; on another by the Atlantic Ocean, where the sun comes up dripping from its waves, washing its rock-ribbed and ice-bound shores; upon another where the soft and beautiful waters of the Gulf kiss the shores of the sunny South; and upon another the golden shores of the Pacific, where the sun sinks to rest in its purple waters, only stops "the tide of empire" in its westward march—with its fertile plains; its soil filled with agricultural products; its hills and mountains giving forth of its coal, iron, silver, gold, and all the metals; its rivers freighted with the products of its own industry and wealth; with its manufactories vieing with and surpassing the skilled workmen of the world, who can foretell its future, who predict its power, who imagine its success, when, added to what God and nature have given it, you add an educated people, an educated marine, and an educated soldiery?

The people are anxious for this disposition of the public lands; for where is there a country with a people so anxious for education as this? Where a people where taxes are voluntarily assessed in such magnitude as here? The following table shows the disposition and willingness of the people to tax themselves in order to bestow the benefits of education upon all:

School population, number of teachers, and permanent school fund in the States and Territories.

States and Territories.	School population.	Number of teachers.	Total annual income.	Permanent school fund.
Alabama	406,270	3,999	$553,014	$2,811,252
Arkansas	184,692	2,322	789,536	135,000
California	171,563	2,693	3,390,359	1,737,500
Connecticut	134,976	3,045	1,592,749	2,044,226
Delaware	*47,825	430	192,735	.....
Florida	94,522	796	188,952	219,400
Georgia	394,037	*3,500	435,319	†350,000
Illinois	958,003	*21,129	7,860,554	*6,573,784
Indiana	667,711	13,133	5,041,517	8,799,191
Iowa	533,903	18,145	5,035,498	3,363,960
Kansas	199,986	5,383	1,042,298	2,304,309
Kentucky	*474,514	*3,673	*717,350	*1,628,123
Louisiana	274,688	1,557	699,665	.....
Maine	221,477	6,459	1,313,303	400,558
Maryland	276,120	2,723	1,376,046	350,370
Massachusetts	294,708	9,216	6,410,514	2,065,238
Michigan	448,784	12,467	4,173,551	3,143,662
Minnesota	218,641	2,963	1,861,158	3,200,000
Mississippi	318,459	4,968	1,110,248	2,068,358
Missouri	738,431	9,651	3,013,595	†7,248,535
Nebraska	80,122	3,091	292,475	121,223
Nevada	*6,315	*115	*146,181	.....
New Hampshire	76,272	3,669	621,649	52,688
New Jersey	312,694	3,253	2,311,465	1,210,882
New York	1,583,064	30,013	11,601,256	3,080,107
North Carolina	*348,603	*2,690	408,794	*2,187,564
Ohio	1,017,726	22,492	8,711,411	†3,646,713
Oregon	44,661	953	86,673	564,000
Pennsylvania	1,200,000	19,880	8,798,816	.....
Rhode Island	53,316	1,056	761,796	250,376
South Carolina	239,264	2,855	489,542	439,542
Tennessee	426,612	4,210	740,316	†2,512,500
Texas	*313,061	*4,214	*1,046,984	.....
Vermont	*89,541	*4,406	*516,252	†669,086
Virginia	482,789	4,262	1,215,353	1,430,645
West Virginia	179,897	3,461	753,477	293,270
Wisconsin	464,829	9,451	2,308,187	2,624,239
Arizona	2,508	14	28,759	.....
Colorado	23,275	377	254,679	254,679
Dakota	8,343	208	32,602	.....
District of Columbia	31,671	293	517,610	None.
Idaho	4,020	.....	*31,064	.....
Montana	3,822	99	31,821	None.
New Mexico	*23,000	*143	*28,523	.....
Utah	35,696	458	130,799	15,000
Washington	*11,937	.....	*39,294	.....
Wyoming	*1,100	*20	.....	.....
Indian Territory	.....	.....	.....	.....
Total	14,123,448	249,845	88,703,739	67,795,985

The figures marked * are taken from the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1874; those marked † include that portion of the school-fund not now available.

We have here the heroic spectacle of a generous people taxing themselves to this enormous amount yearly in order to secure free schools. Then, why should not we, by the distribution of the proceeds of the sale of public lands, lessen that burden by applying the proceeds of the sales of the property of the people toward that object? For if you devote its proceeds to educational purposes it makes special taxation by the people for that one object unnecessary to that extent; and as the income yearly increases the necessity of taxation will decrease in the same ratio.

The following exhibit prepared from the report of the Commissioner of Education for the year 1875 illustrates in a clear and forcible manner what has been accomplished in the interest of education in the last one hundred years in the United States, and of the present wants and requirements of the people, and of the pressing necessity now weighing upon us to wisely legislate and thus secure the benefit of free schools to our whole country.

In 1777 there were but 9 colleges in the United States; now there are 400 colleges and universities, with 57,080 students and 3,700 professors and teachers. Then little or nothing was done for the education of women; now there are 209 female seminaries, with 23,445 students and 2,285 teachers. At that time professional schools were unknown; now there are 322 professional schools, with 23,280 students and 2,490 teachers. Then there were no normal schools; now there are 124, with 24,405 students and 966 teachers. Then there were no commercial colleges; now there are 127, with 25,892 students and 577 teachers. The secondary and preparatory schools were almost unknown then; now there are 1,122, with 109,393 pupils and 6,163 teachers. The school population of that day is unknown, but at present it is more than 13,000,000, and the school enrollment now amounts to 8,000,000. The total income of the public schools at present is $82,000,000; expenditures, $75,000,000; value of property, $165,000,000. These figures are very eloquent as showing what has been accomplished, but the following extract from the report is quite as eloquent in showing that much yet remains to be done before the whole field of education is fully occupied and developed. The number of illiterates by the census of 1870 above the age of ten years was in round numbers 5,500,000. Of these more than 2,000,000 were adults; upward of 2,000,000 more were from fifteen to twenty-one years of age, and 1,000,000 were between ten and fifteen years old. Of the number between fifteen and twenty-one years it is estimated that about one-half have passed the opportunity for education, and since it is well understood that a large proportion of the children in this country leave the schools perhaps at an average age of ten to twelve years, the conclusion is irresistible that tens of thousands of those who are reported as illiterate between ten and fifteen years of age will forever remain so. Of the 930,000 illiterate persons between fifteen and twenty-one years of age who have passed their opportunity for instruction 137,000 are in the Northern States, 15,000 in the Pacific, and 778,000 in the Southern.

Free schools in a republic are a necessity, and that necessity has always had a public recognition from the Government from the commencement to the present, and a public recognition at this time by the representatives of the people of the doctrine that schools should be free, so far as they can be, by the donation of the property of the people for that purpose would be met by the plaudits of a happy people, and the centennial year would be ushered in with a law that would add power, strength, and perpetuity to our Government.

The property of the people is yet a princely heritage; the public domain is still vast. Corporations and railroads have depleted it, but enough yet remains.

Congress has appropriated in the last century about 140,000,000 acres for educational purposes, and we look at the progress and wonder at the extent of the gift. But let us turn our eyes for a moment and see how generous the same Congress—this trustee for all the people—how much more generous she has been to corporations; for since 1852, less than a quarter of a century, she has appropriated 180,000,000 acres to railroads; 30,000,000 acres more to railroads in a quarter of a century than she has to the whole people for educational purposes for a century. These same and other corporations are now here, and more will come, soliciting more and further help, and they will remain here soliciting, praying, begging and —— for aid so long as the public domain remains undisposed of.

These grants and subsidies to corporations and railroads must cease; the people will rise up in their majesty and might, and demand that such grants shall forever end.

How better secure the indorsement and confidence of the people, how better drive the lobbyist from our doors, how better keep the channels of legislation pure and undefiled, how better add to the perpetuity of our Government and the happiness of our people than by at once passing this bill, devoting the proceeds of the sale to the sacred purpose of education? And when you have done that, and not until then, will you drive the seeker of subsidies, grants, and Government aid from the Capitol, and thus compel private enterprises to be built by private capital.

Our heritage, I repeat, is still a princely one, and a permanent educational fund can be realized the income of which will, if properly utilized, in time make education free to all, and in the end save to the people the necessity of taxation for school purposes; for private liberality and benevolence will be set in motion as public recognition and Government aid are extended, and public spirited citizens in the respective States will vie with each other in generous rivalry in bestowing princely endowments for perfecting the free-school system. We still possess 1,154,771,762 acres of land. It is true the revenue from this at present will be limited, but it will increase year by year, and as the income increases the necessity of taxation in the several States and Territories will decrease and the burdens of the people in the same ratio will be reduced.

Free schools are, and have been, the great educators of the people; but they are destined also to be the great pacificators of the people; for when this great educational fund is distributed among the several States every family in the land will be the recipient of the bounty of the Government, and every child, as though drawing nourishment from the same maternal fount, will learn, in its infant prattle, to lisp the name of its mother-country, and growing in strength and vigor will become her warm and earnest defender whenever her name is assailed or her honor impugned.

Since I have had the honor of a seat upon this floor—and none recognize that honor to a greater degreee than myself—I am convinced that Government should attach the children of the country more closely to herself and teach them to feel, recognize, and know that she is aiding and assisting them in securing an education that will enable them to do honor to a Government of which they are a component part, for here my ears have been pained with words spoken, both from the North and South, in which the people of this country have no sympathty.

The people recognize the fact that the war of the rebellion is at an end and that the past is history; they are willing the dead past shall bury its dead; they are anxious that the veil of forgetfulness shall be cast over that unfortunate and unhappy past; for there is not a hearthstone in the land, not a family North or South, not a heart but bleeds, not a voice but sobs, when the past is referred to; and he that attempts to kindle anew the flames of sectional strife, that have almost entirely been quenched in blood, will find that he or they have miscalculated the sentiment of the American people and have committed political suicide in the attempt.

Being thus solicitous that the past shall be buried, let the children know the present. Teach them the lesson that there is but one country; that that country is but one and indivisible, and never can be separated or torn asunder; and as the gentle blessings of the free-school system permeate every section, falling, like the dews of heaven, upon every family and making glad the heart of every child, it will become truly the pacificator as well as the educator of the people; the innocent prattle of children will drown the voice of angry passions and sectional strife, and the first song they will learn will be:

The union of lakes— the union of lands—
The union of States none can sever—
The union of hearts—the union of hands—
And the flag of our Union forever!

And with the children educated in these principles, growing into manhood and womanhood imbued with that sentiment, then will we have a country with no North, no South, no East, no West, but a country whose people will be actuated by a common impulse, living for a common cause and working for a common destiny; that destiny which is to give lessons to the world in the science of self-government; to offer an asylum to the oppressed of every land, an asylum where, to use the language of one who has shown himself a model civilian as well as proved himself a distinguished soldier, (Hancock)—

The right of trial by jury, the habeas corpus, the liberty of the press, the freedom of speech, the natural rights of persons, and the rights of property must be preserved.

In the passage of the bill we will have accomplished much toward that ideal of a government in which liberty, prosperity, and intelligence are the universal conditions. But as liberty and prosperity cannot endure without intelligence, Government should see to it that intelligence and citizenship should be inseparable; and in no way can it be accomplished except by carrying into effect the ordinance of 1787, and inscribing upon the legislation of the country the motto that "schools and the means of education shall be forever encouraged;" and then can we say, with our own American poet:

"Sail on, O ship of state!
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!

We know what master laid thy keel,
What workmen wrought thy ribs of steel;
Who made each mast, and sail, and rope;
What anvils rang, what hammers beat;
In what a forge and what a heat,
Were shaped the anchors of thy hope.

* * *

In spite of rock, and tempest's roar;
In spite of false lights on the shore,
Sail on; nor fear to breast the sea:
Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee,
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith, triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee; are all with thee.

TARIFF.

Mr. COCHRANE. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to make any extended remarks at this time; but I am unwilling to let this opportunity pass without mentioning a matter which is of vital interest to my constituents. I refer to the bill introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] and reported to the House by the Committee of Ways and Means, in which it is proposed to reduce the existing tariff. When this bill was discussed in the Committee of the Whole I was absent in the city of New York as a member of a subcommittee charged by the House with the duty of investigating the Federal offices there. I had intended at that time to deliver some extended remarks in opposition to the bill; but my enforced absence prevented me. Since that time I have understood—and indeed the gentleman from Illinois in his speech of a few moments ago declared—that it was not proposed to press that bill to a vote this session. I have consequently concluded to reserve the remarks which I had prepared upon the subject, to be delivered at a time when the bill is urged in the House.

I feel, however, that it is my duty now to declare that I am opposed to any reduction of the existing tariff. Throughout my district and State every manufacturing interest is suffering; and it is not only unwise but suicidal to inaugurate a policy the legitimate effects of which will be to bring ruin and disaster upon every industrial interest in the country. It was urged when I was a candidate for Congress that I was opposed to the tariff. This was not true then and it is not true now. So long as I represent my district in this House I will sternly set my face against any effort to strike down the protection which the tariff laws afford to our industries. I promised the laboring men that I would oppose any interference with the present tariff laws, and I propose to faithfully redeem that promise.

I trust that the House will pardon me for having detained it even thus long; but I desire to fairly place myself upon record on a question so vitally important to the people whom I represent.

And then, on motion of Mr. COCHRANE, (at nine o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. HANCOCK: The petition of Thomas Kearney, collector of customs for the port of Corpus Christi, for relief, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. LEAVENWORTH: Remonstrance of Robert Hewitt and 450 other citizens of Syracuse, New York, against the discontinuance of the fast-mail service, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The petition of Theodore Winters and 100 other citizens of California, for the establishment of a post-route between Winters and Monticello, California, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of J. S. Pierce and other citizens of California, for the passage of Senate bill for the relief of settlers on public lands within the limits of railroad grants, to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, the petition of A. Ramon and other cigar manufacturers of San Francisco, California, for a reduction of the tax on the manufacturers of cigars, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, July 31, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3989) for the relief of Catharine and Sophia German was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMMUNITION FOR INDIANS.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 154) prohibiting the supply of special metallic cartridges to hostile Indians was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. OGLESBY. It pertains to ammunition. Why should it not go to the Committee on Military Affairs?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It pertains to ammunition, and will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs or the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS. It should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so suggested.

Mr. LOGAN. Why should it go to a committee? I have no objection to a reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I should like to take up the joint resolution and act upon it now. I think it is a very important matter and ought to be adopted.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. LOGAN. I think it ought to be passed without reference to a committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the resolution ought to be adopted, but I do not see how it is going to be effective. The President is authorized to take such measures as he may see fit. Of course these measures must be within the law. Unless we give him some legal authority I do not see how he can stop the evil. Nor do I see how an article is to be declared contraband of war when there is no war. Indian hostilities are not war in the sense in which belligerent rights and belligerent duties accrue. I am in favor, of course, of the passage of the resolution, but it seems to me there ought to be not only some specific authority given to the President, but some mode pointed out in which he can exercise that authority.

Mr. OGLESBY. The President will act through the Secretary of the Interior in giving instructions to the Indian agents, or the Secretary of War in giving instructions to the commanders at the posts.

Mr. ANTHONY. Can they arrest persons and punish them?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly they can. These traders are governed by certain regulations which the law prescribes. This resolution gives the power to the President so that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior, under such instructions as the President may see proper, may prohibit the sale by the post-traders in the Army or the Indian agents at the different posts. The manner in which the Indians get their supply of ammunition and these metallic cartridges is through these agents and traders.

Mr. MORRILL. Let the enacting part of the joint resolution be read. I think it covers the case.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to take such measures as in his judgment may be necessary to prevent such special metallic ammunition being conveyed to such hostile Indians, and is further authorized to declare the same contraband of war in such district of country as he may designate during the continuance of hostilities.

Mr. INGALLS. There is no need of referring the resolution, and I trust that no request of the kind will be made. The necessity for the passage of the resolution is very great. My own impression is that the only difficulty with the joint resolution as it has been passed by the House is that it is not sufficiently stringent. The man who under any pretense whatever will sell ammunition to Indians in the present condition of affairs is no better than a murderer. The resolution ought to give authority to somebody to either hang such persons at the nearest telegraph-pole or shoot them immediately by drum-head court-martial.

Mr. DAWES. And then try them?

Mr. INGALLS. And try them afterward.

Mr. HARVEY. I merely wish to state that in my opinion the resolution ought to be passed at once. It gives powers that are effective to stop this injury.

Mr. OGLESBY. Let us pass it, then.

Mr. HARVEY. While the Senator from Rhode Island says that Indian hostilities are not war, in my opinion they are much worse than war. The necessity for such action in the direction indicated by the resolution is so evident that I think there can be no objection to it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resoiution.

The preamble recites that it is ascertained that the hostile Indians of the Northwest are largely equipped with arms which require special metallic cartridges; and that such special ammunition is in large part supplied to such hostile Indians directly or indirectly through traders and others in the Indian country.

The joint resolution authorizes the President of the United States to take such measures as, in his judgment, may be necessary to prevent such special metallic ammunition being conveyed to such hostile Indians, and to declare the same contraband of war, in such district of country as he may designate, during the continuance of hostilities.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NELSON TIFFANY—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives upon the bill (H. R. No. 1337) for the relief of Nelson Tiffany.

The Chief Clerk read the action of the House of Representatives, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 28, 1876.

The President of the United States having returned to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, the bill entitled "An act for the relief of Nelson Tiffany," with his objections thereto, the House of Representatives proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same, and—

Resolved, That the said bill do pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives agreeing to pass the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Perhaps it is not necessary to make a statement to the Senate in regard to this bill; but as the person named in it is a constituent of mine, and the facts of his case have come to my knowledge as they were not known at the War Department or to the President when the veto message was prepared, I think it my duty to make a statement of those facts.

Nelson Tiffany was a soldier in the war from the 16th of September, 1861, till late in the year of 1865, when he was honorably discharged. In the year 1864 he was wounded at Bermuda Hundred, shot through the abdomen, the ball taking effect finally in the spine. He was sent first to the hospital at Fortress Monroe, and then he was transferred to a hospital at New Haven, Connecticut. Having regained in some degree his health, he obtained a furlough for thirty days and after that an extension, I think, for thirty days more. When that time expired he was so ill and depressed that he had no expectation of living, and he returned to his home at Auburn, about four miles from the city of Worcester. There he has remained ever since, in a very miserable condition, broken in health, and utterly unable to perform any labor, and not likely to survive for many months. He is recorded upon the books of the War Department as a deserter, and this bill is designed to give him relief.

Mr. OGLESBY. Not having reported to the hospital at the time when he should have reported, at the end of his second furlough?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEST. Does the bill give him any pay?

Mr. BOUTWELL. It gives him no pay. There is not anything of that kind in the bill.

Mr. OGLESBY. It simply corrects his military history.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Perhaps I shall be excused for saying that General BANKS stated in the House that the Adjutant-General made this statement in the presence of the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War and the Adjutant-General both agreed that if the facts had been known to them, the report to the President would have been of an opposite character. I therefore hope there will be no objection on the part of the Senate to the passage of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the immediate object of the bill, merely to do justice to this soldier for a wrong he has suffered, or is it designed to follow it up by some pecuniary relief, a pension or additional pay?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Of course thus far he has not received a pension and, I suppose, has received no pay since his discharge. I am not instructed and know nothing of the law; but I presume if this relief is granted, he would be entitled to a pension. About that I cannot say. I do not think it weakens the case before the Senate, even if that should occur, because the testimony, which I will not trouble the Senate to hear unless there should be further request, goes to show that he was a faithful soldier from first to last. General Pickett, who then commanded the twentieth regiment to which this man belonged, makes a personal statement, which I have here in manuscript, to the effect that he was always a faithful soldier and performed his duty. He is a most respectable man, from a respectable family, and every consideration would lead the Senate, I think, to pass this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore.. The question is, Shall the bill pass, notwithstanding the objections of the President? on which the yeas and nays are required.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill was passed upon by the Committee on Military Affairs favorably, and I hope that it will pass. It was fairly considered by the committee, and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLAYTON] made the report. He is not present now.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 41, nays 0; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Barnum, Booth, Boutwell, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Kelly, Kernan, Key, Logan, McCreery, McMillan, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Windom, and Withers—41.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Bogy, Bruce, Burnside, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, Maxey, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Whyte, and Wright—30.

So the bill was passed by the votes of two-thirds of the Senators present, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

INCREASE OF CAVALRY FORCE FOR SIOUX HOSTILITIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication; which was read:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, July 27, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to send herewith copy of dispatch from General Sheridan, recommending an increase of the companies of the Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Seventh Cavalry to one hundred men, as was done for the two regiments on the Rio Grande, and to submit an estimate for the number of men required in addition to the twenty-five thousand men which are now authorized for the Army.

The number which will be required to fill all the regiments of cavalry on the frontier and in Texas to the maximum of one hundred men to each company will be twenty-five hundred, and the expense therefor will be as follows:

Recruiting 2,500 cavalrymen	$50,000
Pay per annum	390,000
Subsistence	200,400
Clothing	206,000
Regular supplies	216,000
Purchase of horses	337,500
Transportation, (wagons, &c.)	84,800
Transportation by rail, &c., about	150,000
Total	1,634,700

I also submit a draught of an act which will effect the increase proposed by General Sheridan.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. D. CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

To the PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask for the reading of the bill accompanying the letter. I have examined the papers myself, and I ask that the bill be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the draught of the bill inclosed by the Secretary of War, as follows:

Whereas war with the Sioux Indians now prevails; and whereas in the conduct of this war it is necessary to the efficiency of the cavalry regiments therein named that their effective force shall be increased: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, empowered to increase the number of enlisted men to one hundred for each company of such regiments of cavalry as in his opinion may require the same. Provided, That not more than twenty-five hundred enlisted men shall thus be added at any one time to the twenty-five thousand authorized by the act approved July 24, 1876, "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877," and the following sums are hereby appropriated for recruiting and maintaining the same, &c.

Mr. LOGAN. I suggest to the Senate that it is not necessary to refer that bill. The Senators can give their opinions by their votes without a reference to a committee. It is a very important matter. It has been suggested by the general in command that the cavalry regiments on the frontier now in front of the Indians be increased the same as the two regiments of cavalry on the Rio Grande, and he gives the estimate of the cost of the increase. I think myself it is a bill that ought to pass. I think the cavalry ought to be increased. That would make the force as efficient as is necessary for all purposes on the plains. As I understand it, the War Department approves the measure, and I should be very glad if the Senate would take up the bill now and act on it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the Senate acting on that bill, though it is rather an unusual proceeding; but it has been suggested to me by very high military authority that the same power to increase the infantry regiments ought to be granted also. The infantry can be placed in front of the enemy much quicker and much cheaper than cavalry, and as to some of the regiments at least, authority ought to be given to the President in his discretion to authorize several of the infantry regiments to be raised in the same way for temporary purposes by temporary enlistments.

Mr. LOGAN. I think that ought to be done, but I will say to the Senator that at the last session of Congress, when the Senate over my protest reduced the infantry down to 25,000, I stated the very fact that it was impossible to preserve the frame-work of an army without infantry. I have always been of that opinion, and it is very desirable that it should be done; but believing that putting the two together would probably lead to opposition while the bill itself would not, I did not desire to encumber it. I should certainly favor the proposition suggested by the Senator from Ohio; but I would rather have this bill acted on separately, inasmuch as by the appropriation bill for the Army we allowed the increase of the infantry from 22,500 up to 25,000 enlistments, as it was left at the last session of Congress. I myself believe that the infantry ought to be increased, or the regiments filled up. I think they are very necessary in Indian warfare as well as in other warfare; but I would rather not encumber this bill with that proposition.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not interpose in regard to this bill; but I desire to say that I think we have a right to feel somewhat alarmed at the condition of affairs in the Indian country, and we shall not be able to excuse ourselves for neglecting any precaution or care to strengthen the Army. The fact is known to us all that about three thousand of our brave soldiers, among the best and choicest parts of the Army of the United States, well commanded, but very inefficient in numbers, are now in the face of the last body of hostile Indians that will ever encounter the United States of America. The accounts in the newspapers, although perhaps somewhat exaggerated, show that these Indians are at least to the number of five thousand fighting men, probably well armed, and they have shown great courage. They have faced our troops in open line of battle. Now, when this last contest is to be made, our troops are at least inferior in force, cut off from supplies, no doubt somewhat dispirited by one terrible massacre and one lost engagement. It seems to me that under the circumstances the Congress of the United States ought by a unanimous vote hasten to meet the emergency and provide for an enlargement of both the infantry and cavalry force, or at least give the President power to accept enlistments in the regular service or to accept regiments. Regiments have been tendered by the governor of Montana, by the governors of surrounding Territories, but there is no authority to accept even the enlistment of a single soldier.

It seems to me under these circumstances we had better enlarge this bill, although it calls but for an authority to increase the cavalry regiments; we had better give authority also to increase the infantry regiments, with the certainty that the President of the United States will not abuse this power and will not call a single man into the service that is not necessary to repel and put down, for the last time I trust in this country, the Indian force. It seems to me that it is not too much for us at once to give this authority, leaving to the President the discretion to exercise it, and also to allow these regiments to be filled up temporarily. I think even six months' enlistments would probably answer the purpose we are now called on to meet. I am told that there are but forty-six soldiers in a company of infantry now according to the standard fixed by the Army of the United States, while all the organization, the skeleton of the company is full; all the officers may be there and the offices may be full, and yet the force is not one-half what experience has shown to be the best and most effective force of a company of infantry. It seems to me, therefore, that we ought to extend the power of the President. It is a power that cannot be abused but may be useful and may be important, because if any accident should happen to either General Crook or General Terry there will be a call for Congress to meet together and give the requisite authority to repel and put down this Indian force. I think, therefore, we ought to do it now.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs what, if any, action has been taken by the committee in reference to the joint resolution introduced by myself some time since to authorize the President to accept volunteers on the frontier in case the necessity for the exercise of such authority should arise? I should like to inquire of the chairman if he has received any information from the military authorities which will enable him to form a judgment as to the propriety and the necessity of the adoption of that resolution?

Mr. LOGAN. I will answer the Senator by stating to him that the Committee on Military Affairs referred his resolution to the Secretary of War, and that we have received no official communication as yet from him. That is all I can say in reference to that.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to express my opinion—to record my judgment here and now that it would be, as a matter of economy and for other obvious considerations, better and safer for the Government to be in a situation to accept volunteers for temporary service on the frontier when and as they may be required, than to attempt to increase the regular regiments by enlistments. The recruiting for the regular Army is ordinarily a very slow process, and I greatly fear that the Government will not be able to secure recruits in sufficient numbers to answer the purpose in such an emergency as surely even at this moment exists on the frontier. The Indian forces are very much larger than are credited to them by the estimates of the military authorities, and the most decisive action is demanded.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not going to discuss the question of volunteers. Whether it would be a proper thing to authorize their acceptance or not, that question is not up now, and therefore I do not desire to discuss it; but I hope Senators, at least those who are in favor of this proposition, will not impede the passage of this bill. It is a well-known fact that I have never tried to reduce the Army so far as the mere force of the Army is concerned, the mere strength of the Army, the soldiers of the Army, the privates of the Army. I have heretofore opposed it in the Senate, as I did on the last appropriation bill that passed prohibiting enlistments until the Army should be reduced to 25,000 private soldiers. I opposed it on the very ground of objection stated now that the companies would be reduced to such small numbers that they would become ineffective. My opposition was overruled. In this last appropriation bill the committee of conference agreed to strike out what the House had seen proper to put in, that the reduction of the Army should go on till it reached 22,500. We struck that out so as to put it back to the proposition of the last Congress at 25,000 men. We were very glad to take the restriction entirely off. I should have been glad to see authority given to have the companies filled up; but it was not done.

This proposition now is to fill up the cavalry companies merely. I fear that if we insert the filling up of all the regiments, the bill will amount to nothing, it will meet with opposition, and will not pass. I think this is a very important bill; and if the Senate will now allow it to be taken up, I have two or three amendments to move to it, and I should like the Senate to consider them now. It will take but a few moments, because the question as to whether the cavalry regiments shall be filled up or not the Senate is ready to act upon, I think.

Mr. THURMAN. Does this propose that these regiments shall be filled up by enlistments for three years or only for a short period?

Mr. LOGAN. The same as the regular Army is in point of time.

Mr. THURMAN. For three years?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. Filled up to one hundred men for three years. There is a question which strikes me about that. While I shall not oppose the bill if recommended by the committee and by the Department, the question with me is whether or not you can fill up the companies in that way as soon as they will be needed. I have a very strong impression that unless this Sioux war is finished, unless the Indians who are in arms there are put back, all your plans for putting your Indians on reservations will go for nothing. I think therefore there is the strongest possible reason for making our force there sufficient to vanquish the Indians who are now in arms and to do it speedily. I have great doubts whether you can get three years' recruits very rapidly so as to fill up your cavalry regiments. The Senator from Illinois is better acquainted with the subject than I am, of course.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Ohio, I think, is very correct in theory. I do not believe, however, that there will be any difficulty in filling up these regiments, and I will state the reason. There is hardly ever any trouble in recruiting for the cavalry or very little. In times like these when many men are out of employment, there is not much difficulty in recruiting any arm of the service, but especially the cavalry arm of the service. I have no doubt myself that if this bill passes, within a very short time the twenty-five hundred recruits called for for the cavalry regiments would be forthcoming; I have no question about that. If they were for the infantry regiments I should have some doubt about it.

Mr. THURMAN. I only made the suggestion. I defer to the Senator's better information and knowledge of the subject.

Mr. LOGAN. That is my judgment about it. I know that the cavalry is always more readily recruited because people would rather ride than walk, that is the true reason; and there is another reason, they get more pay.

Mr. THURMAN. It is a harder service.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that, but it is much more easy to recruit for it; the pay is better, and men consider it more attractive, and for that reason it is more easy to recruit. I desire very much, if the Senator will allow me, to have this bill taken up.

Mr. MERRIMON. Will the honorable Senator yield to me a moment? I do not wish by any vote of mine or by my voice to impede the adoption of efficient measures to repress the present Indian outbreak; but I should like to be fully informed, before we take such an important step, about what I am going to do. So far as I remember, the President has not sent to Congress any message on the subject of the present Indian outbreak. We know by the newspapers that there is an Indian outbreak. It seems to me that we ought to have some official information touching its character, its magnitude, and what ought to be done about its suppression. At the same time I should be glad to know from the honorable Senator, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, whether there is an actual state of war, and how far by the measure we adopted some minutes ago and the present measure and other measures we are inaugurating a state of recognized legal war with the Indians in the West. I repeat, that I am ready by my vote and my voice, so far as I can, to aid in adopting such efficient measures as will result in the suppression of this Indian outbreak; but I should like the Senator to give me any information he has upon the subject of the present outbreak, whether it is a recognized state of war or a mere émeute which can be readily suppressed.

Mr. CONKLING. To what bill does the Senator refer as having been passed a few minutes ago?

Mr. MERRIMON. A joint resolution passed a while ago authorizing the President to declare certain kinds of ammunition contraband of war.

Mr. LOGAN. That joint resolution was to give the President authority to make such regulations as he might see proper to prohibit the sale of metallic cartridges by Indian agents and make them contraband of war at his discretion when a state of war existed. That I think is a very necessary preliminary step. I think it ought to be done whether we have peace or war. I have always thought myself that the way to civilize Indians was to prohibit as much as possible their having guns and ammunition to any great extent with which they are prepared for warfare. I have advocated that here. I did it some years ago when Senator Harlan was chairman of the Indian Committee. He took it on himself in a very able argument to rather make sport of my proposition at that time. This is a very different thing.

So far as the Senator from North Carolina asks me for my information, let me say that we all have the same character of information about this Indian war.

Mr. SHERMAN. We have a message from the President.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes. This bill is a bill sent here by the War Department with a message asking, on the recommendation of General Sheridan, that these regiments of cavalry be permitted to be filled up, with an estimate of the expense.

Mr. HITCHCOCK rose.

Mr. LOGAN. We have only fifteen minutes of the morning hour left. I should like to get the bill up and have action on it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have no objection to the bill being taken up; but if it is the object of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to confine all action of Congress for the protection of the northwestern frontier to the increase of the regular cavalry regiments or to an authorization of the increase of the regular cavalry organization, I wish to record my belief that such measures are inadequate to the demands of the occasion.

If I understood the honorable Senator he stated—I thought he implied at any rate—that other measures might follow; perhaps the resolution offered by my colleague some weeks ago; but at this period of the session, which is so near what we hope will be its close, I beg to suggest to the honorable chairman of the committee the propriety of trying if possible to combine in this measure an authorization to the President to receive volunteers at his discretion. I believe that it is neither wise nor prudent for this Congress to adjourn the present session without authorizing the President to accept, at his discretion, volunteers. It is true General Sheridan has said that he thought we had force sufficient to put down this Indian war. I hope he has; but I doubt whether General Sheridan or the country generally appreciate the extent to which these Indians are supplied with the very best of weapons. I doubt whether this country appreciates the danger which is imminent in the Northwest to-day; and if after Congress adjourns the evil then comes, we are without remedy, and the expense of putting down that war without the forms of law will be increased fourfold, to say nothing of the destruction of life and property. I believe that Congress ought not to adjourn without the passage of a bill or resolution to authorize the President in his discretion to accept volunteers.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask for a vote now on taking this measure from the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks for the present consideration of this bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 1008) to increase the efficiency of the cavalry force in the suppression of Sioux Indian hostilities; and it was read twice and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LOGAN. The bill as sent here does not contain the detailed items of appropriation. I offer, to come in at the end of the bill, the following amendment:

Recruiting twenty-five hundred cavalrymen, $50,000; pay per annum, $390,000; subsistence, $200,400; clothing, $206,000; regular supplies, $216,000; purchase of horses, $337,500; transportation, (wagons, &c.,) $84,800; transportation by rail, &c., about $150,000.

Mr. MERRIMON. I should like to hear read the message or communication to which the Senator referred a moment ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication of the War Department will be read.

The Chief Clerk again read the communication.

Mr. THURMAN. In an amendment, you do not want the word "about" in.

Mr. LOGAN. I will strike that out. I offer the proposition as an amendment taken from the message.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. There should be, in my judgment, a change in the phraseology of the first part of the bill. I am very much in doubt whether we can afford to recognize the fact of war between the United States Government and the Sioux Indians, inasmuch as we have expressly declared that we will no longer treat with them or any other Indians. I therefore suggest that the language be changed so as to read as follows:

Whereas in the conduct of the military operations against the Sioux Indians it is necessary, &c.

Mr. LOGAN. I will accept that amendment. I think it is better than to have all these whereases in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I offer an amendment to insert as a new section the following:

That the President is hereby authorized to accept the services of volunteers from the States of Kansas and Nebraska, and the Territories of Wyoming, Colorado, Dakota, Utah, and Montana, or either of them, to be employed as a part of the Army of the United States against the tribes of hostile Sioux in the Northwest: Provided, That not more than five regiments of cavalry or infantry, or both shall be accepted, and that the term of service shall not extend beyond nine months from the day of enlistment.

Mr. LOGAN. I dislike very much to oppose a proposition of that kind; but it seems to me that there is a disposition to lug these things in on any bill that is brought before the Senate. There is no necessity for adopting such a measure on this bill. There is a bill of that kind before the Military Committee, as I have stated, and referred to the Secretary of War to ascertain if there is any necessity for volunteers. I do not see any necessity of trying to force upon the country any expense unless there is a necessity for it. If there is a necessity and the War Department shall so report, the committee will report the bill back to the Senate; but without that the committee will not. I think myself that with the filling up of the cavalry regiments, from the information we have from General Sheridan, who ought to know, we shall have plenty of troops, and there is no necessity for making a greater war or disturbance than we have. That is the reason I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to say to the Senator from Illinois that all there is in the amendment is simply to empower the President, to place it within his discretion, if the regular Army, after the authority to be here given for its increase shall be, as I am sure it will be, yet too weak to settle this difficulty on the frontier, to accept volunteers. The Senator very properly urges immediate action on the bill; but, sir, the amendment is at least of equal importance, and action upon it should not be longer deferred. If it is important that we should act at all in regard to this matter, we should give the discretion to raise volunteers while we authorize the recruiting for the regular Army. If it should turn out not to be practicable to enlist men for the regular service and the volunteers could be obtained readily, it would certainly be very important to have the authority of law to accept them; and such authority ought certainly to be lodged with the President to be exercised in his discretion. It will be discretion in both instances, in respect of the recruiting of the regulars and accepting volunteers as well.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that.

Mr. PADDOCK. And no greater discretion in the last than the first.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. That is all I have to say about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois whether it would not be desirable in this bill to add an authority for the President, if necessary, to increase by temporary enlistments the infantry arm or some part of it. I have received information from some officers of the Army who are out there, and who are very competent to judge, that the companies are run down in some instances to only twenty or thirty effective men, and that the cheapest possible way to strengthen the infantry, who in a large degree in the Indian country of course must be relied upon, would be to make temporary enlistments for three or six months and put the men right into the companies. I suggest that to my honorable friend.

Mr. LOGAN. As far as I am individually concerned I have no objection to it; but I fear it will embarrass this bill. The same suggestion was made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and I made the same response. My fear is that it would embarrass the passage of this bill. I should be very glad myself to see the infantry increased to the maximum; I think it ought to be done; but from the disposition that has been shown the last two sessions to cut down the force of the Army I do not see but what the bill would be embarrassed by that. Persons might say it would increase the infantry to 30,000, and therefore the bill might be embarrassed in its passage. That is the only objection I have to the suggestion. I should be very glad to see it done, but I do not think it would be advantageous to add it on this bill. I think it would be a mistake, and that is the only reason I have.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I fail to see——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve o'clock has arrived. If there be no objection, the regular order will be postponed and this bill continued under consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to a call for the regular order.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection, if it does not displace the unfinished business of the last preceding day's session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not by common consent if the time is continued.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The answer to the Senator from Illinois I think is that this provision that we propose to make is just as much to the extent it goes an increase of the Army, which has been in my opinion already too much reduced, as the infantry proposition would do. But if the necessity of the public service requires a temporary increase of the effective force of the Army, the question is whether this provision (inasmuch as we have already rejected volunteers) for increasing the infantry, not as a permanent addition to the Army but as a temporary expedient, for three months or six months, if you please, a short time, is not the very thing we ought to do; otherwise is there not danger that we shall find ourselves after the adjournment in the attitude described by the Senator from Nebraska?

If you give the President authority to fill up the infantry regiments as far as is necessary for this Indian difficulty by temporary enlistments for three or six months, not exceeding six, if you please, of men put right into the ranks, then you have got a temporary increase of the Army that expires of its own force; and everybody who is in favor of having strength enough, it appears to me, cannot correctly object to it. I do not see how sensibly it could be objected to if it be, as we all agree probably, the cheapest and probably the most effective and quickest method of strengthening the ranks of the regiments and companies that are now entering that country. If I had the time to draw it, I should certainly think it a duty to propose an amendment, as an additional section, that the President have the same authority by temporary enlistments, for not exceeding six months, to recruit up the infantry companies from whatever they are now to seventy-five or one hundred men. The Senator himself could draw the amendment much better than I could, of course; but I do think it necessary.

Mr. WEST. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has already made a similar proposition to the one made by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] but we all know that it is customary in the legislative branch of the Government to take the estimates and the requirements of the executive department as our guide. The President of the United States and the general commanding our forces in that section ask us now for so many men and they ask for mounted men. Now, is it for the Senate to conclude or even to express an opinion that they will be better off with infantry? No doubt the Senator from Vermont has been communicated with by officers of infantry or persons operating in that region; but the President of the United States and the General of the Army ask us for so many cavalrymen. I do not think we ought to embarrass the proposition with any extraneous matter whatever. If we do, there will be no end to it and it will go on and increase the expense. By acting now promptly and decisively, probably we shall accomplish the purpose much more readily than by listening to the proposals of other parties than the regularly constituted authorities.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator from Louisiana has anticipated me and said better than I could have said just what I desired to present to the Senate. We must rely upon the recommendation of those who are qualified by their education and their experience and by their position to advise us on this subject. They ask us to give them twenty-five hundred additional cavalrymen. That is all. I do not think we ought to go in advance of that, and I think with the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Illinois that if we tack this to the bill we shall embarrass the bill very much; in fact it will give rise to a very serious debate at once. There are members of the Senate who believe that it would be better to have a volunteer force than to increase the infantry regiments, and I am inclined to that opinion myself. I am willing to vote for twenty-five hundred additional cavalrymen, because those best qualified to judge ask for that addition to the force of the Army; but if we are to exercise our own judgment, if we are to turn ourselves into military men and undertake to say what is necessary to be done, every man must judge for himself, and I am strongly inclined to believe that under those circumstances I should vote for the volunteer service instead of increasing the infantry. I hope, therefore, no proposition will be made to add to the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 84) extending the time for the redemption of lands held by the United States under the several acts levying direct taxes, and for other purposes, with an amendment; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 629) for the relief of Jonathan White;

A bill (H. R. No. 2161) for the relief of R. H. Buckner;

A bill (H. R. No. 3927) making an appropriation to defray the expenses of the Joint Select Committee to Investigate Chinese Immigration;

A bill (S. No. 774) to remove the political disabilities of Samuel Jones, of Virginia; and

A bill (S. No. 982) providing for the completion of the Washington Monument.

AMENDMENT OF IMPEACHMENT RULES.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate now take up the resolution that I submitted a long while ago in relation to the rules governing this body when acting as a court of impeachment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont demands the regular order.

Mr. HOWE. What is the regular order?

Mr. CONKLING. Before that demand is made, if it may be so deemed, I should like to make a report from a committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

COUNTERFEITING OF TRADE-MARKS.

Mr. CONKLING. The Committee on the Judiciary have directed me to report back the bill (S. No. 846) to punish the counterfeiting of trade-mark goods and the sale or dealing in of counterfeit trade-mark goods, which after having been passed by the Senate was passed by the House of Representatives with amendments, and to recommend that the Senate non-concur in the amendments, and ask for a conference with the House.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill.

On motion of Mr. CONKLING, it was

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the said bill, and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask leave to make a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 71) to protect persons of foreign birth against forcible constraint or involuntary servitude, to report the same with an amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1006) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use the surplus of certain moneys heretofore appropriated, reported it with an amendment.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to postpone the special order for the purpose of allowing me to have the Senate consider the resolution to which I have referred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move to postpone it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We will first have the regular order before it is postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Legislative and executive business will be suspended. The Senator from Maine moves to postpone——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. HAMLIN. I insist on postponing it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot do that until we have the regular order. The Chair must execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to appeal to both Senators to state that at the close of this day it will not be legal to have any printing at the Congressional Printing Office, the term expiring to-day, and I should like to have an act on that subject passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator can take the responsibility. I have done my duty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont demands the regular order, which is that legislative and executive business be suspended, and that the Senate proceed to the consdieration of the articles of impeachment.

Mr. BRUCE. Will the Senator yield that I may make a report?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator will excuse me; we have another point now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the order be postponed——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I say that motion is not in order.

Mr. HAMLIN. Right there let me ask if the Senator from Vermont on Friday did not move to postpone the court of impeachment when it was not in session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not. I insist on the regular order, and debate is not in order.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am not debating; I am only asking a question of the Chair. I have the impression it was on somebody's motion that this same thing was settled on Friday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has insisted on the regular order, which is an order of the Senate that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the trial of the impeachment at twelve o'clock to-day. The time was postponed by common consent for a few minutes. The Senator from Maine moves to postpone this order, and the Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. For what purpose?

Mr. HAMLIN. For the purpose of taking up the resolution to amend the mode of proceeding as a court.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask the Chair whether the point of order is submitted to the Senate or whether the motion to postpone is submitted. In my judgment it is not in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have made the point of order that the motion is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has made the point of order that this motion is not in order, and the Chair is submitting to the Senate the question whether the motion to postpone the order of the Senate is in order.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not think it is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to ask a question of the Chair. I inquire of the Chair, owing to a remark made by a Senator near me, whether the motion to amend the rules governing the Senate when trying an impeachment is in order in legislative session or in session sitting as a court?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In legislative session, not sitting in trial.

Mr. CONKLING. Then the Senator from Ohio must see that that is an answer to his suggestion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now let us have the question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has demanded the regular order, which is an order of the Senate in legislative session that the Senate proceed at twelve o'clock to-day to the consideration of the articles of impeachment. The Senator from Maine has risen and asked a postponement of this order in legislative session. The Senator from Vermont has made the point of order that the motion is not in order. The Chair will submit the question of order to the Senate. Is the motion of the Senator from Maine in order that this order be postponed?

The question was decided in the negative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has decided adversely. Legislative and executive business will be suspended, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of articles of impeachment exhibited against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War. The Sergeant-at-Arms will make proclamation.

Mr. ANTHONY. Before the order is executed I ask now, if I can, to be allowed to introduce a bill in order to authorize the public printing to be continued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not without unanimous consent. The Senate is now in trial session, and strictly it cannot be considered unless by the unanimous consent of the Senate suspending the business for the purpose. Is there objection to suspending the trial session for this purpose?

Mr. LOGAN. I object.

Mr. SARGENT. This is only a portion of the subject. All appropriations for the Government not already provided for in appropriation bills cease on this day.

Mr. ANTHONY. All except the printing cease to-morrow, I understand.

Mr. SARGENT. They are all the same. Two or three times we have sent these bills to the House, and the House has laid them on the table and sent us their own bills. It seems to me it is about time we waited for them to send us a bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. The House has passed this bill before.

Mr. SARGENT. I object.

Mr. MORTON. Let us go on with the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, I move to postpone——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the order executed and the court opened.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will make proclamation.

IMPEACHMENT OF WILLIAM W. BELKNAP.

The usual proclamation was made by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The House of Representatives will be notified as usual.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap having adjourned then resumed its LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now resume its legislative session.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4055) to continue the public printing;

A bill (H. R. No. 4054) to continue the provisions of an act entitled "An act to continue the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;'" and

A bill (H. R. No. 4053) to further authorize the Commissioner of Indina Affairs to purchase supplies for the Indian Bureau in open market.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, the bill (H. R. No. 4055) to continue the public printing was read twice and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill authorizes the Congressional Printer to continue the work required by law, in advance of appropriations hereafter to be made, until and including the 10th of August, 1876.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TEMPORARY PROVISION FOR EXPENDITURES.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, the bill (H. R. No. 4054) to continue the provisions of an act entitled "An act to continue the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government'" was read twice and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill continues the provisions of the act of July 21, 1876, until and including the 10th of August, 1876.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLIES FOR INDIAN BUREAU.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, the bill (H. R. No. 4053) to further authorize the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to purchase supplies for the Indian Bureau in open market was read twice and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill authorizes the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to purchase in open market, without the usual advertisement, for immediate use of the Indian tribes, such supplies as are required to an extent, not exceeding $150,000, which is appropriated for the purpose, to serve until the regular appropriation bill shall be passed and approved. The sums so expended are to be deducted from the appropriate sums respectively appropriated under the regular appropriation bill, when passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETITION.

Mr. CONOVER presented a petition of citizens of Orange County, Florida, praying the establishment of a mail-route from Wilson's Landing to Lake Eustis, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. DORSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1009) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the repaving of Pennsylvania avenue," approved July 19, 1876; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion of Mr. LOGAN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at six o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 31, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I desire to correct the RECORD. It states that I have asked leave of absence for ten days. I have asked no leave of absence, and I do not know how the statement got into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Probably it refers to the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. JONES.] The correction will be made.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate was ready to proceed with the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap and to receive the managers on the part of the House, and that Senate Chamber was prepared with accommodations for the reception of the House of Representatives.

NAVAL INVESTIGATON.

Several members rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot consent to have the morning hour postponed any longer than is absolutely necessary. The calling of the previous question on Saturday upon the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs gives that subject precedence of course, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] is entitled to the floor for one hour.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Before proceeding with my remarks I will yield to several gentlemen who desire to obtain leave to print.

Mr. THORNBURGH and Mr. HARDENBERGH obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks upon the pending question.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I now yield for a moment to the gentleman from Philadelphia, [Mr. FREEMAN.]

Mr. FREEMAN. I have here a communication from the commandant of the Philadelphia navy-yard, which he has desired me to lay before the House, and which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The communication is as follows:

COMMANDANT'S OFFICE, UNITED STATES NAVY-YARD,
League Island, July 26, 1876.

MY DEAR SIR: As it is just as likely that in the debate on Friday next in the House on the majority and minority reports of the Naval Committee in relation to the dismantling of the navy-yard at Philadelphia I might be assailed by those members of the committee who politically sought material for the next presidential campaign to be used against the Administration which I have supported, I have deemed it proper to furnish you with a copy of my official record. I also call to your attention the within copies of letters from the Chief of Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, and from my predecessor, Commodore Preble, in relation to the manner in which I discharged my duties in removing the stores of the equipment department of which I had charge.

My testimony I presume you have looked over, and which Hon. Mr. WHITTHORNE promised me I might have an opportunity of correcting before it appeared in print; but he excused himself for not giving me this privilege that it had been sent to the Printer's office during his absence without his knowledge. Subsequently, at his request, I forwarded such corrections and omissions in my testimony as I deemed necessary, and which Mr. WHITTHORNE was to have published in what remained to be printed by the Naval Committee of the House.

I discharged my whole duty during the dismantling of the old navy-yard, remaining there after dark, having my office in what had been the watchmen's quarters.

If any insinuations should be made in the course of the debate that I had been derelict in my duty, I trust you will do me the favor to contradict them.

I have written on this subject to Hon. Mr. DANFORD, who I understand is to make the minority report.

Very truly yours,

C. H. WELLS,
Captain United States Navy.

Hon. CHAPMAN FREEMAN, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

EQUIPMENT OFFICE, UNITED STATES STEAMER ANTIETAM,
League Island, December 29, 1875.

SIR: I would respectfully state that I have expended the sum of $4,144.04 in removing the equipment stores, material, &c., from the Philadelphia navy-yard to League Island. This includes loading and unloading, teaming, stowing on board ship, hauling, and mooring ship.

In removing the chains I have expended $903.29 out of an appropriation of $1,128.

The stores, material, &c., of this department are all stowed on board of the Antietam in good condition and free from damage.

Very respectfully, &c.,

C. H. WELLS,
Captain United States Navy, Equipment Officer.

Commodore GEORGE H. PREBLE, United States Navy,
Commandant Navy-yard, League Island.

COMMANDANT'S OFFICE, UNITED STATES NAVY-YARD,
League Island, Pennsylvania, December 30, 1875.

SIR: I forward herewith for the information of the Bureau a copy of a communication from Captain Wells, equipment officer, reporting the amount expended in removing the stores, materials, &c., from the Philadelphia navy-yard to League Island, together with the amount expended in removing the chain to League Island.

Captain Wells is, I think, to be commended for the good order and economical manner in which the material belonging to the Bureau has been transferred.

Very respectfully, &c.,

GEO. HENRY PREBLE,
Commodore, Commandant.

Captain R. W. SHUFELDT, U. S. N.,
Chief of Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting,
Washington, D. C.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF EQUIPMENT AND RECRUITING,
Washington, December 31, 1875.

SIR: The Bureau has received your letter of the 30th instant, No. 64, and is highly gratified to learn that the equipment stores have been so economically and successfully removed to League Island under the supervision of Captain Wells, and that the stores, materials, &c., under cognizance of this Bureau have been stored on board of the Antietam in good condition and free from damage.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. W. SHUFELDT,
Chief of Bureau.

Commodore G. H. PREBLE,
Commandant Navy-Yard, League Island, Pennsylvania.

Captain Clark H. Wells. Born in Pennsylvania. Appointed a midshipman from Pennsylvania September 25, 1840; attached to the North Carolina, 1840; frigate Brandywine and sloop Fairfield, 1840 and 1841; razee Independence, home squadron, 1842 and 1843; sloop Levant, Pacific squadron, 1844 and 1845; Naval School, Annapolis, 1846.

Graduated and became passed midshipman, July 11, 1846. During Mexican war: In brig Somers, blockading Vera Cruz, in 1846; in gunboat Petrel, 1846 and 1847, during which time she joined Tatnall's flotilla in the attack upon the castle of San Juan d'Ulloa and the city of Vera Cruz; took part also in the capture of Tuspan and Tampico. To the East Indies and "around the world," in the sloop Plymouth and brig Dolphin, 1848, 1849, 1850, and 1851; receiving-ship Philadelphia, 1852; store-ship Fredonia, at Valparaiso, 1852, 1853, 1854, and 1855.

Commissioned as lieutenant September 14, 1855; Naval Observatory, Washington, 1856; in 1856 attached to bark Resolute, (originally an English man-of-war abandoned in the Arctic Seas and subsequently recovered and brought to the United States by the American whale-ship George Henry; Congress by joint resolution, dated August 28, 1856, having purchased her from the salvors and ordered her restoration to the British government, she sailed for England November 13, 1856;) in steam-frigate Susquehanna and Waterwitch, home squadron, 1858; steamer Metacomet, Paraguay expedition, 1859.

During the rebellion: Commanded sloop Vandalia, South Atlantic blockading squadron, 1861 and 1862; was executive officer of the steamer Susquehanna in the battle of Port Royal; his vessel, the Susquehanna, struck thirty-six times and badly cut up, was specially mentioned in Admiral DuPont's official report; was sent several times with sailors and marines to re-enforce the Unadillo when much exposed to night attacks in Wright's River, South Carolina; commanded sloop Dale, 1862, and brought her to Philadelphia.

Commissioned as lieutenant-commander July 16, 1862; navy-yard, Philadelphia, 1863; commanded Galena, when rebuilt as wooden gunboat, in West Gulf squadron, 1864; frequently drew the fire of Fort Morgan while running in and shelling blockade-runners under the fort's guns; took part in the Mobile fight; during the passage of the forts the Galena and Oneida, lashed together, brought up the rear and suffered severely from the fire of the forts and Tennessee, a shell from the latter exploding the Oneida's boiler, so that she was towed in by her consort; after Captain Mullany of the Oneida had his arm shot away, opposite the forts, the command of both vessels devolved upon Lieutenant-Commander Wells; the Galena's services were specially mentioned in Admiral Farragut's official report; Commander Wells also received a commendatory letter from the Admiral himself, in which he says:

"That in your case I depart from my usual custom not to give letters for good conduct in time of war where there is an immediate commander first to forward it; but inasmuch as Captain Mullany was wounded and the command of the two vessels (Oneida and Galena) devolved upon you, and were carried through the battle with great gallantry, I take great pleasure in giving my official testimony to your very meritorious conduct in that engagement, and trust that in the future it may be of service to you."

East Gulf squadron, 1864, refittted in Philadelphia and joined Admiral Porter's squadron on the James River; remained there until the close of the war. Commanded the steamer Kansas, and visited nearly all the ports of the South Atlantic station during 1864, 1865, and 1866; received a letter of thanks from the English government and English admiral for going to the assistance of Her Britannic Majesty's gun-boat Gleaner, reported to be dangerously ashore in Maledona Bay; he and his officers and crew also received thanks on this cruise for rescuing an English bark from English Bank, river La Plata.

Commissioned as commander July 25, 1866; navy-yard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, 1868, 1869, and 1870; detailed for the command of the Shenandoah in spring of 1870.

Promoted to captain June 19, 1871, while in command of the United States steamer Shenandoah, European station, and retained in command three years and a half, during which time received a letter of thanks from the Italian government for assistance rendered to the Italian iron-clad Comte Delerdi, which broke from her moorings in a gale of wind in the harbor of Spezia, and came near drifting on the rocks; also received from the French government the decoration of the Legion of Honor, which last Congress authorized him to accept, having been conferred by Mr. Thiers while president of the French Republic; on return home was assigned duty at the Boston navy-yard as executive officer and afterward transferred to the Philadelphia navy-yard as captain and equipment officer, and since last January has been in command of League Island station.

Total sea-service, twenty-two years and six months.
Shore or other duty, seven years and five months.
Unemployed, five years and four months.
Number of years' naval service nearly thirty-six.

WE CAN BE JUST AND YET BE GENEROUS.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. Mr. Speaker, the scene now being enacted in the drama of history in this Representative Hall of the nation is strange and sad. To the citizens of New Jersey it is clothed with intensest interest. From the long list of her distinguished sons the nation has derived the highest and the purest public service. Upon this floor, within that chair, in yonder Senate, upon its floor and within its official chair, on the bench of the Supreme Court, in the Cabinet councils, at foreign courts, on the land and on the sea, wherever genius and talent and gallantry have been conspicuous the sons of New Jersey have found most honorable mention. The standard she has reared for them has been high, for she would have her children to be above suspicion. It is thus the scene to-day is strange; it has no precedent; God grant it may have no renewal, for her heart beats heavily when the honor of her sons is impugned.

We are near the close of a long and laborious session. Eight months of legislation have almost passed, and as the hours wane and the farewells bidden but unspoken are upon the lips, its closing hours must bear witness to the honor or dishonor of a citizen of New Jersey who for seven years past has sat in Cabinet councils as the head of the Naval Department and an adviser of the nation's Chief Executive.

I am a member of the dominant party of this House, and step by step have I advanced with you in the endeavor to purge the abuses which have crept into our Government.

The Secretary of the Navy I have personally known for more than twenty years, when as a young and able lawyer of New Jersey he was gathering no mean laurels in the fields of his profession. His kindness of manner and genial character attached to him many friends, and when he was advanced from the attorney-generalship of my State to the position of a Cabinet officer the heart of New Jersey throbbed gladly at the honor bestowed upon her young and gifted son.

Beyond the courtesies and duties resulting from my official position I have met with him but seldom since my residence here. Thus, Mr. Speaker, you will not believe that I have particular reason to rush to his defense, beyond that higher sentiment which by the report of the majority affects the honor of my State and the reputation of her son, and I know you will pardon something to the spirit of an occasion so grave as this, while I adduce to you my reasons for the position I have taken.

The investigation has been long, tedious, and exhaustive, extending over seven long months. The results of that investigation are undecided. On the one hand the House is asked to instruct its Committee on the Judiciary to ascertain if possible whether articles of impeachment should be found, and on the other it is asked by the passage of the minority resolution to relieve the Secretary from any want of confidence in the management of the Naval Department.

It is not my purpose to discuss either the merits or demerits of these reports; but I have a right to ask, in the name of my State, of which the Secretary of the Navy is a citizen, that, in the absence of specific and distinct charges, the report of the majority of the committee may be recommitted for more positive and conclusive action or that the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to report without delay, that the Secretary may be enabled to make his defense at the bar of the Senate before the close of the present session of Congress. It is a matter in which the honor of New Jersey is concerned; and, arguing from that sense of justice due to the humblest of her citizens, it would be the grossest injustice to permit this resolution of the majority to remain without final action at this session.

Sir, if the Secretary of the Navy has been faithless to his high trust I shall not be his defender, but I ask that prompt and immediate action be taken which shall insure a final and complete settlement of the case at this session.

For my State I ask this act of justice for him. But I ask it without his knowledge, and although his political opponent I have ever been, I would screen no guilt, for to do so would deprive me of New Jersey's confidence and of my own self respect.

Mr. Speaker, I am the more anxious that a prompt and final conclusion may be reached which shall place this matter in the judgment of New Jersey beyond doubt from the fact, somewhat strange, that in the honors of Cabinet position assigned to New Jersey in each case to her sons have been intrusted that of the Navy; Mahlon Dickerson, Samuel L. Southard, and George M. Robeson have held this high position, and a reason for which may be found in the fact that the naval heroes of New Jersey have won for the nation much of its enduring fame. The dying injunction of her Lawrence, "Don't give up the ship," found a gallant response in the commodores she has given to the American Navy, and added Stockton and Kearney and Boggs to the list of her distinguished sons, for whose heroic service immortal honors will attach to them forever.

Sir, in this case I would be generous to an assailed political foe. If injustice has been meted out to him by practically denying to him that trial before his peers to which every citizen is entitled, then I would shield him until such opportunity is afforded. Such are the common instincts of all honorable Jerseymen, and such, I hope, are the better instincts of our poor humanity. I would believe him honest until the contrary is proved, for New Jersey would despise the unfaithful officer; but if proven so, then let his punishment be awarded, and while my State submits with sadness of heart, she will yet rejoice that justice has been done, and she will bury politically from her sight a son on whom she had rested many hopes; for, as she rocked the cradle in which American liberty was nurtured, she will banish from her sanctuary any son of hers upon whose brow "unworthy" has been written by the hand of justice. If you decide to strike, she bids you first to hear. She will believe him innocent until the Senate of his country shall adjudge him guilty. But venture not in the name of that democracy for the maintenance of whose principles we have so long struggled here and for whom we are now appealing to the nation—dare not, I beseech you, render here your indictment against a son of New Jersey unless you are willing to yield him a speedy and effective trial. New Jersey asks but justice and will abide the verdict.

To postpone until next December would be unjust to the nation, if the Secretary is guilty, for no one thus guilty should preside over an important Department of the Government.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Speaker, in concluding the discussion of the report made by the Committee on Naval Affairs, I may be permitted to say, on behalf of the committee and myself, that it is not my purpose to notice any personal reflections that may have been made in this discussion on Saturday last. The time will come, I trust, when without prejudice to the cause I am advocating on this floor at this time I may notice whatever I deem personal in the remarks of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] or the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. KELLEY] or the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.] But, sir, I have on this occasion a higher duty to perform than to notice anything that may be personal to myself or to my committee. That duty is the discussion of a question in which I trust the people of this country feel a deep concern. I hope that in the remarks which I shall submit I may perform the duty assigned me by this House independently of any personal or partisan considerations. If there has been aught of wrong done, aught of fraud committed, aught of criminality practiced, the members of this House of Representatives of the people have a higher duty to perform than to look at the question from a merely partisan stand-point. Very onerous and very laborious duties were imposed upon the Naval Committee by the order of the House and by the resolutions introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] and the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. GOODE.] I have to say in behalf of my committee that we have endeavored as faithfully and impartially as we could to discharge that duty. And I now call the attention of my colleagues on the committee, as well as of the House, to the assertion that I now make, that from the moment this investigation commenced there was not a single member of the committee belonging to any side or any political party who did not possess the same power that the chairman did. I appeal to my colleagues upon the committee to say whether I did not often and at least upon one marked occasion declare to them that they had authority to use the name of the chairman of that committee in summoning any witness that they saw proper to bring before us.

Sir, there has been no attempt to control the action of the minority. There has not been a day or an hour since the investigation opened when any member of the committee, if he saw proper to call the Secretary of the Navy, might not have done so. There has been no effort upon my part to stifle this investigation or give it a direction in one way or another. On the contrary, my announced purpose as declared in that committee was to conduct that investigation in a given manner, and so far as I know that manner encountered no opposition upon the part of my colleagues either of the republican party or the democratic party. It was announced that we would first finish the investigation of the navy-yards; that then we would examine certain subordinates in the Department here; then the heads of Bureaus, and lastly the Secretary of the Navy. This was our announced programme.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, rose.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I cannot be interrupted; I did not interrupt the gentleman when he was speaking.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I understood the gentleman to appeal to me.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. There has not been a day or an hour when any witness, no matter who he was or where he resided, could not have been summoned before that committee.

Gentlemen have inquired on this floor why we did not commence first with the Department here. Why, sir, my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WILLIS,] did, as chairman of one subcommittee, examine the heads of Bureaus here preliminarily almost to any evidence being taken. The heads of Bureaus were first heard; their defense stood at the threshold of this investigation.

It has been said that our examination was secret. Secret from whom? What we did was for the protection of the public service. As chairman of this committee, I have been made painfully conscious of the power which the Secretary holds over officers of the Navy and over laborers and mechanics at the navy-yards. Sir, I have seen stout, hardy men, (mechanics,) with tears running down their cheeks, begging me, for the sake of the bread of their wives and their children, not to expose them to the hazard of examination before that committee. When I have witnessed this, I have felt it to be my duty to the public service to protect if I could the officers of the Navy and the mechanics and laborers of your navy-yards. This has been the prime reason for conducting the examination as we have done.

But, sir, it is said that the Secretary of the Navy had to wait till six or eight weeks ago before being allowed to make his defense. Why, sir, have you forgotten that about the 1st of May I entered this Hall and asked that the testimony taken before that Naval Committee be printed? Have you forgotten the reason for that request? Do you not know that it was with the view of giving the Secretary of the Navy a full opportunity to read that proof? Do you not know that from about the 1st of May it has been in his hands? So far from any injustice being done to the Secretary of the Navy in the course of this investigation, I have to say that if I have done aught of wrong in conducting it, it has been in the advantages which I have given to that officer. After all the testimony was concluded, after everybody had been heard, our committee gave him the opportunity to look over all that proof; his attention was called to it, and for six weeks he has had his day in court, he has had his time to present his testimony and prepare his answer. The committee have given him every advantage. He has exhausted the last day and last hour that he chose to occupy. He has been fully heard.

I am not here now to make any partisan comment upon the results of his answer. I am not here now to criticise the mode in which he and the heads of his Bureaus have made answer. Let them enjoy all their advantages.

I have now to ask you, sir, and the House to go with me for a moment while I hastily refer to the results of this investigation. I desire to make a brief survey of the condition of the Navy; and in order to do so let us turn back for a moment to the expenditures of the Navy from the formation of this Government to June 30, 1875.

I submit the following tables:

The expenditures for the Navy since the formation of the Government to June 30, 1875, were $939,779,925.67.

From 1864 to 1875 the expenditures for the Navy were:

1865	$122,617,434 07
1866	43,285,662 00
1867	31,034,011 04
1868	25,775,502 72
1869	20,000,757 97
1870	21,780,229 87
1871	19,431,027 21
1872	21,249,809 99
1873	23,526,256 79
1874	30,932,587 42
1875	21,497,626 27
Total	381,130,905 35

The expenditures for the Navy for the fourteen years preceding the civil war were:

1848	$9,408,476 02
1849	9,786,705 92
1850	7,904,724 66
1851	8,880,581 38
1852	8,918,842 10
1853	11,067,789 53
1854	10,790,096 32
1855	13,327,005 11
1856	14,074,834 64
1857	12,651,694 61
1858	14,053,264 64
1859	14,690,927 90
1860	11,514,649 83
1861	12,387,156 52
Total	159,456,839 18

The expenditures for the seven years entending from the close of the fiscal year 1868 to June 30, 1875, were as follows:

Bureau.	Fiscal year ending—
	June 30, 1869.	June 30, 1870.	June 30, 1871.	June 30, 1872.	June 30, 1873.	June 30, 1874.	June 30, 1875.	Total.
Secretary's office, (pay Navy, pay Marine Corps, &c.)	$10,049,855 26	$8,130,038 93	$8,690,927 59	$8,885,959 35	$8,684,318 16	$10,868,309 20	$8,830,459 41	$64,140,767 90
Yards and Docks	1,285,370 24	3,022,524 33	2,029,492 18	2,078,892 80	2,477,806 09	2,505,076 62	2,647,758 49	16,046,920 75
Equipment and Recruiting	1,588,901 74	2,584,000 57	1,467,455 80	1,605,668 45	1,837,268 43	1,837,722 12	1,175,547 61	12,096,564 72
Navigation	262,280 88	531,247 60	145,456 55	243,591 96	339,501 65	446,955 31	304,227 35	2,273,261 30
Ordnance	500,133 86	645,112 83	508,255 50	948,116 20	1,153,515 59	935,431 74	509,392 53	5,199,958 25
Construction and Repair	3,338,548 37	3,841,267 81	4,231,370 69	4,269,311 60	4,545,957 54	5,813,519 60	4,334,257 81	30,374,233 42
Steam Engineering	2,004,495 76	733,027 18	157,369 19	1,295,249 93	1,682,099 00	2,779,340 57	1,812,046 25	10,463,627 88
Provisions and Clothing	1,655,07?14	3,270,607 80	1,672,469 73	2,028,115 14	2,767,721 33	1,887,012 30	1,736,794 16	15,017,795 60
Medicine and Surgery	195,654 93	390,045 71	575,163 27	298,112 69	2?2,370 60	?04,687 77	135,633 61	2,181,668 58
Miscellaneous	30,382 04	15,140 96	211,047 23	130,245 13	702,806 99	774,362 35	378,698 39	*2,242,683 09
Aggregate	20,910,698 22	23,163,913 72	19,689,007 73	21,783,263 25	24,473,365 38	28,152,417 58	21,864,815 61	160,037,481 49

* Included in this statement of expenditures is the following amount, carried to the "surplus fund," namely, $270,504.86.

Remember that the expenditures of the Navy since the formation of the Government to the 30th of June, 1875, were $939,779,925; remember that from the year 1864 to the year 1875 the expenses of the Navy were in round numbers $381,000,000; that the expenditures of the Navy for the fourteen years preceding the civil war they were $159,456,000; and that during this Administration, for the period of seven years, the expenditure for and on account of the Navy were in actual money $160,037,481. In other words, Mr. Speaker, in those seven years you have had wasted and expended more money than it cost to run the Navy for the fourteen years preceding the war.

I have now to ask the attention of the House while we are considering the condition of the Navy to the actual expenditures since the year 1868 for and on account of the Navy. The expenditures, according to the table I have given, were $160,000,000. Add the expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, estimated at $20,000,000; add ships and materials bartered and exchanged—the assumed original cost is here estimated at $20,000,000, (and it is largely more than that;) add liabilities, direct liabilities, and they exceed at the present time $5,000,000; add contingent and accruing liabilities, $5,000,000, and you have the actual expenditures made by this present Administration, $210,037,481.49.

I submit the following tabulated statement and estimate:

Expenditures since 1869:
Take table above	$160,037,481 49
Add expenditures for fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, estimated	20,000,000 00
Add ship material bartered and exchanged whose original cost has been assumed at	20,000,000 00
Add liabilities direct, assumed at	5,000,000 00
Add liabilities contingent or maturing	5,000,000 00
Total	210,037,481 49

Now, sir, when this vast amount of money is expended the people who pay the taxes, the people who toil, the people who delve, the people who mine, the people who manufacture call upon us as their representatives to know where and in what direction this vast sum of money has gone.

Let me have your attention now while I address myself to the material condition of the Navy. In March, 1869—I quote now from the Secretary's report made in December, 1869—the number of vessels was 203; see this table. From this table it would appear that there were then in commission 69 vessels.

Navy in March, 1869.—(See Secretary's report, December, 1869.)

Number of vessels, (b and c.)	203
In commission, (a)	69
Guns	1,326
Tonnage	183,442
Number of sailors

(a.) Efficient Navy in March, 1869.—In fleet or returning, 43; special service, 6; receiving-ships, 6; tugs, 14.

(b.) Of these, 151 wooden and 52 iron-clad.

(c.) Of the 134 not in commission 46 were iron-clads, 22 were "on stocks," work being suspended, and 66 were reported in ordinary or unfit for active service in the future.

Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] give me his attention for a moment? He declared before this House on Saturday last that there were 80 vessels in commission in good condition. Will you remember that according to the report of the Secretary of the Navy, in 1869 there were 69? Will you remember further that you have built for the Secretary of the Navy ten vessels, making 79? Will you remember that you have built for him two torpedo-vessels, making 81? Will you remember in addition that the Secretary has unlawfully purchased two more vessels, and then you have more than the number represented by the gentleman from Maine on Saturday last. Add them together, and with an expenditure of over $200,000,000, you do not show the number of vessels in good condition at this time there was according to that report in 1869.

But, sir, I must travel fast. I now ask your attention to an exhibit of the Navy, not from any partisan, not the work of this committee, not the statement of the head of any Bureau, but I quote from the statement of an able, efficient, and intelligent officer of the United States Navy, now on duty in the harbor of Boston, Commodore Nichols. Without reading thats attement, which I shall print, as I will others I quote from in my general remarks, the statement of Commodore Nichols is as follows:

Abstract of strength of the Navy, as shown by Navy Register of January 1, 1876.

First-rates, screw-ships	5
Second-rates, screw-ships	28
Second-rate, paddle-ship	1
Third-rates, screw-ships	27
Third-rates, paddle-ships	3
Fourth-rates, paddle and screw ships	6
Wooden sailing-vessels of all classes	25
Iron-clad vessels	24
Tugs, &c	27
Total	146

The following is believed to be the condition of many of the above:

Colorado, first-rate: in commission as receiving-ship, New York; needing new boilers and general repairs.

Niagara, first-rate: boilers and engines broken up; hull partly broken up; needs to be rebuilt.

Wabash, first-rate: receiving-ship at Boston; engines and boilers condemned. Independent of engines and boilers, will need considerable expense to prepare her for sea.

Connecticut, second-rate: rotten on the stocks; Boston.

Iowa, second-rate: condemned; rotten and broken-backed; Boston.

Antietam, second-rate: used as store-ship at League Island.

Delaware, second-rate: condemned; rotten; made one cruise; New York.

Java, second-rate: on stocks, New York; believed to be rotten.

New York, second-rate: on stocks, New York; believed to be rotten.

Pennsylvania, second-rate: on stocks, Boston; believed rotten.

Susquehanna, second-rate: originally a side-wheel frigate, but for some years being changed to screw; will not be ready for service for a long time.

Lancaster, second-rate: needs extensive repairs; Portsmouth, New Hampshire.

Congress, second-rate: in commission, but reported very rotten.

Severn, second-rate: condemned; New London.

Worcester, second-rate: receiving-ship at Norfolk; said to be unseaworthy.

Ticonderoga, second-rate: said to need extensive repairs; Portsmouth, New Hampshire.

Canandaigua, second-rate: needing repairs; Norfolk, Virginia.

Juniata, third-rate: said to need extensive repairs; Baltimore.

Quinnebang, third-rate: rebuilt; incomplete; Philadelphia.

Galena, third-rate: rebuilt; incomplete; Norfolk, Virginia.

Iroquois, third-rate: needs extensive repairs; Mare Island.

Adams, third-rate: unfinished; Boston.

Enterprise, third-rate: unfinished; Portsmouth, New Hampshire.

Essex, third-rate: unfinished; Boston.

Wachusett, third-rate: needs new boilers and extensive repairs; Boston.

Mohican, third-rate: supposed rebuilding at Mare Island.

Wyoming, third-rate: under repair; Washington.

Narragansett, third-rate: extensive repairs; Mare Island.

Ashuelot and Monocacy, third-rate: iron-hull side-wheel steamers, now in China; considered unsafe for general naval purposes.

Kansas, third-rate: extensive repairs; Portsmouth, New Hampshire.

Nipsic, third-rate: believed rebuilding; Washington.

Nyack, third-rate: extensive repairs; Mare Island.

SAILING-VESSELS.

New Orleans: on the stocks; condition unknown; Sacket's Harbor.

Ohio: rotten and unseaworthy; Boston.

Vermont: unseaworthy, except at great expense; New York.

Independence: unseaworthy; Mare Island.

Macedonian: unseaworthy; Norfolk.

Potomac: unseaworthy; Philadelphia.

Saint Lawrence: unseaworthy; Norfolk.

Constitution: under extensive repairs; Philadelphia.

Cyane: unseaworthy; Mare Island.

Saint Louis: unseaworthy: League Island.

Saratoga: unseaworthy; Annapolis.

Dale: unseaworthy; Annapolis.

Pawnee: unseaworthy; Port Royal, South Carolina.

Relief: unseaworthy; Washington.

IRON-CLADS.

Amphitrite: rebuilding with iron hull; Wilmington, Delaware.

Camanche: rebuilding with iron hull; Mare Island.

Colossus: on stocks; believed rotten; New York.

Massachusetts: on stocks; believed rotten; Portsmouth, New Hampshire.

Miantonomoh: rebuilding with iron hull; Chester, Pennsylvania.

Monadnock: rebuilding with iron hull; Mare Island.

Oregon: on stocks; believed to be rotten; Boston.

Puritan: never completed; League Island.

Terror: rebuilding with iron hull; Philadelphia.

Of the above list of fifty-six vessels, it is believed that, with the exception of the incomplete sloops and the two side-wheel steamers in China, not one could be put into effective condition for war purposes under two months. The majority would take very much longer, and some could not be made available at all. Deducting these fifty-six from the whole number, we have left ninety vessels. Now, from these ninety we must deduct twenty-five tugs, six dispatch, tender, and special-service vessels, three sailing store-ships, and eight serviceable sailing-vessels, leaving as the effective force of the Navy for war purposes forty-eight vessels and two torpedo-boats. Of the eight serviceable sailing-vessels, seven are in commission at present as receiving, gunnery, store, and training vessels. Of the forty-eight effective ships, or supposed to be effective, fifteen are iron-clads for coast and harbor defense, and the remainder distant-cruising ships. The foregoing is not given as strictly accurate, but is believed to be not very far from the truth, and certainly is not a very good showing for a navy on which so much money is supposed to have been spent.

I beg to call the attention of the House now to the deductions by Commodore Nichols in making his exhibit of the Navy. He says of the above list of fifty-six vessels:

It is believed, with the exception of the incomplete sloops and the two side-wheel steamers in China, not one could be put into effective condition for war purposes under two months. The majority would take very much longer, and some could not be made available at all. Deducting those fifty-six from the whole number, we have left ninety vessels. Now, from these ninety we must deduct twenty-five tugs, six dispatch, tender, and special-service vessels, three sailing store-ships, and eight serviceable sailing-vessels, leaving as the effective force of the Navy for war purposes forty-eight vessels and two torpedo-boats.

Leaving, mark it, leaving here in the month of April, in the year of our Lord 1876, leaving as the effective force of the Navy for war purposes forty-eight vessels. Yes, sir; forty-eight vessels only.

Now, sir, turn to the Navy Register and you will find to-day instead of eighty vessels in commission, in good condition and in service, as you would infer from the argument made on Saturday last by the gentleman from Maine, you have only fifty-one vessels. Go to Norfolk, go to Portsmouth, go to Boston, go to New York, go to the navy-yards throughout the country, and you will find that little tugs and fancy launches, dispatch vessels, are numbered as among the effective naval vessels belonging to the service at the present time, and it is in that way the Secretary and his friends swell the number of their effective Navy.

Mr. Speaker, we have not in our committee relied upon insufficient testimony. I take the Admiral of the Navy; I take the Vice-Admiral; I take eleven rear-admirals; I take eight or ten commodores; I take eight or ten captains and the same number of commanders; and all agree that you have an inefficient Navy at the present time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I pause deliberately for a moment. In all this volume of proof there is but one counter-statement to that made by these officers of the Navy. I say one—I say it deliberately—one statement, and that is the statement of Constructor Hanscom alone. To be sure Captain Shufeldt appeared before the committee and gave his opinion of the present condition of the Navy. But when you look at the tables upon which he swears you see they are prepared in the Bureau of Construction and Repair, that they are prepared by Isaiah Hanscom, and it is Isaiah Hanscom's testimony. Upon it alone the Secretary of the Navy relies. Upon it alone Commodore Shufeldt speaks. Upon it alone other gentlemen speak. And I shall have occasion before I am done, if I do justice to the question, to show that Isaiah Hanscom is not a reliable witness.

Now, Mr. Speaker, how has this vast sum of money disappeared? Go with me to the navy-yards for a moment and you will find upon an average that about five thousand men in election years are employed for the purpose of controlling the ballot-box. We can show that annually before the elections this number of men are thrown into the yards and employed for a period covering three months. See the following table:

Tabular statement of the number of employés at the navy-yards below mentioned for the specified months, as requested by the chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, compiled from the rolls on file in the Office of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury.

Months.	Portsmouth.	Boston.	New York.	Philadelphia.	Norfolk.	Mare Island.	Total.
September, 1872	1,318	1,483	1,619	1,552	936	1,172	8,080
October, 1872	1,424	1,666	1,799	1,637	1,126	1,570	9,222
November, 1872	1,096	1,682	1,696	1,000	1,052	1,180	7,706
December, 1872	619	1,221	1,140	551	495	596	4,622
September, 1873	1,213	1,694	2,016	783	1,189	1,071	7,966
October, 1873	1,220	1,770	1,982	928	1,351	1,170	8,421
November, 1873	823	3,118	2,275	1,407	1,153	996	9,772
December, 1873	1,147	3,853	3,277	1,710	1,299	868	12,154
September, 1874	914	1,130	996	410	974	764	5,188
October, 1874	496	1,295	1,221	538	1,195	760	5,505
November, 1874	276	841	903	556	817	705	4,098
December, 1874	260	434	846	356	571	699	3,166
September, 1875	641	846	1,290	752	636	757	4,922
October, 1875	750	878	1,364	908	905	563	5,368
November, 1875	717	959	1,373	896	763	494	5,205
December, 1875	528	1,034	1,236	(*)	549	358	3,704

* Broken up on the 1st of December.

It will be observed that the total average number of employés for the month of October, 1872, pending the presidential election of that year, was 9,222, while for October, 1874, the number was 5,505. The total average in 1875 was 4,388, as is shown by the following table, also from the Fourth Auditor's Office:

Locality.	Construction and Repair.	Steam-Engineering.	Yards and Docks.	Equipment and Recruiting.	Ordnance.	Provisions and Clothing.	Navigation.	Medicine and Surgery.	Contingent Navy.	Total average.
New York	377	116	20	48	44	61	33	31	.....	730
Boston	258	79	202	88	20	12	4	14	.....	677
Norfolk	279	73	200	31	31	8	4	18	.....	644
Mare Island	144	80	299	28	19	8	3	10	.....	591
Washington	151	78	95	72	83	8	7	.....	.....	494
Portsmouth	191	64	115	21	6	3	4	4	1	409
Philadelphia	165	67	76	33	14	12	2	.....	.....	369
League Island	24	5	195	.....	2	.....	.....	.....	.....	226
Pensacola	37	14	124	8	14	5	13	7	.....	222
New London	13	5	8	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	26
Totals	1,630	581	1,334	329	233	117	70	84	1	4,388

NOTE.—On reference to page 384, Boston testimony, it will be seen that there was on 1st November, 1874, 1,245 men employed in construction department alone, indicating that above table first given is most likely a selected date, as there were hundreds employed in other departments. On 1st December thereafter this number was reduced to 135, a discharge of over 1,000 men.

Take, then, this estimate, if you please, and you will find that over $1,000,000 in those years are robbed and taken from the people for the unholy, wicked, and vile purpose of prostituting the ballot-box. Sir, this is done, and I dare charge it upon the record before me, with the knowledge and with the sanction of the Secretary of the Navy.

Again, over $1,000,000 is lost to the people annually from the employment of unskilled laborers. Again, a large sum of money is lost from wastage in the handling of the timber that goes into vessels. Again, a large sum of money is lost in favoritism to contractors. Again, a large sum of money is lost in the excessive prices that are paid to these favorite contractors. Who are they? Some of them I will mention. Brown, Trickey & Jewett, Baker, Goff, and Orville Grant and others. Shall I lay before you, sir, a list of these favored contractors? Yes, sir. I will not read it now, but hereafter submit a table showing it. Let me say that I have taken eleven who have during the period of this administration got from the Navy Department over twelve, nearly thirteen millions of dollars. These few men have obtained this large amount of purchases from the Department:

John Roach, (see Brooklyn, page 376)	$3,830,806
William Mathews, (miscellaneous)	3,000,000
Bureau of Construction alone:*
James Bigler	1,199,046
S. P. Brown and S. P. Brown & Son†	327,725
W. C. N. Swift	1,448,542
G. T. Wallace	162,208
George H. Creed†	474,348
Cramp & Son, (see statement also from Bureau of Steam Engineering)	863,441
G. P. Goff†	56,898
Noblitts, (Philadelphia testimony,) estimated	700,000
Trickey & Jewett, (Kittery, Boston, and Washington,) estimated	800,000
	12,783,014

Now, sir, with such an exhibition of favoritism, with excessive prices paid to these parties, are you at a loss to account for the discontent manifested among the honest manufacturers and honest dealers of the country? They have had no fair opportunity of furnishing their wares or goods in competition with these favored contractors.

I have here an estimate which I submit as a portion of my remarks, an estimate of needless and illegal expenditures, to which I invite the attention of the House. It is far below a correct estimate, but it is at least just to the Department.

Estimate of needless and illegal expenditures.

Employment of laborers, &c., for and during election periods	$3,000,000
Unskilled labor, loss	3,000,000
Wastage in timber and lumber, &c., by reason of unskilled labor	1,000,000
Loss on contracts awarded without legal competition	4,000,000
Loss on purchases made without legal competition	5,000,000
Loss on ships, material, &c	5,000,000
Loss in misdirected and unnecessary work and labor, in mode and manner of payment of officers, in retiring officers, in unnecessary wastage in useless printing bills, &c	8,000,000
Loss in purchase of promiscuous and unnecessary timber and lumber	2,000,000
Total	31,000,000

A sum sufficient to have built fifteen ships of two thousand tons, thirty of one thousand, or sixty of six hundred and fifty.

All these aggregate the vast sum of $31,000,000, a sum sufficient to have built fifteen new ships of two thousand tons each, thirty new ships of one thousand tons, or sixty new ships of six hundred and fifty tons, without interfering with the ordinary and necessary repairs to the vessels in service. And to-day, if the Secretary of the Navy had economically used the funds that were appropriated to him by Congress, you would have had a new navy entirely out of the sums of money appropriated, and more vessels in it than he shows to-day upon the Naval Register.

Mr. Speaker, I have not time now to enumerate the frauds that have been discovered in the opinion of at least a majority of the committee as existing in the naval service. I might call attention to illegal, improper, and fraudulent inspection. I might call attention to the illegal, improper, and fraudulent combinations known and called rings. I might name the parties. I might go on and call the attention of this House to the squandering of the money appropriated for the preservation of the live-oak timber in Florida. I might call attention to the illegal, improper, and fraudulent payments of money to Dayton, Stickney, and others. I might call attention to the illegal, fraudulent, and improper payment of money to brokers intervening between the manufacturers of the country and the Navy Department. I might call attention to the fraudulent reception of coal, &c., rejected, particularly the coal of S. P. Brown. I might and I do pause to call particular attention to the case of Chamberlain. Who is Chamberlain? Will this House believe that for four years the Secretary of the Navy and the head of the Bureau of Construction and Repair paid a salary of $1,000, or a per diem amounting to about $1,000 per annum, to Chamberlain? Who is Chamberlain? Who knows him? Will you believe, gentlemen, that the Secretary of the Navy had put upon the rolls of one of your navy-yards as a mechanic a man whom he now says was a detective, a man he never saw but once, a man that nobody recommended, a man he never saw afterward, a man he cannot find now? Will you believe this was done here by the head of a Bureau who never saw Chamberlain but once, and speaks even of that time doubtfully; that he received for years his drafts for pay and delivered them over, not to Chamberlain, but to a convenient friend.

They, the Secretary and chief of Bureau of Construction, have taken from the public Treasury about four thousand dollars of your money, of the money of your constituents, and when you come to examine into the matter you find that that money has been paid to a newspaper correspondent who once hung about this Capitol, and he is the man who has received it, now dead and no one left to vindicate him. Read the proof in connection with this case and you will find that it is as bad a case of fraud and outrageous robbery as could well be shown.

Now I call your attention again to what I consider a fraudulent thing: the dependent relations of debtor and creditor between contractors and the agents of the Department. I read from the report of the majority a reference to the testimony of William Mathews:

> The dependent relation of creditor and debtor—to speak of it in its mildest form—existing between contractors and the officers, clerks, and employés with whom such contractors are brought in contact in their business with the Departments, your committee regard as a very serious abuse, most corrupting in its tendency and influence. That this abuse exists to a very disgraceful extent in the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing is apparent from the testimony of Mr. Mathews, who testifies as follows, (Miscellaneous, page 281:)
>
> "Question. Now, I ask you if during the last two years the head of the Navy Department has not been your debtor; if the head of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing has not been your debtor; if every paymaster who has been stationed at New York City has not been your debtor; if every clerk in the navy-agent's office in New York City, and every one connected with the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing at the navy-yard has not been your debtor; if the disbursing clerk of the Navy Department here, the principal clerk, and the next clerk to him in the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing; if the quartermaster of the Marine Corps, and the assistant quartermaster, and his clerk, Mr. Marks, have not been your debtors?
>
> "Answer. To a great extent that is all true."

While you remember that, in addition to your Navy Department paying $150,000 as a contribution to a corruption fund to the firm of Cattell & Co., this man has been a dealer for years with the Navy Department during which time from the Secretary of the Navy down to the inspector of clothing at the New York navy-yard every man with whom he has dealt has been his debtor, and that he seems to have acted upon the maxim of the great American Credit Mobilier financier of placing his money where it would do the most good, you can calculate the loss to the people in the amount of gain to these officials. But, sir, I might multiply these cases of fraud and maladministration indefinitely; yet I must forego it and hurry on to more pressing matters.

I call your attention to the violation of law in making open purchases in the administration of the naval service for the last seven years. You are aware that the law compels the Secretary of the Navy in making all contracts and open purchases to advertise when the time will permit and when the public exigencies do not demand otherwise. Sir, we will turn to the exhibit made by the several Bureaus which I herewith submit:

Purchases made since July, 1869, showing the amount by annual contracts and by open purchase, Bureau of Steam Engineering.

Total amount of purchases of all kinds, including freights, royalties, &c.:

During fiscal year 1869–'70	$388,768 97
1870–'71	322,140 60
1871–'72	295,890 21
1872–'73	451,302 17
1873–'74	953,666 93
1874–'75	645,263 10
1875–'76	430,087 08
Total	2,487,119 06

This Bureau has made no "annual contracts" since July 27, 1867.

Statement of purchases by Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, Navy Department, under contracts by bureau and at open purchase during the fiscal years 1873–'74, 1874–'75, and 1875–'76.

	Under contracts.	By bureau.	At open purchase.
1873–'74	$271,120 65	$1,388,141 61	$1,129,519 95
1874–'75	11,924 02	761,376 45	995,903 91
1875–'76		722,138 04	526,516 48
	283,044 67	2,871,656 10	2,642,940 34

Statement of amounts expended under appropriation "ordinance" from January 1, 1869, to date, May 29, 1876.

By open purchase—
During year 1869	$45,800 00
During year 1870	106,806 14
During year 1871	73,253 00
During year 1872	107,237 22
During year 1873	138,703 53
During year 1874	62,803 00
During year 1875	58,780 00
During year 1876	10,335 00
	603,717 89
By contract—
During year 1869	$35,000 00
During year 1870	201,000 00

* See statement from Bureau of Construction.

† In case of these parties, it is to be remarked that they were dealers with other Bureaus, and hence the amounts will be increased.

During year 1871	$97,500 00
During year 1872	37,000 00
During year 1873	513,790 00
During year 1874	74,000 00
	958,290 00

No contracts in 1875 and 1876.

1.—Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting—Statement of purchases since July 1, 1869.

	1869–'70.	1870–'71.	1871–'72.	1872–'73.	1873–'74.	1874–'75.	1875–'76.
1. Purchases by regular contracts	$351,723	$478,190	$442,437	$362,337	$34,793	$47,525	$64,007
2. Purchases by order of Bureau	386,884	316,216	173,737	25,852	93,229	37,092	19,754
3. Open purchases	513,559	190,778	169,167	242,016	484,730	192,856	356,616

Statement of expenditures by the Bureau of Yards and Docks from July 1, 1869, to March 1, 1876.

Under contract	$2,801,061 49
Under open purchase	2,155,969 74
Orders of Bureau	38,869 00

Statement of amounts of purchases of materials by the Bureau of Construction and Repair, Navy Department, for fiscal years commencing 1869–'70.

Fiscal years.	Annual contracts.	Bureau orders.	Open purchases.
1869–'70	$246,809 97	$18,876 38	$817,803 03
1870–'71	761,294 50	47,149 34	230,727 78
1871–'72	273,518 43	25,656 24	246,878 94
1872–'73	340,165 51	330,698 95	487,367 45
1873–'74	409,526 97	462,405 64	414,875 54
1874–'75	156,613 75	441,450 75	229,548 81
1875–'76	221,492 44	580,460 15	136,540 21

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR, July 17, 1876.

The total amount of Bureau orders and open purchases were $19,483,202.34.

This statement shows that at least $19,483,202.34 were paid for purchases not made in open market, and therefore in direct and willful violation of the law. The friends of the Secretary of the Navy cannot show to the country that there has been such a condition in public affairs as to demand or excuse such a departure from the law and that out of less than forty million of purchases over one-half of it should be by open purchases or under Bureau orders. There is not a man in the House who believes that the exigencies of the time demand that violation or departure from the law. Again, the law has been violated in the fact that purchases have not been made of the regular manufacturers or dealers.

But let me ask your attention to the next matter, and I specially invite the attention of those who are in favor of reform to what I now state. Will you turn for a moment to the letters that passed between the head of the Bureau of Clothing and Provisions and the contractor Matthews? Will you mark and note the fact that that officer of the Government made a private sale amounting to over $400,000 without any advertisement, without any competition, and in making that sale asked that it be considered private and confidential? Think of it! Your agent was making a confidential disposition of your property, and on the face of it the very words show that it was reeking with fraud and corruption. Thousands upon thousands of dollars' worth of your property have been sold privately and on the condition that the sale should be considered private and confidential! But, sir, there has been another mode of private sale which has inflicted incalculable injury upon the public service, and that is the mode of selling the property of the Government by barter and exchange. Who gave the Secretary of the Navy any right to barter? Who gave the Secretary of the Navy any right to exchange? Who conferred upon him the discretion to say that it was for the public interest that such barter and exchange should be made? I ask you if the Secretary of the Navy can barter and exchange one piece of the public property what is to prevent him from bartering and exchanging every other piece of property that belongs to the people that comes within his Department? Under this system of barter and exchange millions upon millions of dollars' worth of public property have been sacrificed. Sir, I beg to submit to the House a statement purporting to be an exhibit of this barter and exchange business in the Bureau of Construction and Repairs, and also the Bureau of Steam Engineering. I make that statement a part of my remarks.

Statement showing quantity and kind of material disposed of other than by sale by the Bureau of Construction and Repair, Navy Department, since March 1, 1869, being additional to quantities recovered by the breaking up of Navy vessels, of which a statement in detail has already been furnished.

Quantity and kind.	To whom delivered.	For what purpose.	On what terms.
1,614,335 pounds old iron.	Harlan & Hollingsworth..	To be rerolled.	One pound rerolled best beam and plate for 3 pounds of old iron.
1,092,875 pounds old iron.	William Cramp & Sons ...	....do	Do.
3,395,211 pounds old iron.	T. F. Rowland.....	....do	Do.
10,620,531 pounds old iron.	John Roach.....	....do	Do.
217,129 pounds old iron.	John Noblitt.....	....do	Do.
2,324,936 pounds old iron.	C. E. Pennock & Co	....do	Do.
825,577 pounds old iron.	..... do.....	....do	Old iron to be rerolled at 1¾ cents for new iron, best beam, angle, and plate, at 8 cents, or 4 4-7 pounds of old iron for 1 pound of new.
*4,538,781 pounds old iron.	Seyfert, McManus & Co ..	....do	For deliveries to Seyfert, McManus & Co., up to October 29, 1874, old iron, at 1¾ cents, to be rerolled for new iron, best beam, angle, and plate, at 8 cents—or 4 4-7 pounds of old iron for 1 pound of new. For deliveries to Seyfert, McManus & Co., since October 29, 1874, 1 pound rerolled best beam and plate for 3 pounds of old iron.

* Including iron recovered from Nebraska, broken up.

The above material was disposed of in the manner stated without advertisement.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR, July 5, 1876.

EXHIBIT C.—Material delivered to parties in exchange for other material or work done by Bureau of Steam-Engineering from July 1, 1869.

Character.	Quantity.	Price.	Amount.	To whom disposed of.	Remarks.
Old scrap and boiler iron	252 1840-2240 tons..	$19 per ton..	$4,803 61	Pacific Rolling Mill Company.	New bar and sheet iron was returned for this old material for use in the Mare Island navy-yard.
Do	23 150-2240 tons ...	$39 per ton..	899 61
Old boilers, &c., removed from vessels, Portsmouth yard.	.....	.....	4,400 00		This iron was delivered in the lump from careful estimates made by the engineer officers at the yards, to be rerolled and new iron returned therefor. The new iron was delivered for general purposes in the several navy-yards as required for use.
Old scrap-iron and blooms made from scrap, Boston yard.	.....	.....	17,000 00	C. E. Pennock & Co ..
Old boilers, smoke-stacks, scrap-iron, &c., Brooklyn yard.	.....	.....	13,300 00
Old boilers and scrap, Norfolk yard.	.....	.....	600 00	.....
Old material removed from the Richmond.	.....	.....	4,728 68	I. P. Morris & Co.....	This was old material removed from vessels under repair by these firms, and was disposed of to said firms in part payment for said repairs, following the usual custom of the Bureau in such cases.
Old material removed from the Tallapoosa.	.....	.....	1,654 87	C. W. Booz
Old material removed from the Mayflower.	.....	.....	1,450 00	Wood, Dialogue & Co..
Old wrought scrap-iron	115 1110-2240 tons..	$25 per ton..	3,887 50	C. E. Pennock & Co..	The Bureau required large amounts of first-class boiler-plate for the new compound boilers in progress of construction, and, being also desirous of clearing the navy-yards of a portion of the old scraps and condemned material which has been accumulating for years, arranged with the Pennocks to take of said material such as should be placed at their disposal to reroll, and return new iron as required for use. This was done in order that the account might be the more easily adjusted. The old material was taken at a valuation fully equal to quoted market-rates for such material, and the new iron was furnished at current market-rates.
Old boiler-plate iron	65 2148-2240 tons...	$40 per ton..	2,638 21
Old wrought scrap-iron	301 1147-2240 tons..	$40 per ton..	12,060 48
Old boiler-plate iron	146 365-2240 tons...	$60 per ton..	8,769 77
Old iron tubes, &c	84 1290-2240 tons...	$25 per ton..	2,114 40
Old scrap-iron, miscellaneous..	91 1386-2240 tons...	$25 per ton..	2,290 46

EXHIBIT C.—Material delivered to parties in exchange for other material, &c.—Continued.

Character.	Quantity.	Price.	Amount.	To whom disposed of.	Remarks.
Old engines, &c., from Nipsic:
Cast iron	29 1189-2240 tons	$20 per ton	$500 62	William Wright & Co.	The material disposed of to the first three named firms was all removed from naval vessels; needed very extensive repairs, and was of an obsolete type, and not adapted to any naval purposes except for scrap.
Wrought iron	9 1858-2240 tons	$30 per ton	294 88
Copper	4,870 lbs	15c. per lb	730 50
Composition	40,533 lbs	13c. per lb	5,269 29
Old engines, &c., from Algona and Otsego:
Cast iron	83 1780-2240 tons	$25 per ton	2,094 87	Wm. Cramp & Sons.	A considerable part of that disposed of to Roach was also of the same general character. The unusual machinery, boilers, &c., which were delivered to him were all of an obsolete design, which would not now be used for any sea-going vessel in the naval or merchant service, nor was it adapted for any use except as old material to be broken up and reconverted. The vessels for which it was originally designed were either condemned, broken up, sold, or had never been constructed. This machinery was also more or less incomplete when work was stopped on it, and had been rendered more incomplete by the available parts having been used from time to time in repairing and replacing parts of other machinery. It would have required large outlays of money to complete and erect on board vessel, and would have then been the butt of ridicule for the modern engineering world, a laughing-stock and disgrace to our Navy.
Wrought iron	36 1656-2240 tons	$30 per ton	1,102 18
Brass	37,212 lbs	13c. per lb	4,837 56
Copper	14,539½ lbs	15c. per lb	2,180 92
Lead	3 1267-2240 tons	$25 per ton	89 14
Boilers	96 2184-2240 tons	$25 per ton	2,423 88
Two boilers for Nebraska	75 1870-2240 tons	$40 per ton	3,033 39
Old engines, &c., from Koka and Minnetonka:
Brass	29,336 lbs	13½c. per lb	3,960 36	The Harlin and Hollingsworth Company.
Cast iron	83 2051-2240 tons	$25 per ton	2,097 89
Wrought iron	31 1778-2240 tons	$30 per ton	953 81
Copper	14,332 lbs	14½c. per lb	2,078 14
Boiler-iron	100 1221-2240 tons	$25 per ton	2,513 63
Iron tubes	10 1915-2240 tons	$20 per ton	217 09
Condemned engines, boilers, and miscellaneous:
Composition	611,959 lbs	14c. per lb	85,674 26	John Roach
Copper	63,733 lbs	18c. per lb	11,471 94
Scrap-lead	9,961 lbs	4½c. per lb	448 24
Cast iron	743 663-2240 tons	$25 per ton	18,582 40
Iron tubes	27 1571-2240 tons	$20 per ton	554 03
Boilers and scrap	764 1531-2240 tons	$25 per ton	19,117 08
Wrought scrap	405 1300-2240 tons	$30 per ton	12,167 41
Boilers for Java	147 1714-2240 tons	$40 per ton	5,910 61	William C. Selden for Wm. P. Clyde & Co.	Of an obsolete type, and could not be used on any navalvessels; worthless except for scrap.
Old composition tubes, &c.	476,294 lbs	11c. per lb	52,392 34	American Tube Works.	Chiefly tubes cut from boilers, were more or less filled with scale, and could not have been used again in steam-boilers. Arrangements made to reconvert and return new tubes as required. The new tubes have all been used in steam-boilers of the Navy.
Old copper tubes, &c.	19,899 lbs	16c. per lb	3,183 84
Old rubber hose, packing, valves, &c	54,961 lbs	5c. per lb	2,749 05	Wm. A. Torrey & Co.	Highest bid from several dealers accepted. The goods were of inferior quality, having so far deteriorated from the action of the sulphur contained in them as to have become perfectly worthless for naval purposes. New standard goods were furnished therefore as required for use.
Old cast steel, &c., of unknown and inferior quality.	41 687-2240 tons	$75 per ton	3,098 00	Chrome Steel Co	This was largely composed of small lots from some forty or fifty different manufacturers, some being so old that the manufacturer's name was not known to the trade, (one lot dating back to 1811;) all was of uncertain or of inferior quality, and was delivered to the Chrome Steel Company to remanufacture into best quality tool-steel. To facilitate settlement of accounts, the old steel was taken and the new furnished at current market-rates.
Old scraps, steel	24 1531-2240 tons	$55 per ton	1,357 66
Old vises, broken and obsolete pattern	22,251 lbs	2½c. per lb	556 27	A. V. S. Smith	Disposed of at current market-rates, and proceeds applied to replace with necessary new anvils and vises.
Old anvils, broken and obsolete pattern	11,181 lbs	1½c. per lb	167 71
Composition	68,000 lbs	13½c. per lb	9,010 00	E. H. S. Ashcroft	After arrangements had been made with Mr. Ashcroft to manufacture the boiler-attachments for certain naval vessels, it was thought proper to reduce the cost of such manufacture as far as practicable by furnishing the composition required in their manufacture, which was done; and composition was furnished as per statement, at an estimated market-valuation, and the amount deducted pro rata from the bills for the manufacture of the apparatus.
Old engines, boilers, &c., in Wassuc and Shawnee			10,200 00	John Dole	Highest bid accepted for this old machinery, &c., as it stood in the vessels, the proceeds to apply in part payment of cost of breaking up these vessels.
Total			351,806 58

I call your attention and the attention of my colleagues on the committee, and the attention of this House, and I say that this amount of property bartered and exchanged exceeded in original cost over $10,000,000; mark what I say, that when the head of the Bureau of Construction made the return above quoted he made a false return to the committee; he made a return that was not sustained by the proof; he made a return that being exhibited as the truth would mislead the House. It was a fraud upon this House.

Sir, this is a bold statement I have made; but turn to the New York testimony, turn to the sworn statement of John Roach, and you will find that he says he has purchased 7,390 tons of old iron, and reduce that to pounds you will see that Mr. Hanscom has failed to return nearly 6,000,000 of pounds. Again, according to his statement, William Cramp & Sons received 1,092,875 pounds. Turn to the sworn statement of Mr. Cramp, before the committee at Philadelphia, and you will see that he received over 5,000,000 of pound. This head of the Bureau is deceiving the committee, is deceiving the House, is deceiving the country, when he attempts to make them believe this statement.

But in effecting this barter and exchange business the Secretary of the Navy has gone a wider and yet a further step than that to which I have called the attention of the House. He has assumed that he has a right to destroy vessels, that he has a legal right to do so. Now, I deny it. Show it, if you can, anywhere upon the statute-books. What right and what power has the Secretary of the Navy to destroy a vessel belonging to the Government of the United States? If he can destroy the Algoma he can destroy the Constitution; if he can destroy the Hero he can destroy the Kearsarge; if he can destroy two vessels he can destroy twenty, and if he can destroy twenty vessels then he can destroy your whole Navy. What is there to control him? He has destroyed a number of vessels. I will not take up the time of the House by reading the names, but I will call attention to the list which follows.

To this list of vessels destroyed should be added those rebuilt, to wit:

Nipsic, Galena, Vandalia, Marion, Quinnebaug, Swatara, Monongahela, Terror, Monadnock, Amphitrite, and Miantonomoh.

In addition to this list, I will name other vessels which he claims to have rebuilt.

Now I leave it to the consideration of the House that if the Secretary of the Navy can destroy one vessel may he not destroy ten? And if he can destroy ten vessels may he not destroy them all? Who is to put a curb upon him? Where is to be the check, the line of discretion? He destroys vessels to evade the law, because under the law if he sells he must sell at public sale, and if he sells at public sale the proceeds must go into the Treasury, and if it goes into the public Treasury it cannot come out except by an appropriation by Congress. The list of vessels broken up is as follows:

Statement of vessels broken or being broken up, under orders emanating from the Bureau of Construction and Repair, Navy Department, since July 1, 1869; also of the disposition made, so far as reported, of the materials recovered therefrom; taken from records of the Bureau.

Name of vessel.	When ordered broken up.	Amount and kind of material recovered.	Disposition of material.	To whom.	On what terms.
Illinois	Feb. 15, 1872	Not reported by yard officers	Used in yard	By the Government
Nantasket	Sept. 27, 1872	do	Copper delivered for rerolling; wood used in Portsmouth yard.	Washington yard, by the Government.
Suncook	July 31, 1874	1,424,296 pounds old or scrap iron	Delivered to contractor to be rerolled.	C. E. Pennock & Co	1 pound rerolled, best beam or plate, for 3 pounds old iron.
Nausett	Sept. 24, 1874	1,368,640 pounds old or scrap iron	do	John Roach	Do.
Niobe	Sept. 24, 1874	1,388,800 pounds old or scrap iron	do	do	Do.
Cohoes	Oct. 9, 1874	1,375,360 pounds old or scrap iron	do	do	Do.
Koka	Oct. 2, 1874	1,348,149 pounds old or scrap iron	do	Harlan & Hollingsworth	Do.
Otsego	Oct. 9, 1874	1,301,440 pounds old or scrap iron	do	William Cramp & Sons	Do.
Algoma	Oct. 9, 1874	1,397,760 pounds old or scrap iron	do	do	Do.
Modoc	Oct. 10, 1874	958,720 pounds old or scrap iron	do	John Roach	Do.
Minnetonka	Oct. 12, 1874	948,801 pounds old or scrap iron	do	Harlan & Hollingsworth	Do.
Napa	Nov. 12, 1874	934,080 pounds old or scrap iron	do	John Roach	Do.
Hero* and Piscataqua	Apr. 2, 1875	1,658,144 pounds old or scrap iron	607,579 pounds delivered to contractor to be rerolled.	do	Do.
Nebraska	July 29, 1875	Not reported by yard officers	Iron delivered to contractor to be rerolled.	Seyfert, McManus & Co	1 pound rerolled, best beam or plate, for 4 4-7 pounds old iron.
Shawnee and Wassuc	Sept. 9, 1879	Not reported; work not completed.	Not disposed of

*Work of breaking up this vessel not yet completed.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment? I would like to make a remark.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will yield to the gentleman for two or three minutes.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I find in the report of the minority of this committee, which I have not had such time to study as I ought to have taken, a statement justifying the exchanges of old material for new material. The minority of the committee say that it was for the advantage of the Government. I have patiently and carefully examined the tables appended to the report of the majority containing the terms upon which these exchanges were made so far as iron is concerned. Perhaps I may say to the House that in that particular line of business I suppose I am a competent judge.

On page 90 of the report of the majority I find a contract of exchange of old material for new; to exchange 4,538,781 pounds of old iron with Seyfert, McManus & Co., a most reputable firm in the iron trade. The contract is upon the following terms: The old iron is to be taken at one and three-fourths cents per pound, and the new iron is to be returned at eight cents per pound. Now I say that is a most extravagant, wasteful, and improvident contract. I say that by that contract the Treasury of the United States was robbed, and the taxpayers of this country must make good that robbery.

I say that if the Secretary of the Navy had done his duty and had advertised that exchange to the iron trade of the United States, it could have been made upon a basis of at least two cents per pound better than it was done. The firm with which I was connected at that time would have been only too glad to have been a bidder, and they could have made and furnished all the materials that Seyfert, McManus & Co. furnished. I find there are other contracts very much of the same character. If these gentlemen who signed the minority report had taken the trouble to ask for the testimony or opinion of any reputable gentleman in the iron trade they could have had this information given to them.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] allow me one single minute?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Not now.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire to ask one single question of the gentleman who has just taken his seat.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. You can ask the question, and I will answer it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to a fact which I think will cause him to change his statement.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I have no objection to the gentleman's question and will answer it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman taken into consideration the fact that the iron to be furnished under that contract was to be iron in dimensions, including beam-iron and frame-iron, just such iron as the Government might require?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I was a maker of beam-iron and frame-iron, just such iron as the Government wants. Before I came to Congress, at the very time this contract was being executed, we were supplying beam-iron at four and three-fourths cents per pound, iron cut to dimensions, just as the Government desired to have it cut. And in regard to frame-iron, since 1873 there has been no time when it could not have been bought for four cents a pound, yet under this contract the Government paid eight cents per pound. I say that the old iron was worth one and three-fourths cents per pound in cash in market, the price that was allowed for it.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I have only to add that the testimony taken by your committee will sustain the statement of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] the testimony of two ironmongers in the city of Philadelphia.

I have now to call the attention of the House to another violation of the law by the Secretary of the Navy. Under the law no head of a Department and no head of a Bureau can make a contract unless the same is authorized by law. Now the Secretary of the Navy has purchased the steamer America, now called the Dispatch, and the vessel Rio Bravo, in violation of that law. Again, the repairing or rebuilding of ships under a name, having only the name to go on, is in violation of the law—not alone of that section to which gentlemen have addressed themselves, but in violation of that other section of the law which confines every head of a Department in his expenditure of appropriations to the object for which those appropriations were made. Turn back, if you please, to these appropriations for the Navy Department from 1869 down to the present time and you will find that every appropriation made to the Secretary of the Navy has a specific object and purpose; and under none of those objects or purposes is he authorized to rebuild vessels or to construct new vessels for the Navy. The sections of law to which I call attention, and which I do not propose now to argue, have been deliberately and willfully violated by the Secretary and his subordinates.

I now call the attention of the House to another violation of law, the misuse of appropriations or transfer of funds; and if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is present, I desire to arrest his particular and personal attention. The Secretary of the Navy, when asked before our committee what had become of the appropriation made for the eight sloops of war, whether it had been transferred or expended, made his deliberate and sworn statement which I have here and will submit as a portion of my remarks, and is as follows:

Question. I desire to see if I am correct. I understand from what you state that the appropriation for the eight sloops, made February 10, 1873, did in fact become, so to speak, a common appropriation?

Answer. By this action which I have spoken of.

Q. You say that that matter was reported to Congress?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you name the report or official document where that can be found?

A. Yes; the report of the Secretary of the Navy in the fall of 1873.

Q. Do you mean the regular report?

A. I mean my regular report sent to the President. I do not know that it appears in those specific terms, but it does appear that all our appropriations at that time were expended, and that I say, in so many words, that, if Congress expects us to go on, we must be re-imbursed. I came up before the Appropriations Committee, the facts were stated, and the $4,000,000 was given in response to that application by me, and it was taken into Congress and passed without a dissenting voice.

Q. At the time the $4,000,000 were appropriated, the entire amount appropriated for the eight sloops of war had been expended?

A. I think it had all been expended. Whatever is wrong about that I am willing to assume the responsibility for. I took it before the country, and I am willing to take it now.

* * * * * * *

Q. Construction and repair account had been a borrower from the eight sloops of war in this amount of money?

A. As I explained to you, when Congress came together in 1873, we had, during the Virginius excitement, spent every dollar—I would not say every dollar, but almost every dollar—which was under the control of construction and repair for any purpose in putting the Navy in condition. That fact was reported to Congress and to the Appropriation Committee directly. They appropriated $4,000,000 to the Bureau of Construction and Repair, though not definitely, and of course the Bureau of Construction and Repair remained in debt to the appropriation for the eight sloops of war for the amount of that appropriation which it had expended.

Q. Does it appear in your report that Congress was informed that this specific appropriation for the eight sloops of war had been so expended?

A. I do not know whether it was reported specifically. It was reported in general terms that all the appropriations available for the Department had been expended, and, as I said before, I am willing to take that responsibility, because I know that the expenditures I made then saved the Government and the country from a war and from very large expenditures.

From which it appears that he had expended every available appropriation during the Virginius excitement; that in 1873 he had expended every appropriation at his disposal. Now mark, in that same statement before the committee the Secretary of the Navy swears that he had reported this fact to Congress through the Committee on Appropriations. Upon this point I beg to call attention to the statement made at the time by the then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GARFIELD] when he deliberately stated to the House and the country that there had been no transfer of funds; that there had been no such use of appropriations as the Secretary of the Navy swears to. To these statements of Mr. GARFIELD I now call attention, as follows:

Mr. GARFIELD. In response to the five questions of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD,] which I think can be consolidated into two, I have to say, first, that the gentleman entirely misapprehended me if he understood me to say that the Secretary of the Navy had drawn from one fund to pay expenses properly chargeable to another. I not only did not say that, but, on the contrary, I said that he had used several of the funds in their respective lines of use to meet the emergency, and that those special funds, and those only, were substantially exhausted.

Mr. WOOD. I did not understand the gentleman as saying that the Secretary of the Navy had transferred a fund appropriated for a specific purpose to another purpose. What I understood the gentleman to say was that moneys appropriated for the Navy had been used for purposes not comprehended in the original appropriation.

Mr. GARFIELD. Not only is it the fact that those moneys have not been used for purposes not comprehended in the appropriations, but they have been used strictly and only for the very purposes to which they were appropriated. But it was understood when the appropriations were made that they would carry the Department through its expenditures for such purposes to the end of the fiscal year; and so they would have done but for this extraordinary emergency.

I have here a list of estimates in these several Departments in which we now ask additional appropriations. For example: last year we appropriated $6,000,000 for the pay of the Navy during the fiscal year. Now the Secretary of the Navy has been compelled, under what he considered the pressing emergency, to enlist additional men, and, of course, to increase in that respect the expenditures he would be called upon to meet; and, although he has not used up the whole of that appropriation, yet it is so nearly exhausted that he asks for $300,000 more to eke out the pay of the Navy, so that the new men thus enlisted may be paid.

In the second place, this extraordinary emergency has used up—or partly used up—the contingent fund, amounting to $125,000; and the Secretary asks $20,000 more to re-imburse that fund for the balance of the year. So in regard to the Bureau of Navigation, the appropriation for the fiscal year was $130,000. The Secretary has been compelled to spend more of that appropriation than would ordinarily have been spent in the first half of the fiscal year; and he asks for $20,000 to reimburse that fund.

But the largest and most important portion of these extraordinary expenses has been in supplies, in providing ordnance, in supplying shot and shell for our guns; and under this head he asks for half a million dollars to meet the expense of the ordnance he has purchased. Again, in equipment and recruiting—the clothing of men and the equipment of vessels—the Secretary asks for half a million dollars to supply what has been used for these purposes. There has been no transfer of funds. There has been no drawing on the future.

Again, when that four-million-dollar bill was before the House and under discussion a provision was adopted authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transfer the appropriation. The Senate of the United States struck out that provision. Yet the Secretary of the Navy now swears before us that he used the $4,000,000, not for the specific objects for which that amount was appropriated by that bill, but to pay debts due, not to contractors, but debts due to different Bureaus for funds appropriated to those Bureaus and used previously, which he had used. Here is a deliberate and willful violation of the law. Yet it is said that the Secretary of the Navy did this for the honor of his country. I do not reply, my committee does not reply, to this defense made by the Secretary of the Navy and by his friends on this floor; but I ask the House to listen to the language of one of the great statesmen from Massachusetts, whose life was identified with the republican party and whose memory is now one of its choicest treasures. I allude to Hon. Charles Sumner, whose language I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MR. SUMNER. I am not disposed to discuss the question of these moneys already expended. Probably some time will come when it may be proper to inquire into these expenditures. I regret, myself, that they were made; most sincerely I regret it; but I shall say nothing about them now. The facts are not yet before the country to enable us to discuss them adequately; but I feel it my duty to declare most distinctly that these expenditures ought to stop at this hour and this minute, not a dollar more in that direction. I think it has been an ill-omened expenditure, and at this moment, when our expenditures are so large and our revenue comparatively so small, it is much to be regretted.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. With the view of showing the misuse of appropriations, I beg to add the orders of the chief of the Bureau of Construction, Mr. Hanscom. I also refer to the statement of the chief clerk of the Bureau of Construction, both of which are herewith submitted:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
April 3, 1873.

SIR: You will please commence the building of a steam sloop of war, under appropriation "Construction of eight steam-vessels of war."

The vessel to be built at the yard under your command will be about 640 tons measurement, carrying four (4) IX-in. broadside guns, one (1) XI-in. pivot gun, and one (1) 60-pdr. pivot rifle-gun upon the forecastle deck. Length will be about 185 feet, breadth 35 feet, draught of water above base-line 12 feet.

One hundred and fifty (150) additional men may be employed and work upon the Galena, which may be charged to appropriation "Construction of eight steam-vessels of war," and the amount charged back again after July next. You will please direct the naval constructor to prepare, with dispatch, plans of a vessel of about the above dimensions, having a displacement of 1,240 tons.

Further instructions will be given after the plans have been examined.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

I. HANSCOM,
Chief of Bureau.

Rear-Admiral C. H. DAVIS, U. S. N.,
Commandant Navy-Yard, Norfolk, Virginia.

Says Constructor Easby, (Norfolk, pages 4-6:)

And reference is here made to a schedule of such orders submitted by the commandant of the navy-yard at Brooklyn, (see page 302 of Brooklyn testimony:)

"Balance of deliveries under contracts with Babcock & Co., Geo K. Creed, and J. W. Gaskill & Sons, Hyatt & Spencer, Trickey & Jewett, and Jas. A. Scott, to be received as open purchases, and paid out of appropriation 'Eight steam sloops of war.'"—Letter from Construction and Repair, March 8, 1873.

"Excess of yellow-pine timber delivered by Trickey & Jewett, to be received and charged to appropriation 'Eight steam sloops of war.'"—Construction and Repair, March 14, 1873.

"The building of a new sloop of war of two thousand tons to be commenced, and an additional force of one hundred men to be employed. 'The work on the Swatara may be charged to construction of eight steam-vessels of war, and the amount charged back to that vessel after July next.'—Construction and Repair, April 3, 1873.

"Triplicate bills in favor of W. C. N. Swift, for live-oak timber delivered at yard, amounting to $6,698.45, returned to be canceled, with directions to make a new set, and consider the transaction an open purchase, payable out of appropriation 'Eight steam vessels of war.'"—Construction and Repair, April 9, 1873.

"Triplicate bills in favor of Trickey & Jewett, amounting to $9,463.43 and $12,102.83, respectively, returned for cancellation, with instructions to have new bills made chargeable to appropriation 'Eight steam vessels of war' 'As this timber is intended to be used for the construction of the new sloop of war, its delivery should appear on the face of the bills to have taken place subsequently to March 4, 1873.'"—Construction and Repair, April 9, 1873.

"'Referring to the Bureau's letter of the 8th ultimo, relative to balances of deliveries under contracts to be received as open purchases at contract prices, chargeable to appropriation construction of eight steam vessels of war, you will please order that the bills be made out on open-purchase-bill forms, not mentioning anything of the contract.

"'As the appropriation construction of eight steam-vessels of war was not available till after March 4, 1873, bills payable out of it should not have the date of any of the Bureau's orders given prior to March 4, 1873.'—Construction and Repair, April 17, 1873.

"Reservation bill for $1,652 and 80 per cent. bill for $6,608.06 in favor of A. Ammerman for yellow pine delivered on contract of August, 1872, returned to be made in one bill, open purchase, 'as the appropriation construction of eight steam-vessels of war cannot be used for any debts contracted prior to its passage, i. e., March 4, 1873.'—Construction and Repair, June 11, 1873.

"Bill in favor of Edward Clark for black spruce, returned to be made out on open-purchase bill, payable out of appropriation 'eight steam sloops of war,' with instructions to consider all contracts of August 19 closed. 'Should it be desirable to receive any articles yet due under contracts of that date, they will be taken at contract prices and paid for as above, as open purchases.'—Construction and Repair, July 9, 1873.

"The funds of the Bureau not permitting any more bills for live-oak to be paid prior to 1st of July, no bills for deliveries, if any should be made, will be made prior to that date.—Construction and Repair, April 7, 1874.

"The appropriation 'construction and repair,' 1873-'74, being exhausted, no more bills for payment under it to be approved.—Construction and Repair, April 15, 1874.

"The pay-roll for the month of May must not exceed the sum of $20,000, to be charged to appropriation construction of eight steam sloops of war.—Construction and Repair, April 22, 1874.

"Pay-roll for the month of June to be charged to appropriation 'construction of eight steam sloops of war.' Pay-roll not to exceed $20,000.—Construction and Repair, June 1, 1874.

"Bill in favor of W. N. C. Swift for timber delivered previous to June 29, 1874, (amounting to $120,547.55,) returned for cancellation with instructions to have new bills made out, dated and approved after 1st July, to be paid out of appropriation 'construction and repair,' 1874-'75.—Construction and Repair, June 29, 1874.

"Bills in favor of Creed, $330.30, $2,408.17, and Raymond, $1,704,30, returned for cancellation. New bills to be made, payable out of appropriation construction and repair 1874-'75."—Construction and Repair, October 17, 1875.

Mr. Goldsborough swears:

Question. Have you any knowledge or information, the sources of which are available to this committee, in regard to the fact, if it be one, whether any liabilities of former years have been paid out of any current year's appropriation?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you the knowledge that such is the fact?

A. Such is the fact. You mean to say that bills accruing during one fiscal year for purchases made, for instance, have been paid out of the appropriation for the subsequent fiscal year. Certainly that has been the case.

Q. During what years has that been the case?

A. During the previous fiscal years 1873-'74 and 1874-'75.

Q. To what extent has that been done?

A. I am hardly able to say; it is a matter of official record. I would certainly say to a few hundred thousand dollars, but I cannot say more distinctly than that.

These documents show that it had been a practice in this Department to misuse and transfer the appropriations made to the Department.

Sir, it is in proof before this committee that year after year in the Bureau of Construction and Repair they used for one year the appropriations that had been made for another. And in order to do this, either withhold bills or destroy bills already made, a most fraudulent and vicious system of book-keeping, under which any amount of fraud may be perpetrated on the public service.

Mr. Speaker, I am admonished that the time allotted to me is about expiring; and I desire to call attention to a statement which I will ask the liberty of printing with my remarks, showing that, taking into consideration existing and maturing or current liabilities, the Department is in debt nearly $7,000,000, and which is as follows.

By the Book of Estimates, page 244, it is shown that out of an appropriation of $18,462,546.90 for the year 1876 there were expended in the first quarter $7,964,933.67; leaving a balance for the three remaining quarters of $10,447,613.33; see page 586 appendix.

Appropriation for year 1876	$18,533,801 81
In the two first quarters expended	14,281,451 71
Balance for two remaining quarters	4,252,350 10
Appropriations for 1876:
$6,250,000—Balance remaining 1st January, 1876, to pay of Navy was	$933,831 50
1,279,000—Balance remaining 1st January, 1876, to Provisions and Clothing was	287,043 85
3,300,000—Balance remaining 1st January, 1876, to Construction and Repairs was	104,653 18
1,800,000—Balance remaining 1st January, 1876, to Steam Engineering was	210,932 69
12,629,000	1,536,461 22

It will be seen from the following table, taken from the Book of Estimates, submitted to the present session, and a statement from the Treasury Department, (Appendix, pages 5 and 6,) that nearly one-half of the appropriations for the year 1876 was consumed in the first quarter, and not one-fourth remained for the last two quarters; and, further, that out of the appropriations for the year 1876 to four of the Bureaus for $12,629,000, there remained but $1,536,461.22.

Provisions and Clothing	$334,812 78
Steam Engineering	297,959 49
Navigation	7,000 00
Construction and Repair	492,366 20
Total	1,132,138 47
Add Goldsborough, page 499	1,071,000 00
Cutter, Russell, Swift et al., amount due clothing fund	1,250,000 00
Contingent and maturing. (See Steam Engineering, page 540, Roach's statement.) Neafie & Levy; Cramp & Son; Wood, Dialogue & Co.; Roland et al.; Grant, Savage & Brother	2,500,000 00
Total	5,953,138 47

If you add to these the contingent liabilities, it will be found that the statement made by the majority of the committee, confirmed as it is by the authority of the Book of Estimates, is not far from correct.

Now, sir, let me call attention to the condition of the clothing fund. I am here to make good, if I had time, the statement made by the majority of the committee in their report. But, sir, is it necessary? I think not in view of all the proof that has been brought forward on this subject. I will add to my statement, in addition to the figures which I shall give, the sworn testimony of the Secretary of the Navy himself. I invite attention to the following table:

Clothing fund.

DR.

To balance 1st January, 1871	$518,333 39
To appropriations since that time	490,000 00
To estimated increase from 10 per cent. charged since that time	60,000 00
To amount of stock on hand, 1869	2,207,435 64
	3,275,769 03

CR.

By stock on hand at present time	1,694,538 97
By balance of cash as appears from clothing account in Bureau	13 88
By amount claimed to be due from pay of Navy, (see statement of this on page 160, Appendix to Miscellaneous)	311,592 34
	2,006,145 19
Making a balance of	1,269,623 84

Statement showing amounts due and credited from appropriation "pay of the Navy" to the "clothing fund," United States Navy, from January 1, 1869, to December 31, 1875, on account of clothing issued to officers, crew, and marines.

Appropriation "pay of the Navy" in account with the "clothing fund," United States Navy, from January 1, 1869, to December 31, 1875.

DR.			CR.
1869.			1869.
May 20	To clothing so far as returns have been received	$152,928 70	June 11	By transfer	$152,928 70
September 2	do	145,751 48	September 11	do	145,751 48
1870.			1870.
March 22	do	159,569 02	April 6	do	159,569 02
August 29	do	251,614 17	September 10	do	251,614 17
1871.			1871.
March 15	do	120,037 89	May 11	do	120,037 89
August 8	do	131,521 55	December 6	do	131,521 55
1872.			1873.
September 9	do	306,796 24	June 3	do	72,156 58
1873.			September 4	do	454,121 10
January 1	do	219,481 44	December 22	do	209,577 13
September 30	To clothing 1st, 2d, and 3d quarters, 1873	197,445 42	1874.
December 31	To clothing 4th quarter, 1873	209,546 18	June 20	do	209,546 18
1874.			September 4	do	98,812 92
March 31	To clothing 1st quarter, 1874	98,812 92	October 16	do	100,000 00
September 30	To clothing 2d and 3d quarters, 1874	150,965 35	1875.
December 31	To clothing 4th quarter, 1874	80,738 95	October 25	do	110,221 36
1875.
March 31	To clothing 1st quarter, 1875	73,614 19
June 30	To clothing 2d quarter, 1875	75,194 63
September 30	To clothing 3d quarter 1875	73,952 73
December 31	To clothing 4th quarter, 1875	79,449 56	December 31	Balance due clothing	311,562 34
		2,527,420 42			2,527,420 42

My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] submitted a statement on Saturday last which, if it is to be accepted as correct, will contradict the Secretary of the Navy, for the Secretary of the Navy himself swears that that fund is about a million dollars behindhand. I do not want, and I know he does not, nor do I believe Mr. Watmough, head of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, wants to convict the Secretary of the Navy of misrepresentation. I certainly do not, and therefore rest upon the statement as it is made in the report of the majority of the committee.

If I had time I should like to call attention to frauds in the Philadelphia navy-yard, to frauds in the construction of the eight sloops of war, to frauds in old claims, to frauds in furnishing materials, to the Wiard extravagance, to frauds in the foreign accounts of the Navy; but this has been done by my colleague of the committee from Alabama, [Mr. LEWIS.]

I come now to refer to what, out of this immense mass of fraud, out of this mass of favoritism, out of this immense disregard of law, has been termed "Cattellism."

What is Cattellism? In addition to what my colleague, [Mr. MILLS,] has said, permit me to add that we will suppose my friend on my left from Ohio is made Secretary of the Navy, that from the village from which he hails in the State of Ohio he brings along with him a friend, and that friend has a brother out there; that we find after he is made Secretary of the Navy this friend of his sleeps with him, beds with him, runs with him, holds property for him, gets positions, &c., is his intimate and confidential friend, and that the brother of that friend is taking advantage of his position by reaping a large fortune because of his influence with the Secretary of the Navy. Suppose further that brother of his intimate and confidential friends builds a house for the Secretary of the Navy and loans him large sums of money, and the Secretary keeps in his debt year after year, that the intimate friend's brother collects large amounts from naval contractors to aid the Secretary of the Navy in his political aspirations, what would you say? You may believe the present Secretary of the Navy is a good fellow, that he does not mean anything by it; but what would you say of my innocent friend from Ohio if he were thus surrounded? [Laughter.] That is "Cattellism."

No, Mr. Speaker, I have not time to present "Cattellism" in all its details. The mind irresistibly comes to the conclusion that regard for the public service demands at least no such thing should exist in the public service anywhere.

Now, sir, I am asked "why do you not carry your recommendation out boldly; why not march boldly up to the action which is necessary; why not have the courage to impeach the Secretary at once?" Will this House remember that just at this moment the high court of impeachment is in session, and that high court of impeachment is deliberating upon the very question suggested by this committee? Will they remember that the advocates of Mr. Belknap have submitted to that court the question whether if this House presents a violation of law which is not an indictable offense by statute or common law, it is not a matter of impeachment? Will this House forget that when Andrew Johnson was about to be impeached one of the ablest judiciary committees this House ever had divided on this very question? This House will not fail to remember that the last impeachment before the House of Lords in England was the impeachment of a naval officer, and that that House of Lords, even after the question was presented to them, certified that very question to the learned judges of England. Then in view of all the facts, in view of the circumstances by which we are surrounded, in view of the short time left to this session, we have after careful deliberation believed it was just, believed it was fair, believed it was right, to have this question, if you please, taken out of party excitement, away from party feeling, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of this House. Let them weigh the question, aside from party feeling, without party prejudice, looking only to the public interest, to the public welfare, and the general good.

On the question, Mr. Speaker, as to who is responsible for all these frauds, abuses, &c., I have not on this occasion attempted to quote the authorities and proof, but I shall beg leave, by permission of the House, to submit the proofs as a portion of my remarks, and I refer gentlemen now to pages 153 to 159 of the report of the committee. It will there be seen that the proofs sustain the allegations made by the committee. It is there made clearly apparent that the allegation of the Secretary of the Navy and his friends that he never interfered in regard to contracts, that he never interfered in reference to details of his bureaus, is not sustained by the record of the proof as taken before the committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I protest again that I am not, as far as I can know or judge of myself, moved by any partisan feeling. God knows I have seen enough and known enough of the hardships of different forms of government to desire for myself and for my children the blessing of an honest and a free government. Sir, I have no memories of the past to imbitter me upon this occasion. I have nothing to rake from its ashes. I know that under God's providence this is to be the home of my children and my children's children. For them I have to invoke the blessings of a good government; and even if animated by no other motive I should endeavor and labor for their sakes to transmit to them those blessings unimpaired. Sir, may our Government be in all of its blessings bountiful, in all of its burdens light. May such be its character that when our old men shall come to die they will be cheered by the fact that they leave it as an inheritance to their children; and when our young men come to die they will breathe the prayer that the years of which they are prematurely deprived may be added to the life of the Republic.

I shall join with any man or with any party in perpetuating the blessings of a free, liberal, republican form of government. And in order to do that we must strike its enemies wherever we can see them. And the most dangerous enemy to a republican form of government is he who would sap or undermine its foundations by corruption.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having finished my remarks, I ask of the House the execution of the order made upon Saturday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to substitute the resolution reported by the minority of the committee for the resolution reported by the majority. The Clerk will first read the resolution of the majority and then that of the minority.

The Clerk read the resolution reported by the majority, as follows:

Resolved, That these legal questions, together with all the proof taken by this committee, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with power to hear additional testimony and argument if they see fit, to examine and report whether such violations of the law as are referred to herein constitute and are impeachable offenses under the Constitution; and, if so, then they shall report articles of impeachment against George M. Robeson, Secretary of the Navy. But if they shall find that under existing laws such acts and doings of the said Secretary are not impeachable or otherwise punishable, then they shall report what additional legislation, in their opinion, is necessary to make said laws sufficiently punitive to protect the public service.

The Clerk also read the resolution reported by the minority of the committee as follows:

Resolved, That in this investigation no fraud, corruption, or willful violation of the law has been shown or appears to have been committed by Hon. George M. Robeson while in discharge of the duties of Secretary of the Navy; and we find no reason to censure or find fault with his conduct in the administration of the Navy Department.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether under the rules of the House requiring investigating committees to report at this session the report from the Judiciary Committee would be required to be made at this session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot say. The Chair scarcely regards that as a parliamentary inquiry. He cannot answer what the Judiciary Committee will do.

The Chair is informed by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HARRIS,] who appears to be at the head of the minority report, that he did not propose the resolution which has been read as a substitute for the majority report. The Chair understood from the form in which it seemed to come to the desk that it was intended as a substitute. It came in the form always adopted when a minority of a committee report a resolution as a substitute for a resolution reported by the majority. The Chair also understands that on Saturday the main question was ordered on the resolution of the committee and the substitute. The Chair will state, however, that by unanimous consent the gentleman from Massachusetts may withdraw his substitute, and the vote will then be simply on the resolution of the majority. That is a matter for the House. Is there objection to the gentleman from Massachusetts withdrawing the resolution reported by the minority?

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, and Mr. LEWIS objected.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Will the Chair allow me a single moment? I do not understand that it is desired to withdraw the resolution of the minority. It is a part of the minority report. But on consultation among ourselves we deemed it the best way to allow the House to vote directly upon the majority report. We have not, therefore, moved the resolution which forms part of the minority report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That statement should have been made to the Chair before this time. It is now too late.

The Chair desires to call the attention of members to a portion of Rule 65, which the Clerk will read. He asks members particularly to pay attention to this rule because he proposes to enforce it; and it is exceedingly disagreeable to enforce it against gentleman who do not suppose they are violating a rule of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

No member or other person shall visit or remain by the Clerk's table while the ayes and noes are calling or ballots are counting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to state that this rule applies not merely to members, but to all persons on the floor of the House who are not immediately connected with the count.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask a question of the Chair. Am I to understand that the previous question was demanded by the chairman of the committee upon the resolution and substitute?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understood.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is that recorded in the Journal?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ascertain. That was his own understanding.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If it is not in the Journal, if the House has not made that explicit order, I do not think that the point can be insisted on now that something shall be voted on which the minority do not ask to be voted on. I should like to have the entry in the Journal as to that read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the journal clerk that the entry in the Journal covers the substitute as well as the resolution of the committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In terms?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair so understands it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the Chair have the entry in the Journal read?

Mr. HALE. I do not think it a material matter whether we take two votes or one only. But I think it a pertinent question to ask: If the resolution of the minority was not moved during the debate by any member of the minority, or by any other person, how at the time when the previous question was asked and sustained was that resolution before the House? What can there be in the Journal that indicates that this, which is simply a part of the views of the minority, not even a report and not sought to be voted on, is before the House now? For instance, supposing that the chairman of the committee had made up his mind that he would not allow the substitute to be offered and had declined when a member of the minority desired to move a substitute to admit it, he as having charge of the report of the committee would have had control of that. Now I do not believe from my recollection of the course of debate and the proceedings of the House that the Journal shows that the minority resolution was ever before the House. But as I said it is not a very material matter; it will merely take two votes instead of one.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Journal will show that, and that is why I want it read.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I desire to say to the Speaker that in bringing this entire matter before the House it was a matter of agreement between the committee with the desire and purpose that the views of the committee should be fairly heard and both propositions fairly entertained and fairly voted on. I say now to the House and to the Speaker that I desire especially a vote on the proposition coming from the minority of the committee, and those gentlemen of the minority will see why I desire it after they have charged more or less partisanship in their proceedings. I confess that I am surprised to see gentlemen endeavoring to avoid a direct vote upon the proposition they have themselves presented.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] before he takes his seat whether the minority report was not, together with the resolution of the majority, made a special order at the special instance of the gentleman who reported it?

Mr. HALE. It was stated at the time that it was not parliamentarily a report; it was not properly a report; it was simply one portion of the views of the minority. Now how it is that what was stated to be simply an expression of the views of the minority shall be transmuted into a proposition to be voted on by the House I do not know.

Mr. COX. The gentleman does not answer my question. Was not the minority resolution made a special order as well as that of the majority?

Mr. HALE. As the views of the minority, certainly.

Mr. COX. That is the way in which the minority reports always in election cases.

Mr. BANKS. I would like to ask a question. If the minority resolution has not been moved by some member of the House, it could not be embraced in the special order. My understanding is that on the subject of the investigation of the action of the Navy Department, the Committee on Naval Affairs had the right to decide upon it. If the minority of the committee disagreed with the majority they had no right to present their views in this report or to represent a resolution except with the consent of the House.

Mr. COX. There was no objection at the time.

Mr. BANKS. The minority of the committee are always allowed, as a matter of course, to present their views and print their report, while the chairman of the committee, acting for the majority, has a right to make the report of the committee. The only parliamentary right that exists under the rules of the House is that if the minority wishes to propose a counter-judgment they must offer it in the shape of a resolution, and it must be stated by the Speaker as an amendment for the majority resolution. Now, I do not understand that that has been done in this case. The House is not bound to vote on the proposition embraced in the minority report, which has never been presented to the House formally by any member of the committee or any member of the House, and we have a right to object to being called upon to vote on a proposition which has never been properly submitted to the House.

Mr. COX. The Journal shows that the minority report was offered as a substitute. Will the gentleman tell us what he really wants?

Mr. BANKS. I have not the slightest desire to tell the gentleman from New York what I want. I am speaking of what I do not want. I do not want to vote on a resolution which has never been presented in a formal manner to the House.

Mr. COX. Then there is a difference of opinion between the gentleman and myself upon that point.

Mr. BANKS. I do not impugn the record; I merely state what is my right as a member of the House.

Mr. COX. I do not dispute the gentleman's right to do it.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I understand that this substitute offered by the minority is now in the possession of the House, and I ask the Chair if it can be withdrawn except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BANKS. The Journal will show what the position of the question is upon that point, and I call for the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Journal will be read.

Mr. BANKS. What is the date of it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. July 26, 1876.

The Clerk read from the Journal as follows:

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to, to wit:

Ordered, That the report of the majority and views of the minority from the House Naval Committee giving the results of their investigations, shall be presented to-morrow; both shall be printed; and Friday, after the reading of the Journal, is hereby assigned for the consideration of the same to the exclusion of all other business; six hours shall be given to debate, to be equally divided.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote last taken, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS. It will be perceived by the Speaker and by the House that the Journal, as just read, speaks of the conclusions of the majority and the "views" of the minority.

Mr. COX. And the House orders the consideration of both.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read the action of the House, as journalized, upon the ordering of the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

After debate,

Mr. WHITTHORNE demanded the previous question on the adoption of the resolutions accompanying the said report; which was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote last taken, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BANKS. The record as read by the Clerk does not show any motion by any member of the House to substitute the resolution accompanying the views of the minority. The only allusion to the minority is to the "views" of the minority; and that is a proper reference. The Clerk has made up the Journal correctly. The minority had views upon this subject, and they had a right to an expression of those views; and the House gave to that minority the right to present their views and have them printed. But there is nothing in the record to show that any member of this House has moved the resolution accompanying the views of the minority; and for one I object to voting on a resolution that has not been moved.

Mr. RANDALL. The previous question is called on the "resolutions." There is but one resolution accompanying each report, and the plural being used, that of course embraces both resolutions.

Mr. BANKS. No, sir; the Journal says the previous question was "on the resolutions accompanying the said report;" and there was but one report, that of the majority of the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. When the word "resolutions" is used, that means both resolutions.

Mr. BANKS. The minority has made no report of a resolution which is upon the record of the House. The Journal, as read, shows no resolution presented by them, or covered by the previous question, or included in the order made by the House on the 25th of July.

Mr. RANDALL. The order for the previous question contains the word "resolutions;" there is a majority resolution and a minority resolution——

Mr. BANKS. There is no minority resolution on the record.

Mr. RANDALL. And therefore they are both embraced in the terms of the order for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is prepared to rule upon the question. The Chair can see no difference between this and every other case of a majority report accompanied with the views of a minority, and each proposing a resolution or resolutions. In this case the majority of the committee make their report, and the minority present their views in accordance with express permission of the House, as appears from the Journal. The Chair cannot see the difference between this and a contested-election case, for instance, where, without any more formal presentation of the resolution than sending it to the Clerk's desk to be printed in connection with the report, the question is always taken upon substituting the resolution of the minority for the resolution of the majority. The Chair does not see that the rule is at all different in this instance, and therefore holds that, the previous question having been ordered, it covers the resolution of the majority and the substitute of the minority, and the substitute accordingly cannot be withdrawn at this time except by unanimous consent. The question before the House, therefore is, Will the House agree to the substitute proposed by the minority for the resolution presented by the majority of the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. LEWIS. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The resolution accompanying the views of the minority was as follows:

Resolved, That in this investigation no fraud, corruption, or willful violation of the law has been shown or appears to have been committed by Hon. George M. Robeson while in the discharge of the duties of Secretary of the Navy; and we find no reason to censure or find fault with his conduct in the administration of the Navy Department.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 54, nays 120, not voting 111; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, William H. Baker, Ballou, William R. Brown, Cannon, Caswell, Conger, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Evans, Freeman, Frye, Hale, Benjamin W. Harris, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Hoge, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Joyce, Kelley, Kimball, Lapham, Leavenworth, Lynch, MacDougall, McDill, Nash, Norton, O'Neill, Page, Plaisted, Pratt, Rainey, Robinson, Rusk, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Washington Townsend, Van Vorhes, Wait, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whiting, James Wilson, and Woodburn—54.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Blackburn, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Cate, Caulfield, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Cook, Cox, Culberson, Cutler, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Durand, Durham, Eden, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Gause, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartzell, Haymond, Henkle, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Hurd, Thomas L. Jones, Franklin Landers, Lane, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynde, Maish, McMahon, Meade, Metcalfe, Mills, Morgan, Morrison, Neal, New, O'Brien, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, Pierce, Poppleton, Potter, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Miles Ross, Savage, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, Springer, Stevenson, Terry, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, Waddell, Gilbert C. Walker, Walsh, Warren, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, Wike, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, and Young—120.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, John H. Baker, Banks, Bass, Bell, Blair, Bliss, Blount, Bradley, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Chapin, Collins, Cowan, Crapo, Crounse, Denison, Douglas, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Fort, Foster, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Henry R. Harris, Hartridge, Hatcher, Hathorn, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoskins, Hunter, Hunton, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Kasson, Kehr, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lawrence, Lord, Mackey, Magoon, McCrary, McFarland, Miller, Milliken, Money, Monroe, Mutchler, Odell, Oliver, Packer, William A. Phillips, Piper, Platt, Powell, Purman, James B. Reilly, Roberts, Sobieski Ross, Sampson, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Stenger, Stone, Stowell, Swann, Tarbox, Teese, Thomas, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Tufts, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Ward, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Wigginton, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Yeates—111.

So the substitute was not adopted.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. MILLIKEN. On this question I am paired with Mr. GARFIELD. If present, he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. HARTRIDGE. On this question I am paired with Mr. HOSKINS, of New York. If present, he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. HARDENBERGH. My colleague, Mr. ROBERT HAMILTON, is absent on account of sickness, and my colleague, Mr. TEESE, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. COOK. My colleague, Mr. SMITH, of Georgia, is absent because of sickness in his family.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. On this question I am paired with Mr. ELY, of New York.

Mr. BLAIR. On this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire, who is absent by leave of the House. If present he would "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. FOSTER. On this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WALLING, who if present I suppose would vote "no;" I would vote "ay."

Mr. WIGGINTON. I am paired on this question with Mr. WALLACE, of South Carolina. If present he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. HURD. The gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. KNOTT, is absent on account of illness.

Mr. COCHRANE. My colleague, Mr. STENGER, is absent by leave of the House. If present he would vote "no." My colleague, Mr. ROSS, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. NEAL. My colleagues, Mr. WOODWORTH and Mr. SOUTHARD, are paired on this question. If present Mr. WOODWORTH would vote "ay," and Mr. SOUTHARD "no."

Mr. SAVAGE. My colleague, Mr. COWAN, is absent on account of injuries received from a runaway team.

Mr. LORD. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HUNTER.] If he were present he would vote "ay," and I should vote "no."

Mr. MUTCHLER. On Saturday last I paired with my colleague, Mr. PACKER. As he is not now in the House, it may be that he regards the pair as still binding; and I therefore decline to vote.

Mr. CASON. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. FULLER, on all political questions, and this seems to be of that class.

Mr. DUNNELL. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. STONE, who if present would vote in the negative, while I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. I desire to announce that I am paired upon this question with my colleague, Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS, who has been necessarily called away from the House.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The question then recurred upon the adoption of the following resolution, reported by the majority of the committee:

Resolved, That these legal questions, together with all the proof taken by this committee, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with power to hear additional testimony and argument if they see fit, to examine and report whether such violations of the law as are referred to herein constitute and are impeachable offenses under the Constitution; and, if so, then they shall report articles of impeachment against George M. Robeson, Secretary of the Navy. But if they shall find that under existing laws such acts and doings of the said Secretary are not impeachable, or otherwise punishable, then they shall report what additional legislation, in their opinion, is necessary to make said laws sufficiently punitive to protect the public service.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 74, not voting 102; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Blackburn, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Cook, Cox, Culberson, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Durand, Durham, Eden, Egbert, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Gause, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Andrew H. Hamilton, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartzell, Henkle, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Hurd, Thomas L. Jones, Kehr, Knott, Lane, Lewis, Luttrell, Mackey, Maish, McMahon, Metcalfe, Mills, Morgan, Morrison, Neal, New, O'Brien, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, Popleton, Potter, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Miles Ross, Savage, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, Springer, Stevenson, Terry, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, Gilbert C. Walker, Walsh, Warren, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, Wike, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, and Benjamin Wilson—109.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Cannon, Caswell, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Danford, Davy, Dobbins, Eames, Evans, Fort, Freeman, Frye, Hale, Benjamin W. Harris, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Hoar, Hoge, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Joyce, Kasson, Kelley, Kimball, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Levy, Lynch, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Nash, Norton, O'Neill, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Pratt, Rainey, Robinson, Rusk, Sampson, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Waddell, Watt, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whiting, Charles G. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodburn—74.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. John H. Baker, Bass, Bell, Blair, Bliss, Blount, Bradley, Burleigh, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Chapin, Collins, Cowan, Cutler, Darrall, Denison, Douglas, Dunnell, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Foster, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Goodin, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Henry R. Harris, Hartridge, Hatcher, Hathorn, Haymond, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoskins, Hunter, Hunton, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, King, Lamar, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Le Moyne, Lord, Lynde, Magoon, McFarland, Meade, Milliken, Money, Mutchler, Odell, Oliver, Packer, Piper, Platt, Powell, Purman, James B. Reilly, Roberts, Sobieski Ross, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Stenger, Stone, Stowell, Swann, Tarbox, Teese, Thomas, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Ward, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Wigginton, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, Yeates, and Young—102.

So the resolution was adopted.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. HARTRIDGE. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HOSKINS.] If present he would vote "no," and I should vote "ay."

Mr. MILLIKEN. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] Were he here he would vote "no," and I should vote "ay."

Mr. CASON. I am paired on all political questions with my colleague, Mr. FULLER. I do not know how he would vote on this question, but if he were here I should vote "no."

Mr. DARRALL. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. ELLIS, who if present would vote in the affirmative, while I should vote in the negative.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. ELY.

Mr. WILLARD. I am paired with the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HILL. If he were present he would vote "ay," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. WIGGINTON. I am paired with the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. WALLACE, who if present would vote in the negative, while I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. DUNNELL. On this question I am paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. STONE. If present he would vote "ay," and I should vote "no."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. FOSTER. On this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WALLING. If he was present, he would vote "ay," and I should vote "no."

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced the passage, without amendment, of joint resolution (H. R. No. 154) prohibiting the supply of special metallic cartridges to hostile Indians.

It further announced the passage of a bill (S. No. 1008) to increase the efficiency of the cavalry force in suppression of the Sioux hostilities; in which concurrence was requested.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was received by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Private Secretary.

Also, a message announcing that he had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, namely:

An act (H. R. No. 3928) to continue the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;"

An act (H. R. No. 2118) to provide for the construction of military posts on the Yellowstone and Muscleshell Rivers;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 134) donating two cannons and carriages to the warden and burgesses of Stonington, Connecticut;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 109) for the issue of silver coin;

An act (H. R. No. 1771) to declare forfeit to the United States certain lands granted to the State of Kansas in aid of the construction of railroads by act of Congress, approved March 3, 1863;

An act (H. R. No. 3717) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 3855) for the relief of George T. Olmstead, jr.;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 153) to correct an error in the enrollment of the post-office appropriation act;

An act (H. R. No. 1427) for the relief of H. P. Jones & Co.;

An act (H. R. No. 890) for the relief of Randall Brown, of Nashville, Tennessee;

An act (H. R. No. 1692) to amend an act approved May 8, 1874, in regard to leave of absence of Army officers.

An act (H. R. No. 329) to remove the political disabilities of George Jackson, a citizen of West Virginia; and

An act (H. R. No. 3749) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

It further announced that the following bills had been received by the President on the 17th of July, and not having been returned by him so the House within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution had become laws without his signature:

An act (H. R. No. 339) for the relief of E. D. Franz;

An act (H. R. No. 341) for the relief of Louis Rosenbaum; and

An act (H. R. No. 1808) for the relief of Daniel Wormer, of Albany, New York.

MORNING HOUR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour now begins at two o'clock and fifteen minutes; and this being Monday, the first business in order is the call of the States and Territories, beginning with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back on motions to reconsider. Under this call memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented for reference and printing.

NIGHT-LODGING-HOUSE COMMISSION.

Mr. HENDEE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3999) assigning the use of the Central Guard-house, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia, for the Night-Lodging-House Commission; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that the bill may be read.

The bill was read in full, and was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF TRACKS OF BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD.

Mr. JOYCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4000) requiring the removal of the tracks of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad from certain streets in the city of Washington, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. JOYCE. I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read in full, and was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

REVENUE CORPS.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4001) to establish a competent and non-partisan revenue corps; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask to have the bill read.

The bill was read in full, and was referred to the Committee on Civil-Service Reform, and ordered to be printed.

ELLEN T. JOHNSON.

Mr. COX introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4002) granting a pension to Ellen T. Johnson; which was read a first and second time by its title

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask to have that bill read.

The bill was read in full, and was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF LIEUTENANT HARRINGTON.

Mr. DAVY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4003) granting a special pension to the widow and minor children of Lieutenant Harrington, who was killed in the recent fight with the Indians on the Little Big Horn River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CENTENNIAL EDUCATIONAL MATERIAL.

Mr. CUTLER introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 156) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to receive the educational material now on exhibition in the centennial exposition; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for the reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read in full, and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. HOPKINS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4004) to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common-carriers; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. DUNNELL. I request that that bill may be read in full so that it may appear in the RECORD.

The bill was read, and is as follows:

A bill to regulate interstate commerce and to prohibit unjust discriminations by common carriers.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all railroad companies and all other corporations or persons engaged in the business of carrying freight from any place in one State or Territory to any place in another State or Territory, or from any place in a State or Territory to the seaboard in said State or Territory for exportation, or from the seaboard to any place within any State or Territory, of articles imported directly to such inland place of delivery, be, and they are hereby, prohibited from making discriminations in facilities in transportation, or in charges for handling, carrying, and delivering such freights, when shipped in quantities not less than sufficient to load one ordinary car or usual vehicle; but all such charges shall be equitable and uniform for all persons, companies, and corporations shipping from the same place to the same place.

SEC. 2. That all railroad companies and all other corporations or persons engaged in carrying or delivering freight, as set forth in section 1 of this act, shall, within thirty days after the passage of this act, make and publish a schedule of charges for the reception, carrying, and delivery of the various classes of freight. Said schedule shall show the amount charged per hundred pounds, or per package, or per car load for carrying the several classes of freight between the different places of receipt and delivery, and also all other charges for handling, storage, &c., and in no case shall a greater sum be charged for carrying, handling, and delivering such freight a shorter than is charged for a longer distance. Said schedule shall be signed by the proper officers of the corporation or by the persons carrying or handling freight as aforesaid, and shall be kept publicly posted in a conspicuous and accessible place in each depot or office of said corporation or person. Said rates of charges thus fixed shall not be changed without affixing to said schedule, in each depot or office as aforesaid, a conspicuous notice that at the expiration of not less than five days said rates will be changed, and giving the details of all changes proposed to be made in said schedule. Any corporation or individual neglecting to comply with the provisions of this section shall be liable to a penalty of $5,000, to be sued for and apportioned as in case of the penalty provided for in section 3 of this act.

SEC. 3. That all railroad companies and other corporations and persons engaged in carrying freights as aforesaid are hereby prohibited from receiving or retaining less or more than the rates so as aforesaid prescribed from any person or persons or corporations under a penalty of $5,000 for each offense, to be recovered in any court of record having jurisdiction to that amount, one-half thereof for the benefit of the United States and the other half to the person suing therefor. Any arrangement or agreement, directly or indirectly, whether by way of drawback, rebates, underbilling, commissions, or otherwise, whereby the freight of any individual or association of individuals, or of any corporation or corporations, shall be handled, stored, or carried for a rate of compensation different from the rate per hundred pounds, or per package, or per car-load, charged to others, and any arrangement or agreement giving a preference in furnishing cars, or motive power, or sidings, or tracks, or depots, or storage, shall be considered a violation of this act, subjecting the party or corporation violating to the penalty aforesaid for each offense.

SEC. 4. That any combination of railroad companies or other corporations or individuals to defeat the purpose of this act, to regulate charges upon a different basis than that herein set forth to affect values by sudden and unnecessary changes, to give to one corporation or individual facilities and advantages withheld from or not extended to any other corporation or individual is hereby declared to be a misdemeanor, and the corporation or person convicted thereof in any United States district court where said corporation or individual has an office or place of business shall be fined a sum not less than $5,000 for each offense, and shall also be subject to the penalty prescribed in section 3 in a civil suit or suits.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY HOOVER.

Mr. ROBBINS, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4005) for the relief of Henry Hoover; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HURLBUT. Let that bill be read.

The bill was read in full, and was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN PRESTON'S EXECUTOR.

Mr. TERRY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4006) for the relief of John Preston's executor; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HURLBUT. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read in full, and was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LEWIS RODRICK.

Mr. WALSH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4007) granting a pension to Lewis Rodrick; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HURLBUT. I ask for the reading of that bill.

The bill was read in full, and was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REUBEN ROUZEE.

Mr. WALSH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4008) for the relief of Reuben Rouzee, of Montgomery County, Maryland; which was read a first and second time by its title.

The bill was read in full, and was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL T. MAGRUDER.

Mr. WALSH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4009) for the relief of Samuel T. Magruder; which was read a first and second time by its title.

The bill was read in full, and was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SARAH ELLEN CADY.

Mr. WALSH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4010) for the relief of Sarah Ellen Cady; which was read a first and second time by its title.

The bill was read in full, and was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM T. LEWIS.

Mr. WALSH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4011) for the relief of William T. Lewis, executor of John H. Lewis, deceased; which was read a first and second time by its title.

The bill was read in full, and was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

J. C. CAMERON.

Mr. SINGLETON introduced a bill (H. R. 4012) for the relief of J. C. Cameron, of Madison County, State of Mississippi; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HURLBUT. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read in full, and was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES M. LYLES.

Mr. SINGLETON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4013) for the relief of James M. Lyles, of Jasper County, in the State of Mississippi; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read in full, and referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LEWIS JOHNSON & CO.

Mr. SINGLETON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4014) for the relief of Lewis Johnson & Co., of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read in full, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

WILLIAM A. TAYLOR.

Mr. SINGLETON also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4015) to refund to W. A. Taylor, M. D., of Bastrop County, in the State of Texas, certain internal-revenue taxes which were erroneously and unlawfully imposed upon and exacted of him; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WALTER L. CAMPBELL.

Mr. HOOKER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4016) for the relief of Walter L. Campbell, a resident of Pike County, State of Mississippi; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read in full, and referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CONSIDER PARISH.

Mr. HOOKER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4017) for the relief of Consider Parish, a resident of Hynes County, State of Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 157) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend sections 3893 and 3894 of the Revised Statutes relative to the mail service;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM P. MORAN.

Mr. LEVY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4018) for the relief of William P. Moran; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read in full, and referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM F. WALSH.

Mr. LEVY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4019) for the relief of William F. Walsh, a citizen of New Orleans, Louisiana.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read in full, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM F. PERKINS.

Mr. LEVY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4020) for the relief of the estate of William F. Perkins, late of Van Zandt County, deceased; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read in full, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. WHITEFIELD.

Mr. LEVY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4021) for the relief of the heirs of William H. Whitefield, an alien some time resident of Sebastian County, in the State of Arkansas, and late of Utilla Island, off Honduras, Central America, deceased; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for the reading of the bill.

The bill was read in full, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL EDWARDS.

Mr. LEVY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4022) for the relief of Daniel Edwards, a resident of the city of New Orleans, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ALANSON WILLIAMS.

Mr. WHITE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4023) to grant a pension to Alanson Williams; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committe on Invalid Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH M'KINNEY.

Mr. WHITE also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4024) granting a pension to Joseph McKinney; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

A. S. HAMILTON.

Mr. RIDDLE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4025) for the relief of A. S. Hamilton, of Sumner County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN G. RANDOLPH.

Mr. ATKINS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4026) for the relief of John G. Randolph; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT P. TURNER ET AL.

Mr. ATKINS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4027) for the relief of Robert P. Turner, Margaret Hurst, and David N. Huddleston; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JESSE H. HARPER.

Mr. ATKINS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4028) for the relief of Jesse H. Harper, of Jackson, Madison County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

R. C. BRINKLEY.

Mr. YOUNG, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4029) for the relief of R. C. Brinkley, of Memphis, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CLARA E. BRYON.

Mr. YOUNG, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4030) for the relief of Clara E. Bryon, of Memphis, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SIGNAL SERVICE.

Mr. YOUNG, also introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 158) relating to the Signal Service; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

APPOINTMENTS TO OFFICE.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4031) to apportion the appointments of clerks and other employés of the Governernment among the several States and Territories; to provide for their appointment on account of honesty, capacity, and fitness, without regard to their political opinions; to forbid their removal except for causes other than political, and making it a misdemeanor for Senators and Representatives and Delegates in Congress to ask or recommend the making of such appointments; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I ask that the bill be read at length.

The bill was read in full, and referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

REFUNDING LICENSE TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. STEVENSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4032) to refund certain license taxes to citizens of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM P. HAZARD.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4033) for the relief of William P. Hazard; which was read a first and second time, with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DAVID TRUITT.

Mr. EDEN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4034) granting a pension to David Truitt, a soldier in the Mexican war; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JULIUS S. BOHRER.

Mr. ANDERSON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4035) for the relief of Julius S. Bohrer, United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY C. HULL.

Mr. BLAND introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4036) for the relief of Henry C. Hull, of Osage County, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

OTHO HENSON.

Mr. BUCKNER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4037) for the relief of Otho Henson, of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

G. R. WILFRED MARSHALL.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4038) for the relief of G. R. Wilfred Marshall, administrator of John T. Waring, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY A. BUTLER.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4039) for the relief of Henry A. Butler; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LOTTERY TICKETS.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4040) to prevent the sale of policy or lottery tickets within the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

DEPREDATIONS UPON PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4041) to prevent depredations upon property in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT S. PERKINS.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4042) for the relief of Robert S. Perkins, of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

S. M. GOLDEN.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4043) for the relief of S. M. Golden, of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM ROUZER.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4044) for the relief of William Rouzer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES HEITMULLER.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4045) for the relief of Charles Heitmuller of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

C. F. F. ROSENTHAL.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4046) for the relief of C. F. F. Rosenthal, of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES C. BROOKE.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4047) for the relief of James C. Brooke, of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY STELLO.

Mr. BUCKNER also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4048) for the relief of Henry Stello, of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WIDOW OF JAMES H. WELLS.

Mr. REA introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4049) for the relief of the widow of James H. Wells; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS A. MOORE.

Mr. GAUSE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4050) for the relief of Thomas A. Moore, of Osceola, Arkansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. CONGER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4051) to promote immigration to the United States and to protect immigrants on their passage; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

GREEN BAY AND LAKE MICHIGAN SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. LYNDE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4052) to extend the time for the completion of the Green Bay and Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-canal, in the State of Wisconsin, and to repeal section 5 of chapter 32 of the acts of Congress of 1866; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAVAGE. Mr. Speaker has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The morning hour has expired; but a number of gentlemen desire to introduce bills for reference, which will take but a few moments, and if done now will save a great deal of the time of the House. The Chair hopes, therefore, that no objection will be made.

Mr. SAVAGE. I object to the introduction of any bills by unanimous consent.

SUPPLIES FOR INDIAN BUREAU.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Appropriations a bill (H. R. No. 4053) to further authorize the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to purchase supplies for the Indian Bureau in open market; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to purchase in open market, without the usual advertisement, for immediate use of the Indian tribes, such supplies as are required to an extent, not exceeding $150,000, which is appropriated for such purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to serve until the regular appropriation bill shall be passed and approved and the time now required by law for advertisement and acceptance of proposals shall have elapsed; and such sums so expended are to be deducted from the appropriate sums respectively appropriated under the regular appropriation bill when passed.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to state that this bill is reported at the request of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and that it is a duplicate, both in form and amount, of the bill heretofore passed for the same object.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TEMPORARY APPROPRIATIONS FOR SUPPORT OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr RANDALL also, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Appropriations a bill (H. R. No. 4054) to continue the provisions of an act entitled "An act to continue the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;'" which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that the provisions of an act entitled "An act to continue the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government,'" approved June 30, 1876, approved July 21, 1876, be extended and continued in full force and effect until and including the 10th day of August, 1876.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed; there being ayes 85, noes not counted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. RANDALL also, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Appropriations a bill (H. R. No. 4055) to continue the public printing; which was read a first and second time.

The bill authorizes the Congressional Printer to continue the work required by law in advance of appropriations hereafter to be made; and the act is to continue in force until and including August 10, 1876.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION ACT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before proceeding with other business, the Chair feels constrained to lay before the House a communication which has been received from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

The act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, is so defective in what it omits to provide for that I cannot announce its approval without at the same time pointing out what seems to me to be its defects. It makes but inadequate provision for the service at best, and in some instances fails to make any provision whatever.

Notably among the first class is the reduction in the ordinary annual appropriations for the revenue-cutter service, to the prejudice of the customs revenue.

The same may be said of the Signal Service, as also the failure to provide for the increased expenses devolved upon the mints and assay offices by recent legislation, and thus tending to defeat the objects of that legislation.

Of this class, also, are public buildings, for the protection, preservation, and completion of which there is no adequate appropriation, while the sum of $100,000 only is appropriated for the repairs of the different navy-yards and stations and the preservation of the same, the ordinary and customary appropriations for which are not less than $1,000,000.

A similar reduction is made in the expenses for armories and arsenals.

The provision for the ordinary judicial expenses is much less than the estimated amount for that important service, the actual expenditures of the last fiscal year, and the certain demands of the current year.

The provision for the expenses of the surveys of public lands is less than one-half of the usual appropriation for that service and what are understood to be its actual demands.

Reduction in the expenditures for light-houses, beacons, and fog-stations is also made in similar proportion.

Of the class for which no appropriation is made, among the most noticeable, perhaps, is that portion of the general expenses of the District of Columbia, on behalf of the United States, as appropriated in former years, and the judgments of the Court of Claims. The failure to make a reasonable contribution to the expenses of the nation's capital is an apparent dereliction on the part of the United States, and rank injustice to the people here who bear the burdens; while to refuse or neglect to provide for the payment of solemn judgments of its own courts is, apparently, to repudiate. Of a different character, but as prejudicial to the Treasury, is the omission to make provision to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to have the rebel archives and records of captured and abandoned property examined and information furnished therefrom for the use of the Government.

Finally, without further specification of detail, it may be said that the act which in its title purports to make provision for a diverse and greatly extended civil service, unhappily appropriates an amount not more than 65 per cent. of its ordinary demands.

The legislative department establishes and defines the service, and devolves upon the Executive Departments the obligation of submitting annually the needful estimates of expenses of such service. Congress properly exacts implicit obedience to the requirements of the law in the administration of the public service, and rigid accountability in the expenditures therefor. It is submitted that a corresponding responsibility and obligation rests upon it to make the adequate appropriations to render possible such administration, and tolerable such exaction. Anything short of an ample provision for a specified service is necessarily fraught with disaster to the public interests, and is a positive injustice to those charged with its execution.

To appropriate and to execute are corresponding obligations and duties, and the adequacy of the former is the necessary measure of the efficiency of the execution.

In this eighth month of the present session of Congress—nearly one month of the fiscal year to which this appropriation applies having passed—I do not feel warranted in vetoing an absolutely necessary appropriation bill; but in signing it I deem it a duty to show where the responsibility belongs for whatever embarrassments may arise in the execution of the trust confided to me.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 31, 1876.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the President putting in as many objections to our legislation as he sees fit, if he will but sign the bills reducing the expenditures of the Government. Our great effort is in that direction——

Mr. CONGER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. You had better let me be heard.

Mr. CONGER. I guess not.

Mr. RANDALL. I have risen for the purpose of moving the reference of the message to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is the regular order. The Chair, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a message from the President of the United States; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has been recognized to move as to its disposition.

Mr. RANDALL. Of course I cannot upon merely hearing this paper read at the Clerk's desk follow the details of the President's objections with that precision which further time, opportunity, and examination would permit; but I find one of his objections to be that an insufficient amount has been appropriated to the revenue-cutter service. If the President had examined he would have seen that the reduction there was very moderate if any. And, sir, if we had taken into consideration the misuse of that revenue-cutter service in the use of revenue cutters in junketings and other excursions by officers of the Government, we might perhaps have reduced it still more.

As to the Signal Corps, we have, we believe, in no degree impaired the efficiency of that service. Its chief officer in communicating with us told us that he could with perfect satisfaction to the public do away with quite a number of stations.

And I might as well say here that that service has grown to be an enormous expense to the Government, reaching last year near $1,000,000.

The President, and I say it with respect, exhibits still more his lack of information when he comes to talk about insufficient appropriations to the mints. He ought to have known that a large sum as usual is this year appropriated for the mints in the legislative appropriation bill.

Again he shows his lack of information when he tells us we have not provided sufficiently for the light-house establishment. We come entirely up to the estimates. In the revenue service, and as far as I know in the light-house service, we met the demands of the heads of those departments, and there were no material reductions whatever from what were recommended or agreed to by either of them.

At the proper time I will show more in detail the utter insufficiency of the reasons given by the President of the United States.

He complains in a measure of our action toward the District of Columbia. Now what have we done in reference to the District of Columbia? We have advanced to the people of this District $1,060,000 to pay the interest on its entire debt.

Mr. FOSTER. Who did that?

Mr. RANDALL. And there are various other matters in which we have taken the interest of this District into consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that done by this House?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir. And in addition we have given to various objects in this District public property and money to the amount of $250,000. We have given the District power enabling it to anticipate the revenues, so that the government may continue without interruption in all its necessary functions.

Mr. Speaker, while I do not at all object to this rather unusual message of the President of the United States, while I am perhaps surprised under the circumstances, yet not much dissatisfied with the attitude the President takes in reference to excessive and extravagant appropriations from the public Treasury, while he opposes in this way reduction of expenditures, still I must say, so far as this message is concerned, he finds fault without any sufficient reason whatever.

I am surprised especially, in reference to this sundry civil appropriation bill, that he should take such a course as he has, when I have only to look back into the history of legislation to discover that not very long ago the sundry civil appropriation bill embraced but $6,000,000, sometimes but $11,000,000, at last reaching, under a republican administration, the enormous appropriation of $32,000,000. The House will appreciate what I say when I recall to its attention the fact that it is upon this sundry civil appropriation bill all schemes, I will not say all jobs, but all unnecessary expenditures are fastened. Every scheme, every effort to take money out of the Treasury, rapping at the doors of Congress continually, which cannot be trusted to pass in separate bills by themselves, are thrust forward and embraced in this sundry civil appropriation bill.

The amount appropriated last year under the sundry civil appropriation bill was about $26,644,350.09. We recommend $14,626,981.74 this year. We recommended a decrease of $12,017,368 under appropriations of last year, and $17,933,493.55 under estimates.

As I have already said, this bill formerly amounted to but $6,000,000, sometimes coming up to $11,000,000. Then it grew to $18,000,000, and finally it reached the enormous figure of $32,000,000. Appropriations became so extravagant and so oppressive, requiring either increased debt or increased taxation, that reduction was universally demanded. And we are acting, Mr. Speaker, in entire accord with public sentiment when we cut off as far as we could all discretionary and unnecessary appropriations.

I accept therefore, Mr. Speaker, for one at least, the issue presented by the President of the United States, and I am willing that the people shall have the opportunity of judging between his dictum and the close examination into appropriations by the two branches of Congress, and determine who is right and who is wrong.

I have moved that the message be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and propose to call the previous question, but as I see the gentleman from Maine rising, I will yield to him, not desiring to cut off discussion.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me in all fairness, the President in this matter has taken a very moderate course. No fault that I can see should be found with him. This is a large appropriation bill. It contains appropriations essential to running certain branches of the Government. The President who sits so far as appropriations go in what I may call a serene atmosphere, who is not identified in this struggle between the House and Senate with either side, and who presumably looks upon all these questions in a fair light, has seen fit, not to veto the bill, thereby obstructing any of the wheels of the Government which should roll on from year to year, but to present his reasons why he believes that the appropriations made by both branches of Congress are not sufficient.

He has simply, Mr. Speaker, exercised a power given to him by the Constitution. My friends on the other side in years past always have been sticklers for maintaining the proper balance in the co-ordinate branches of the Government. It does not come well or with good grace from them now to find any fault or to talk about accepting an issue with him in a defiant manner, because the President has presented no issue here. He has made no issue. He has put no obstruction in the way of the appropriation bills. He believes, looking at the question, as I have said, not from the side of the House, not from the side of the Senate, but from a calm point of view, that these appropriations are not sufficient. But he says what under the circumstances I believe any Chief Magistrate should do, that, as Congress has decided that these sums shall be sufficient, he, while notifying us that he does not believe there will be enough, signs the bill and lets it become a law.

Now the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has found fault because this bill has increased so in years past. Undoubtedly it has. Because, to begin with, certain things which formerly were not upon this bill have been put upon it in late years; and it has become now more than formerly what may be called the omnibus bill of the expenditures of the Government. When all the other distinctive bills have passed nearly everything else goes into this bill. The light-house bill was formerly a bill by itself. It now helps to swell the amount of the sundry civil appropriation bill. And by the way as regards these light-houses, the gentleman should remember that the country has not yet got up to the point upon the light-house appropriation of making good the destruction during the war, of guarding and lighting harbors that lead into almost every Gulf, Atlantic, and lake State in the Union.

So upon other matters that during the war were overlooked when all attention was given to arms, and not the arts and developments of peace. We are obliged to appropriate more now than in the days when the bill reached but $6,000,000. Take for instance the question of public buildings. Congress and the President as a co-ordinate branch of the Government are not confronted this year with the question of what new public buildings shall be erected or provided for. Those have all been struck out. But we have been confronted with the fact that certain buildings have been begun heretofore, that they are now in progress of construction, and that appropriations should be made, not extravagant, but such as in the interests of fair economy should keep the work going on and give protection to what has already been done.

All of these things, Mr. Speaker, are a proper subject for the President. They are a proper subject for his monition. But he has not here put himself in the way of Congress. The two branches have come together, and, all things considered, as I had occasion to say the other day, have passed a pretty fair bill; not enough, as I then said, to prevent deficiencies, but a fair bill in many regards. And the President recognizing that still notifies the House that he has objections to some features of it. When he does so, I do not think there is any occasion for dissatisfaction or affront on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] moves to refer the message to the Committee on Appropriations, and upon that motion calls the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to state a single fact?

Several MEMBERS. Vote! vote!

Mr. KASSON. Will he just permit me to state a single fact in respect to the Signal Service? It is this: That in two States, at New Haven and at Springfield, where they will have to cut down the Signal Service by reason of deficient appropriations in this bill, private individuals have come forward and volunteered to make up the amount necessary to keep the service at those points for the public benefit.

Mr. RANDALL. Fifty men and what they cost, and $100,000 is all the reduction.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof Mr. RANDALL'S motion was agreed to, and the message was referred to the Committee on Appropriations

GOLD COIN AND BULLION, ETC., IN THE TREASURY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair also desires to lay before the House the following executive communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, July 29, 1876.

SIR: I am in receipt of the resolution of the House of Representatives, dated the 24th instant, requesting me to report to the House within one week from the passage of the resolution the amount of gold coin and gold bullion, respectively, in the Treasury and actually owned by the Government, with a full detailed statement of the amount of gold certificates outstanding, gold interest due and unpaid, called bonds, and all other obligations payable in gold on demand on that date, and in reply I have the honor to state that the available coin balance at the close of business on the 24th instant was $61,158,223 45

Made up as follows:

Gold coin	$41,627,450 56
Gold bullion	11,030,095 87
Silver coin and bullion	8,500,677 02
		61,158,223 45
Against which there were matured obligations, payable on demand, as follows:
Coin interest	10,456,386 29
Bonds called or matured and interest thereon	3,026,627 51
Coin certificates	30,230,100 00
Old demand notes	66,907 50
		43,780,021 30
Leaving a balance in excess of all such obligations of		17,378,202 15

Very respectfully,

LOT M. MORRILL, Secretary.

Hon. MILTON SAYLER,
Speaker pro tempore, House of Representatives.

Mr. RICE. I move that the report be printed and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent that the roll of States be now called.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that by unanimous consent bills not permitted to come in for reference during the morning hour may now be presented.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that gentlemen who had no opportunity under the call of States this morning to present bills and joint resolutions for reference may now have that opportunity. Is there objection?

Mr. SAVAGE. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to suspend the rules that that order may be made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the order will be considered as made.

Mr. GLOVER. I ask the House to listen to me for a moment. I desire to present a report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman for any purpose just now, except to present a bill for reference.

JOHN KELLY.

Mr. TUCKER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4056) for the relief of John Kelly, of Alleghany County, in the State of Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

RELATIVE VALUE OF GOLD AND SILVER.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4057) to authorize a commission to inquire into the change in the relative value of gold and silver; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAVAGE. Are these bills being introduced by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They are.

Mr. SAVAGE. I objected as distinctly as I could to the introduction of bills by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is too late for the gentleman to object now.

MONETARY SYSTEM.

Mr. GIBSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 159) for the appointment of a commission to consider the monetary system; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read in full, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COX. I have a similar resolution which I ask to have referred to the same committee, and I hope that to-morrow the committee will be able to report, as we have leave to report at any time.

Mr. COX then, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 160) providing for the appointment of a joint committee to consider the silver and other financial questions, &c.; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. KASSON. I call for the reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read in full, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for consideration at the present time.

Mr. HANCOCK. I object.

Mr. HOOKER. Then I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That cannot be done at this time.

FORT JONES MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. LUTTRELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4058) declaring the lands constituting the Fort Jones military reservation in Siskiyou County, California, subject to pre-emption and homestead entry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN E. TAYLOR.

Mr. KIDDER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4059) granting a pension to John E. Taylor, of Yankton, Dakota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BEEBE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, was granted leave of absence for four days.

Mr. DE BOLT was granted leave of absence indefinitely.

Mr. HILL was granted leave of abence for ten days.

Mr. SPARKS was granted an extension of the leave of absence heretofore granted to him, for ten days.

Mr. SEELYE was granted leave of absence for ten days.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CUTLER, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the claim of Mrs. Powers; no adverse report.

On motion of Mr. HENKLE, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Mrs. M. Linz; no adverse report.

On motion of Mr. LAPHAM, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Major Foster H. Hixon, the bill having passed the House and the Senate and become a law.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 154) prohibiting supply of special metallic cartridges to hostile Indians.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and on a division there were—ayes 79, noes 59.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. BEEBE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes 62.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and three minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. HEWITT, of New York: The petition of citizens of New York, for the restoration of the fast-mail train on the Hudson River and New York Central Railroad, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The petition of Henry Jones and 100 others, citizens of California, for the passage of a bill to enable married women to settle upon public lands under the pre-emption laws, notwithstanding their coverture, to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, the petition of John P. Sutton and other citizens of California, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of A. J. Gilman and other citizens of California, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of D. H. Epperson and other citizens of California, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, resolutions of the Grand Army of the Republic of California, favoring the payment of the California Hundred and California Cavalry Battalion, who returned after their discharge to California, of additional pay on account of expenses incurred in traveling, to the Committee of Claims.

Also, the petition of James Barry and other citizens of California, that the right of way through the arsenal at Benicia, California, be granted for a narrow-gauge railway, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of Farmington (California) Grange of the order of Patrons of Husbandry, favoring the admission of grain and wool sacks free of duty, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of the Sebastopol (California) Grange of the order of Patrons of Husbandry, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, resolutions of the Petaluma (California) Grange of the order of Patrons of Husbandry, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, resolutions of Little Lake (California) Grange of the order of Patrons of Husbandry, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of B. R. Spellman, for the establishment of a post-route between Live Oak and North Butte, Sutter County, California, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of California, requesting the establishment of triweekly mail service between Crescent City, California, and Jacksonville, Oregon, to the same committee.

By Mr. PLATT: The petition of citizens of Ithaca, New York, for the re-establishment of the fast-mail trains on the New York Central Railway, to the same committee.

By Mr. WHITE: The petition of Joseph McKinney, late a private in Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Alanson Williams, late a private of Company C, Fifth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. YOUNG: The petition of Clara E. Bryan, of Shelby County, Tennessee, for compensation for the destruction of her property in Memphis, Tennessee, by order of General Hurlbut, of the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 1, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HAMBURGH RIOTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate of the United States:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of July 20, 1876, calling upon the President to communicate to the Senate, if in his opinion not incompatible with the public interest, any information in regard to the slaughter of American citizens at Hamburgh, South Carolina, I have the honor to submit the following inclosures, to-wit:

No. 1. Letter of the 22d of July, 1876, from Governor D. H. Chamberlain, of South Carolina, to me.

No. 2. My reply thereto.

No. 3. Report of Hon. Willian Stone, attorney-general of South Carolina.

No. 4. Report of General H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector-general of South Carolina.

No. 5. Copy of evidence taken before a coroner's jury investigating facts relating to the Hamburgh massacre.

No. 6. Printed copy of statement of M. C. Butler, of South Carolina.

No. 7. Printed letter from the same to the editors of the Journal of Commerce.

No. 8. Copy of letter from Governor Chamberlain to Hon. T. J. ROBERTSON.

No. 9. An address to the American people by the colored citizens of Charleston, South Carolina.

No. 10. An address by a committee appointed at a convention of leading representatives of Columbia, South Carolina.

No. 11. Copy of letter of July 15, 1876, from the district attorney of Mississippi to the Attorney-General of the United States.

No. 12. Letter from same to same.

No. 13. Copy of report of a grand jury lately in session in Oxford, Mississippi.

These inclosures embrace all the information in my possession touching the late disgraceful and brutal slaughter of unoffending men at the town of Hamburgh, South Carolina. My letter to Governor Chamberlain contains all the comments I wish to make on the subject. As allusion is made in that letter to the condition of other States, and particularly to Louisiana and Mississippi, I have added to the inclosures letters and testimony in regard to the lawless condition of a portion of the people of the latter State.

In regard to Louisiana affairs, murders and massacres of innocent men for opinion's sake, or on account of color, have been of too recent date and of too frequent occurrence to require recapitulation or testimony here. All are familiar with their horrible details, the only wonder being that so many justify them or apologize for them.

But recently a committee of the Senate of the United States visited the State of Mississippi to take testimony on the subject of frauds and violence in elections. Their report has not yet been made public; but I await its forthcoming with a feeling of confidence that it will fully sustain all that I have stated relating to fraud and violence in the State of Mississippi.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 31, 1876.

The message was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 24th instant, a statement of the number of employés borne upon the civil list of the War Department from 1859 to 1875, inclusive, compiled from the Biennial Register; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. SARGENT, Mr. BOUTWELL, and Mr. NORWOOD conferees on the part of the Senate at the fourth conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of John Barry, John W. Pumphrey, jr., William F. Marr, and others, citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3435) providing for the adjustment of claims against the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of M. D. Manson, L. A. Foote, Charles W. Elmore, and others, officers and soldiers in the late war, citizens of Indiana, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 58) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DORSEY presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Arkansas, in favor of the passage of a law authorizing the adjustment and settlement of the claim of the widow and heirs of the late Peter T. Crutchfield, deceased, for moneys alleged to have been taken from him by the State of Arkansas while acting as United States marshal; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

HAND-BOOK FOR THE USE OF CONGRESS.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred a resolution inquiring into the expediency of preparing a handbook for the use of Congress, giving a brief account of the several Executive Departments of the Government, &c., have instructed me to report it back and ask to be discharged from its further consideration. The committee have adopted the suggestion, for which they are indebted to the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON,] in the Congressional Directory, and I believe in a way which will meet his approbation and accomplish the object which he had in offering the resolution. It is a very desirable addition, and we think it will improve the value of the Congressional Directory.

Speaking of the Directory, I will state that I found yesterday a copy of one of the last Directories that had been issued under the old régime, before the present so-called "extravagant and corrupt system of public printing" was adopted. I should like to have some of the new Senators, some of these boys who have come in since 1865, and never have seen the old Directory, to look at it and compare it with the new one. It contains scarce a tenth of the useful information and it is full of gross inaccuracies. The Directory used to be printed after the session was well under way. The last but one, I think, was not printed until the latter part of February, that being a short session, when we adjourned on the 4th of March; and they cost fifty cents a piece, which is about four times the cost of the present Directory.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Who was chairman of the Committee on Printing then?

Mr. ANTHONY. I had the honor to be its chairman, but the Directory was not then printed under the supervision of the Committee on Printing. It was a private speculation of one of the officers of the House of Representatives; and in consequence of the incorrect character of the work, so incorrect as to mislead rather than inform, a resolution was passed directing the Committee on Printing to have it printed under "the extravagant and corrupt system of the Printing Office."

Mr. WITHERS. What year was the Directory printed to which the Senator refers?

Mr. ANTHONY. In 1864.

The report was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the petition of employés in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing praying for a short leave of absence to visit the Centennial, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing is in no sense under the supervision of the Committee on Printing, but belongs to the province of the Committee on Finance.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. A few days since the Committee on the Judiciary reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3168) relating to partition of real estate in the District of Columbia. The committee have since had the matter informally under consideration. We reported at that time an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I am now instructed to report a substitute for such substitute, and move that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. As that is a very important matter to the citizens of this District and the real estate here and the practice under it in the courts, I shall if possible endeavor to obtain the floor to-morrow morning to ask for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3503) for the relief of Philip Rohr, of Virginia, for tobacco seized for use of the Army, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2867) to amend section 2958 of the Revised Statutes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Anna M. Orne, of New Jersey, widow and administratrix of Henry A. Orne, formerly of Memphis, Tennessee, praying for indemnity for certain damage, &c., to the property of her husband by the United States, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3392) for the relief of John R. Harrington, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1496) granting a pension to Mary A. Allen, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE.

Mr. HOWE. I am instructed by the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 77) providing for the restoration of the original Declaration of Independence, to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage. As it is a very simple affair and appropriates no money, and as this is the centennial year, my friend [Mr. EDMUNDS] suggests I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It empowers a commission, consisting of the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and the Librarian of Congress, to have resort to such means as will most effectually restore the writing of the original manuscript of the Declaration of Independence, with the signatures appended thereto, now in the United States Patent Office; and provides that the expense attending the same be defrayed out of the contingent fund of the Interior Department.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IDAHO PENITENTIARY.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1972) to authorize the construction of an inclosure around the United States penitentiary at Boisé City, in the Territory of Idaho, to report it favorably. It is only a few lines, and it merely provides for fencing in the rascals who are now confined in the penitentiary of Idaho. I take it nobody will have any objection to having them fenced in. The bill appropriates $1,500 for that purpose. I ask for the present consideration of the bill, if there is no objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It appropriates $1,500, or so much thereof as may be required, to construct a wooden inclosure around the United States penitentiary at Boisé City, in the Territory of Idaho, to be expended by the United States marshal for the district of Idaho, under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WRECK OF THE MONITOR TECUMSEH.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) in reference to the wreck of the United States monitor Tecumseh, to report it back with an amendment and with a recommendation that when amended it pass.

I will state to the Senate that the question about which the resolution was sent to the Committee on the Judiciary arose out of some supposed legal difficulty concerning the situation of this monitor. The monitor was a part of the United States Navy, and ran against a torpedo in Mobile Bay, in the year 1864, and sank in forty feet of water, and the place of sinking was marked by a buoy. Afterward Congress passed, in 1870, a joint resolution which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to take such steps as he saw fit for the collection, sale, &c., of any "wrecked, abandoned, or derelict property which ought to go to the United States," was the expression describing the class of property to which the resolution referred; and then it went on to speak also of dues that might be owing to the late government of the so-called Confederate States. Under the authority, as the Secretary of the Treasury supposed, of this resolution, he sold this wreck, if it be called a wreck, to a gentleman named Slaughter, and also the wreck of one of the vessels of the rebel government, for the sum of $50.

When this vessel went down, all on board went with it. About one hundred and fifty officers and sailors were buried in that iron tomb, and there are their remains to this day of course. The assignee of the man who claims to be the owner proposes to blow up the vessel in order to get the old iron. The House passed a joint resolution instructing the Secretary of the Navy to prevent that, unless these bodies or remains are carefully removed, "decently and in order," and if that cannot be done, to tender back the money and take possession.

The committee, or a considerable portion of it, was inclined to the opinion that the joint resolution of Congress of 1870 did not authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to do anything about this vessel at all, inasmuch as it always was the property of the United States, and was in the legal possession of the Navy Department, as much so as if it had been at the navy-yard in this city, although it was on the bottom of the bay, but it was buoyed out. I think a majority of the committee are of opinion that this act of Congress did not refer to any such property at all, which was in the possession of the United States and belonged to us, in charge of the Navy Department, and therefore that this gentleman got no title; but, however that may be, we are of the opinion that this sacrilege of blowing the bones of these poor fellows everywhere over the bottom of the sea ought not to be permitted at whatever cost. Therefore we report an amendment, without any recitals or preambles which admit anybody's title, simply providing that the Secretary of the Treasury shall tender this $50 and interest to the party who paid it to him, and that the Secretary of the Navy shall protect this ship and keep it from disturbance; but he is authorized in his discretion, if it can be done in a suitable and decent way, to let the parties who now claim it have it on terms which under his supervision will provide carefully and effectually for removing these remains and having them properly buried on land. That is the amendment which we propose. I have taken the time to explain it now in the nature of a report, in order that everybody may be notified of the grounds we take.

Mr. WEST. Why not have it considered now?

Mr. EDMUNDS. As it is a matter which does not involve very great responsibility, my friend suggests that I might as well ask for the present consideration of the resolution, and if there is no objection I will. Of course if anybody would rather have it lie over, I do not ask it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on the Judiciary report to strike out the preamble of the resolution and all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to return and tender to the party claiming to have purchased the United States monitor Tecumseh the sum of $50, with interest at 6 per cent. added from August 7, 1873, to the day of tender, said sum of $50 being the sum paid by James E. Slaughter on what purported to be the sale of said monitor, then lying in Mobile Bay.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he hereby is, directed to assume the control and protection of said monitor, and he is authorized to dispose of the same to the party who paid said money, or his assigns, on just terms, providing in such disposition for the removal from said monitor and the proper burial of the remains of the persons carried down when she sank; such removal from the said monitor and burial to be under the protection and supervision of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. WEST. Do you appropriate the money necessary?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I understood the second section to authorize the sale to the same party of the vessel after the bodies shall be removed?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I want to inquire if that contemplates the same price which was paid to the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; it only contemplates the sale at a just price, and no sale at all unless decent provision can suitably and properly be made for the removal of these remains and their due burial.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The point I wanted to make is that it seems to me $50 is wholly inadequate even for the iron there, and I wanted to inquire whether the sale was authorized at the former price.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, sir; it provides for the sale on just terms. It is an authority to sell on just terms if the situation will authorize it, with due regard to these bodies.

Mr. WITHERS. I inquire of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary whether I understood him to say that the Judiciary Committee were of opinion that the sale which had been made for $50 was not a legal sale?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is, as I understand it, the opinion of the committee. Some of the gentlemen doubt whether that is the strict construction of the act. I will say for myself I have no doubt at all; it appears clear to me that the act did not authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of that property at all.

Mr. CRAGIN. This matter was before the Committee on Naval Affairs and by them committed to the Committee on the Judiciary. There is one point in the case that has not been brought out. In addition to the iron that surrounds this vessel, there was a safe on board containing a considerable amount of money, somewhere from $5,000 to $20,000, and these parties who have bought the vessel, I am told, may get their remuneration in that money which they will find, and therefore it is not to be raised so much for the iron. It will be very expensive to raise the vessel.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Nothing of that sort appeared in the papers that we had; but I will state that a copy of the sale by the Secretary of the Treasury, the professed sale, was before us, and, according to my recollection, the papers there—I am quite sure I am right—agree that all that the Secretary sold was the monitor Tecumseh. The sale does not include any personal property or money of the United States that may happen to be on board any more than it includes the bones of these poor sailors who went down in it, and if they get it up the money in the safe will belong to the United States.

Mr. SPENCER. Is this joint resolution before the Senate by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not yet before the Senate. The Chair was going to put the question on taking it up. Is there objection to its present consideration?

Mr. SPENCER. I object to its consideration. I should like to look at it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama objects, and the joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1010) for the relief of Julius S. Bohrer, master in the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1011) to extend the time for the completion of the Green Bay and Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-canal in the State of Wisconsin, and to repeal section 5 of chapter 32 of the acts of Congress of 1866; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1012) for the relief of Charles Clinton, late assistant treasurer of the United States at New Orleans, Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DORSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 21) defining the meaning and intent of the act of June 11, 1870, entitled "An act in relation to the Hot Springs reservation in Arkansas;" which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 22) allowing the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to carry the mails in their new iron steamships; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to take up the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 810) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877. The report has been heretofore submitted and read.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the report explained.

Mr. ALLISON. This bill appropriates $74,675 less than a similar bill last year. The bill as it came to the Senate from the House appropriated $259,231, to which the Senate added $49,610. The conference committee reduced the amount $18,776 below the bill as it passed the Senate.

I will say that these reductions from the amount appropriated last year chiefly arise from the fact that in the bill this year there is no appropriation for the continuation of the hospital building at West Point. Last year we appropriated $30,000 for a new hospital there, which all the officers at the academy state is very necessary; but in the spirit of economy of this year this hospital is left in an incomplete state, having been completed I think to the first story. The estimates called for $42,000 to complete this hospital. The House omitted that item entirely, and the building must remain in an incomplete condition.

There is also an incomplete system of sewerage at this post. The Senate inserted $8,000 for the purpose of completing the sewerage; but the House insisted that in this time of economy they could not afford to allow this sewerage to be completed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That it would be a healthful measure to leave as it is?

Mr. ALLISON. That seems to be the impression in the House. Therefore that item was omitted. I believe these are the principal items of omission in the bill of this year compared with the last.

Mr. WEST. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question? Are the matters in dispute with reference to the conduct of affairs at the Military Academy in the pay of the professors remitted by this report to the committee to be appointed by the respective presiding officers of the two Houses or not?

Mr. ALLISON. That subject is not remitted in terms. The fourth section of the Army appropriation bill that passed a few days ago provides for a commission to take into consideration the propriety of re-organizing the line and staff corps of the Army. The officers of the Military Academy being a portion of the Army, it was supposed that this commission or committee would take charge of that subject also. Therefore all matters of pay at the Military Academy at West Point remain as provided by the Senate in its amendments to the bill of the House.

I will say with reference to the Military Academy band that the Senate conferees made some concessions.

Mr. WEST. How much did they give up?

Mr. ALLISON. They reduced the appropriation from $14,800 to $11,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are there any changes of the law in this bill?

Mr. ALLISON. There are no changes of the law in this bill.

The report was concurred in.

EXPENSES OF COMMITTEE ON CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. SARGENT. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the disbursing officer of the Senate shall advance such parts of the sum appropriated to pay the expenses of the Joint Select Committee on Chinese Immigration and paid into the contingent fund of the Senate to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate as the chairman of said committee shall in writing direct for the purposes aforesaid, and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall, as soon as may be, make a detailed report of the expenditure thereof with proper vouchers, which, when so made, shall be received by said disbursing officer and returned with his accounts to the proper officer of the Treasury Department.

I have adopted the form that has been usual in such cases; and it is necessary in order to enable the fund to be drawn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No doubt about that; but the question is whether the resolution ought not to be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no objection to its being referred.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not care anything about it, if you are sure you are right.

Mr. SARGENT. Let it be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

W. WHEELER HUBBELL.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 3192) for the relief of William Wheeler Hubbell was indefinitely postponed. The report was based on imperfections of certain papers from the Patent Office, and I ask to have the vote reconsidered and the bill referred to the Committee on Patents.

By unanimous consent, the motion was agreed to.

DEPOSIT OF INDIAN FUNDS.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 614) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment.

The amendment was read, being in line 12 to strike out the word "five" and insert "four and a half."

Mr. INGALLS. That relates to the amount of interest to be paid on the funds. The Committee on Indian Affairs believe that treaty stipulations require in certain cases 5 per cent. to be paid, but not being certain they desire a committee of conference to ascertain.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee of conference.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HARRISBURGH.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 1006) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use the surplus of certain moneys heretofore appropriated for public buildings at Harrisburgh in the prosecution of the work after the land shall have been paid for. The facts are about these: At the last session an appropriation of $160,000 was made by Congress to purchase a proper site for a public building in the city of Harrisburgh. For various reasons it was difficult to make the purchase at the time, and the reduction in the values has enabled the Government to purchase this site for about one-third of the amount appropriated. It is desirable that the additional sum not to be used in the purchase of the property shall be used immediately in preparing the ground and getting materials for the building. This will afford time enough by the next meeting of Congress to enable a proper appropriation to be made for the whole. I ask no appropriation now, but that that part of the appropriation that stands over may be used in preparing for the building.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 1006) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use the surplus of certain moneys heretofore appropriated was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported the bill with amendments.

The amendments were to strike out in lines 4 and 5 the words "post-office and Government offices" and insert "public buildings;" and in line 9, to strike out "to" and insert "for;" so as to make the bill read:

That after purchasing the site and obtaining a valid title to the land authorized to be purchased for public buildings at Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, by the act of March 3, 1875, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to use any moneys left of the appropriation made by said act of Congress for the improvement of the premises so purchased, with a view to the use of the same as a post-office and Government offices, as named in the said act.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use the surplus of certain moneys heretofore appropriated for a site for public buildings at Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania."

REUBEN DAVIS.

Mr. BAYARD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 990.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 990) to remove the political disabilities of Reuben Davis, of Mississippi, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed by a two-thirds vote.

LAND DISTRICT IN WYOMING.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1336. It is a local bill reported unanimously.

By unanimous consent the bill (H. R. No. 1336) to establish a new land district in the Territory of Wyoming was considered as in Committee of the Whole. By it all the public lands in the Territory of Wyoming lying west of the thirty-first meridian of longitude west from Washington are to constitute a new land district to be called the Evanston district.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM S. ROBINSON.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 436.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 436) for the relief of William S. Robinson, of Malden, Massachusetts, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that William S. Robinson, of the town of Malden, and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, was lately the clerk of the house of representatives of the Legislature, or "general court," of that Commonwealth, and it is represented that as said clerk of one of the legislative branches of the government he was assessed and paid income taxes on his salary for the period of ten years under the internal-revenue laws of the United States as then construed and executed; and that by reason of the serious illness of Robinson, and his absence from the country and from home considerable periods of time consequent thereon, since these assessments and payments, he was not informed that they had been held by the proper authorities to be illegal, and that the same would be refunded by the Treasury Department, in time to prepare and present his claims therefor within the period required by section 44 of the act approved June 6, 1872, but were not, as is alleged, presented until the time and limitation in that act had expired; the bill therefore directs the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to examine the claims of Robinson, presented for that purpose in the manner heretofore prescribed by the Treasury Department for the presentation of the like claims, and to reject the claims or to refund the taxes the same as if the claims had been presented within the period fixed by section 44 of the act approved June 6, 1872.

The Committee on Claims proposed to amend the bill in line 8 by inserting after the word "taxes" the words "to his legal representatives."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report in that case.

Mr. WRIGHT. I can state the facts of the case. There is not any question as to the facts; there is no question as to the service of this party, and no question that he paid these taxes; nor is there any question but that these taxes would have been refunded if the application had been made in time. When the matter was originally before the committee there was no sufficient ground shown why this application was not made in time under the law. After that the bill was recommitted, and then it appeared by the statement of the widow of this person, as also by the statement of one of the members on this floor from Massachusetts, the junior Senator, [Mr. DAWES,] that this person had been in such a diseased state of mind that he was unable to attend to this business, and for that reason the application was not made in time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When did the time of limitation expire?

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not remember the time exactly now. I only state the fact that it was by reason of this condition of his mind that he was unable to attend to business.

Mr. DAWES. I think the time expired about a year ago.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think longer ago than that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is very dangerous to remove the statute of limitations about any claim against the United States, more so indeed than it is a statute of limitations in respect to interests between private parties. At least I think so. But if the chairman states that this man was insane so that he had not the mental power to protect his rights and had not any guardian, then I do not know but that it is well enough to let the bill go through.

Mr. WRIGHT. The facts are found as stated in the report. We did not set out all the testimony leading to this conclusion, but we found the fact that he was unable to attend to his business by reason of his mental condition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do I understand that his mental condition was such as to make him incapable of attending to business?

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not know that I expressed it in that language, but I certainly think my language implies all that the Senator states.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator means that now, as I understand?

Mr. DAWES. I do not think the Senator would wish to leave on record quite that impression that he was incapable of doing business. He was not in one sense incapable of it, but his mental condition was very much impaired, and it was a condition approaching that, and he went abroad for the purpose of relief, so that the statute expired without any knowledge of that fact on his part; but I do not desire to have the Senate vote on the impression that he was not in his right mind. He had a difficulty about his mental condition that rendered it impossible for him to take care of his own business. That is just what it was—an absolute nervous prostration. He was found dead in his bed in the morning. It was a sort of nervous paralysis. Precisely the same reasons governed both Houses in passing a bill a few months since in reference to a judge in Ohio, who from impaired health was unable to attend to business, and I think went abroad; and on the recommendation of the committee that bill was passed. There was an entire absence of any evidence when this committee reported the first time; but it being exactly like that case, I took the pains to present it to the committee again and they were without any doubt on the subject upon the testimony presented.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of William S. Robinson, of Malden, Massachusetts."

REFORM AND RE-ORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints as members on the part of the Senate on the commission to which was referred the subject of the reform and re-organization of the Army provided for in the act, fourth section of the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] and the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.]

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the following bills having been received by the President on July 19, and not having been returned by him to the Senate within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, have become laws without his signature:

A bill (S. No. 123) for the relief of Philip S. Wales, medical inspector in the United States Navy; and

A bill (S. No. 627) making an appropriation to pay the claim of Butler, Miller & Co.

LAND DISTRICT IN IDAHO.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. President, in behalf of the people of the Territory of Idaho, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 538.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 538) to create an additional land district in the Territory of Idaho was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Public Lands proposed to amend the bill in line 8 by inserting the word "south" before "boundary," and in line 9 inserting the word "north" before the words "of base-line;" so as to read:

That all that part of the Territory of Idaho, described and bounded as follows, namely: commencing at the southeastern corner of said Territory; thence running west on the line between said Territory and the Territory of Utah to the line between ranges No. 23 and No. 24 east, Boisé meridian; thence north to the south boundary of township No. 10 north of base line; thence east to the eastern boundary of Idaho Territory; thence southerly, following the eastern boundary of Idaho Territory, to the place of beginning, shall constitute a separate land district, to be called Oneida land district, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve o'clock having arrived, legislative and executive business will be suspended, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Senate then proceeded to the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap having adjourned then resumed its

LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its legislative session. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate take a recess for fifteen minutes.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. THURMAN. It will be remembered that in the early part of the session a bill was reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections respecting the counting of electoral votes for President and Vice-President, and after a long discussion was finally passed. I voted for it and moved to reconsider the vote by which it was passed, and that motion has never yet been taken up. I am now informed that if taken up it will lead to a discussion, and that at this late period of the session would be fatal to any measure whatsoever on this subject. I therefore suppose that the only way in which the two Houses can come to an arrangement is for the bill to go to the House and let the House propose such amendments as it may in its wisdom deem to be proper. I therefore ask leave to withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote on the passage of the bill (S. No. 1) to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, was reconsidered, as the record shows; and the question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not think any vote was taken on the reconsideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate take a recess for fifteen minutes and we can look into that.

Mr. CONKLING. Was the vote reconsidered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is so on the record.

Mr. CONKLING. Therefore another vote is necessary to pass the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill. The Senator from Vermont moves to take a recess for fifteen minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and (at two o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess for fifteen minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. (at two o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) The recess having expired, the Senate resumes its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 36) to restore the name of Captain Edward S. Meyer to the active list of the Army.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4060) to provide for the payment of certain indebtedness incurred in the construction of the New York court-house and post-office building; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 36) to restore the name of Captain Edward S. Meyer, to the active list of the Army; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 154) prohibiting supply of special metallic cartridges to hostile Indians.

OSAGE LANDS IN KANSAS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, which is the bill (H. R. No. 3625) providing for the sale of the Osage ceded lands in Kansas to actual settlers. The pending question is on the——

Mr. CONKLING. There is no quorum obviously of the Senate present, and I suggest that there should be a call of the Senate or a quorum present before business proceeds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was only stating the question. The Secretary will call the roll of Senators.

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope not. It is not three o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum is found to be present, and the Secretary will report the pending question on the unfinished business.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] is to strike out in section 5, commencing in line 5, the words—

Upon the payment by each purchaser to the receiver of the proper land office the sum of fifteen cents per acre in addition to the sum heretofore paid, to cover in part the expense incurred in litigating the title to said land set up by said railroads.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Subject to any valid adverse claims that may have accrued before or since such sale or cancellation.

So that if amended the section will read:

SEC. 5. That all entries heretofore made of any of said lands, and set aside or canceled by the Secretary of the Interior, on the ground that the said railroads had a prior grant of said lands, be restored by the said Secretary of the Interior subject to any valid adverse claims that may have accrued before or since such sale or cancellation.

Mr. INGALLS. The object of the amendment is simply to permit any adverse claims that may have accrued before or since the entries were set aside by the Secretary of the Interior to be adjudicated properly, and the change of the section is rendered necessary from the fact of the eighth section being stricken out and the price re-reduced from $1.40 to $1.25 per acre. The latter part of the section from line 4 to line 9 is incongruous with the remainder of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think my friend from Kansas is correct; but the section itself ought to be changed a little. It provides:

That all entries heretofore made of any of said lands, and set aside or canceled—

Without describing the nature of the entry. I think it ought to be "all legal or regular entries," so that if neither party had any right, and one man entered under the railroad and another entered under the Secretary of the Interior, and they had conflicting claims, they should be left on exactly common ground. As the man under the railroad, it turned out, had no law to support him, if the other man had not any law to support him, we ought to leave the first possessor in possession.

Mr. INGALLS. I agree to that amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no objection to the amendment of the Senator. The one I shall propose will be afterward.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator, as I understand, suggests the insertion of the word "lawful" after the word "all" and before the word "entries" in the first line.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend by adding a section:

SEC. —. This act shall not take effect until said tribes of Indians shall file their assent thereto with the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to call attention to a proviso on page 2 of the bill in the first section stricken out in committee. I wish to know what is done with that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to strike out was disagreed to. The proviso is in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. That ought not to be disagreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What proviso is it?

Mr. ALLISON. The first proviso.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; the striking out ought to be agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I appeal to the Senator from Kansas to allow that amendment to be agreed to. We have no more right to take these sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections from these Indians than we have to take any other land belonging to any individual in the United States.

Mr. INGALLS. The joint resolution of April 10, 1869, in express terms declares that the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections shall be reserved in these lands for the use of the State of Kansas for school purposes. The Secretary of the Interior has already decided that the right of the State does not attach. The committee agreed that this provision should be stricken out, in which I very cheerfully concurred with them. When the question came to the Senate, on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] the amendment was disagreed to contrary to my judgment and against what I believe to be the law in the case. So far as I am concerned personally, I am entirely willing that the words shall be stricken out, believing as I do that neither the law nor the treaty provides for the reservation of these sections for school purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move a consideration or ask unanimous consent that this amendment reported by the committee but disagreed to in Committee of the Whole shall prevail.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before we take that question I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands to explain how that would leave us?

Mr. OGLESBY. The sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in these Indian lands belong to the Osage Indians and were ceded under this treaty that has now become familiar to the Senate, and were in no sense public lands. They were in no sense lands to which the ordinance for the admission of the States into the Union ever applied. They could not be reserved for school purposes in the ordinance of admission. They were Indian lands under the control of the Indians with an unextinguished Indian title. It would not be fair to take these lands now and give them to so good a purpose as is provided for in the proviso, a purpose that everybody heartily indorses, the common schools; but it is wrong to take those sections for that purpose. They properly belong to the Indians and ought to be exempted from reservation for school purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the fact that these lands were absolutely donated by the treaty of 1867 to the education and civilization of the Indian tribes.

Mr. OGLESBY. Unquestionably.

Mr. ALLISON. Now it is proposed to take these sections from the Indian tribes and place them under the control of the State of Kansas.

Mr. OGLESBY. What the Senator from Kansas says is exactly true that it is taking this land from the education of the Indians generally in the United States and giving it to the education of white children. It belongs to the Indian fund; it belongs to the Indian families, and ought in my honest judgment to be kept there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see that the act of admission of Kansas, January 29, 1861, provides that—

The following propositions are hereby offered to the said people of Kansas for their free acceptance or rejection, which, if accepted, shall be obligatory on the United States and upon the said State of Kansas, to wit: First, that sections Nos. 16 and 36 in every township of public lands in said State, and where either of said sections or any part thereof has been sold or otherwise been disposed of, other lands, equivalent thereto and as contiguous as may be, shall be granted to said State for the use of schools.

Of course it is plain under the present state of the law as decided by the Supreme Court, that these were not public lands in the judicial and legislative sense at that time, but a provision was made that "lien lands," as I believe they are called, should be given to the State of Kansas for schools to make it up. So I confess I do not see why the Indians should not have the benefit of these sections, and in that case the proviso ought to be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the proviso will be stricken out.

Mr. BOOTH. I move to amend section 2 by striking out of lines 3 and 4 the words "not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres;" so as to read:

SEC. 2. That any person who is a citizen of the United States, or has declared his intention to become such, who in good faith had purchased any portion of said land from either the Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston Railroad Company or the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company.

As the bill now stands, section 2 allows all persons who have bought in good faith from the railroad companies to acquire title from the United States by paying the sum specified to the extent of one hunhundred and sixty acres. There are persons, the Senator from Kansas I believe said there were one hundred, who had bought of the railroad companies in good faith tracts of land exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, had paid the full price, and made valuable improvements. I think the same principle of equity that would give the purchaser of one hundred and sixty acres the right of pre-emption from the United States ought to be extended to those who have bought larger tracts. That will be effected by the amendment I propose.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the Senator from Kansas will accept the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. INGALLS. I cannot accept the amendment. I am entirely willing the Senate shall vote upon it without any further discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 4053) to further authorize the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to purchase supplies for the Indian Bureau in open market;

A bill (H. R. No. 4054) to continue the provisions of an act entitled "An act to continue the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to provide temporarily for the expenses of the Government;'"

A bill (H. R. No. 4055) to continue the public printing;

A bill (H. R. No. 1972) to authorize the construction of an inclosure around the United States penitentiary at Boisé City, in the Territory of Idaho; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 77) providing for the restoration of the original Declaration of Independence.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to take up House bill No. 3022, known as the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill be read.

Mr. DAVIS. Before we proceed to the consideration of the bill I desire to give notice that on Thursday morning after the morning hour, if I do not interfere with some appropriation bill or conference report, I shall ask the Senate to permit me to make some remarks upon the report of the Committee on Finance in regard to Treasury discrepancies.

Mr. KELLY. At the conclusion of this bill I shall ask as a favor of the Senate to dispose of what is known as the Klamath land bill, which my friend from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has so ably argued on the other side.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg to say as to the Klamath Indian bill that I have not begun to argue the other side on that question yet. The case has hardly been opened. I wish to give notice, as I have done about twenty times before, that when this bill is over I shall try to have the Senate dispose of the Pacific Railroad question, which is still on the President's table.

Mr. PADDOCK. I also desire, in a modest way, to give notice to the Senate that after this bill is finished, whatever the result may be, I shall ask that the bill for a partial restoration of the franking privilege be considered——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Impartial you mean.

Mr. PADDOCK. Very partial, and very impartial, too; I accept the amendment of my friend from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. This bill has been read so often and is so familiar to the Senate that I trust Senators will waive any special reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This particular bill has never been before the Senate heretofore, because it is reduced about two-sevenths and where the reductions come in we do not know. It will not take long to read it, and in order to get a general run of the bill so that we can tell where the amendments come in, I insist that the bill be read.

Mr. SARGENT. Then let us act on the amendments in order as we go through the reading of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No. Let it be read through in order to provide the great security to each State so much insisted on hitherto.

Mr. ALLISON. Would it not satisfy the Senator from Vermont if the Clerk should read the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations? I think we can gather practically all there is in the bill from reading the amendments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps we shall, as it is mostly a bill of amendments, but we cannot understand the effect of the amendments without seeing what the amendments leave. Therefore I beg in the most modest way to ask the indulgence of the Senate to have this bill read once that we may see what it is.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, (at three o'clock and five minutes p. m.) I believe it is always in order to move an adjournment of the Senate. Therefore I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the motion of my honorable friend will not be agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The motion is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 12, noes 18; no quorum voting.

Mr. LOGAN. I think we ought to have a short executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no quorum.

Mr. WITHERS and others. Let us have the yeas nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 6, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cameron of Pennsylvania, Hitchcock, Jones of Florida, McCreery, Robertson, and Stevenson—6.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Barnum, Bayard, Booth, Christiancy, Conkling, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Eaton, Ferry, Gordon, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Kernan, Key, Logan, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Randolph, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Whyte, Windom, Withers, and Wright—38.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bogy, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Cockrell, Conover, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, McMillan, Morton, Patterson, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, and Thurman—27.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to a question of order. This bill has once been read thoroughly, and I do not know whether it must be read again or not under the rules.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Since this bill was reported it has been recommitted, and is now reported as if for the first time fresh, and it must be read through. I do not ask its reading as a matter of form, but in order that every Senator may see what its general scope and effect is.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill. Having read to line 12,

Mr. HOWE. I ask the Senator from Iowa if it is not his purpose to have the amendments acted on as they are reached in the reading of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has insisted on the formal reading of the bill through before action is taken on the amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. If my friend from Wisconsin can persuade my friend from Vermont that one reading of the bill is enough for us all to understand it, I think we may act on the amendments as we go on.

Mr. HOWE. I think the Chair could persuade him of that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We are acting according to rules now.

Mr. HOWE. I ask if it is the right of a Senator to have this bill read through at length, it being the same bill which has once before been before the Senate and has been read at length, recommitted, and reported back again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the same as a fresh bill, which requires to be read. It has been recommitted and reported on a different basis; substantially a fresh bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that we consider the amendments of the committee as the bill is read. I think there will be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects.

Mr. HOWE. I acquiesce in the decision of the Chair.

The Chief Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the Clerk reading the original House bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not mean to insist upon that, but to ask that the amended bill as reported be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is the bill, the Chair understands. The amendments constituting the changes will be read subsequently.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I do not understand what page the Secretary is on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Page 6.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I thought the committee had reported an entire fresh substitute, but I see they have not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator insist on reading it through?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, as it is altogether new. I thought the bill reported by the committee was a substitute for the House bill, and I did not ask in that case that the old bill should be read.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from Vermont now to suggest that we read the bill with the amendments and act upon the amendments as they are reached?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asked the Senator from Vermont the question, and the Chair understood him to say he wished the bill read through.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My objection is that I wish to see for one the general effect of this bill and its general character, and that we shall see as the reading goes along. I do not ask for the reading for the purpose of taking up time, but in order that I may understand the bill.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read to the end of the first section, at line 519.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not ask for the reading of the second section. It is all stricken out by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the reading of the second section will be omitted.

Mr. ALLISON. I find on looking over the bill what is a typographical error, I suppose. On page 20, line 464, where $285,000 are to be expended on Muscle Shoals the committee recommend striking out "eighty-five" and inserting "fifty-two;" so as to make it $255,000. Having changed the amount in the beginning of the paragraph, we must change the amount at the close and must insert "fifty-five" instead of "eighty-five."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is one of the advantages of having the bill read.

Mr. ALLISON. I observe that the House on page 20, line 476, spell "jetty" "jettee." The Senator from Vermont suggests that we strike out "ee" and insert "y." I am not sure but that that is right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not make any such suggestion, if the Senator will pardon me, in any public sense. Far be it from me to attempt to instruct the Committee on Appropriations in the art of spelling.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg pardon of the Senator. I will look into that matter and see what is the proper spelling. I think it is spelled correctly in the bill now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will observe to the Senator from Iowa that any amendment is out of order until the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations have been considered.

Mr. ALLISON. These are amendments of the committee.

I desire to say a word or two with reference to this bill. It will be remembered that the bill came to us with an appropriation of $5,872,000 in round numbers from the House of Representatives. The Committee on Appropriations, after a careful examination and consideration of the bill, with the aid of the examinations previously made by the Committee on Commerce, struck out a large number of the appropriations proposed by the House, regarding them as local in their character and not national, and inserted in lieu of these appropriations thus stricken out an increase of appropriations upon great national works that have been prosecuted for years and the necessity for the continuous prosecution of which still exists. That bill came into the Senate and all the amendments which were proposed by the Committee on Appropriations striking out appropriations were non-concurred in by the Senate, while all the amendments inserting appropriations upon these great national works were concurred in by the Senate, thus placing the Senate in the position of having increased this appropriation bill about $900,000. The bill standing in this position was recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to re-examine the bill and report it again, the Senate limiting the total aggregate of the bill to $5,000,000. The Committee on Appropriations have carefully gone over every item of this bill in committee, reading the report of the engineers having charge of these works and making such examination in detail of each particular work as they could make within the two or three days allotted to this business. They now bring this bill back again to the Senate with amendments in exact accordance with the instructions of the Senate providing for an aggregate appropriation of $5,000,000, not one cent more nor one cent less.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does that include the last amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. That includes every amendment and every provision in the bill. We have carried out as faithfully as we could carry out the instructions of the Senate in this regard. We have been compelled, in thus endeavoring to carry out the instructions of the Senate, to strike out many works of a local character, to reduce appropriations of a national character largely, and in many respects perhaps we have done injustice to what are called the local interests in particular States; but I desire now to say that this bill, having thus received the careful consideration and attention of the Committee on Appropriations for the second time, if it shall be amended in any particular with reference to the amounts involved, in my judgment cannot pass at the present session——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Increasing the amounts?

Mr. ALLISON. Increasing, or reducing, perhaps I might add; I, however, will not say that; but I mean by interfering with the arrangement. In speaking of an arrangement I do not mean an arrangement with reference to States, but an arrangement by which all the various public works that are now in process of construction shall be continued without detriment to those works. I say if any material change is made in this respect, in my judgment the bill cannot pass at the present session.

Therefore I submit now to the Senate the proposition that these amendments shall be taken as a whole as proposed by the committee and concurred in or non-concurred in by the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the first twenty-two lines of the bill now reported contain amendments striking out altogether appropriations for four works, general and national in their character, interesting to general commerce, in respect of which I chance to know something, because they are located in the State of New York. The first of these amendments proposes to strike out everything for the harbor of Dunkirk, on Lake Erie. Dunkirk is the terminus of the Erie Railway, and but one fact known to me diminishes the importance which used to attach to the harbor of Dunkirk. In recent years the Erie Railroad has built a branch to Buffalo, and as that branch sends cars to the elevators in Buffalo, which as we all know are very superior elevators, where those cars can be loaded in bulk with corn and wheat cheaply and with surprising quickness, many propellers running to carry cargoes in bulk of wheat and corn that formerly plied to Dunkirk go now to Buffalo. The withdrawal of a part of that single branch or item of the carrying-trade is the only fact known to me rendering Dunkirk now less important as a harbor than Dunkirk ever was or might have promised in the past to be. Notwithstanding this diversion, Dunkirk remains a very important harbor; and between Buffalo and Dunkirk there is no harbor on Lake Erie. In respect therefore of the safety of vessels, in respect of its trade, in respect of all that makes a harbor valuable and necessary, Dunkirk is an important harbor. The first amendment, I repeat, withholds from Dunkirk all appropriation whatever. It appropriates nothing either to continue the work or to preserve the harbor, or to shield from the action of the elements the work already done and incomplete.

I do not state these facts, as Senators might suppose, for the purpose of opposing this amendment. Considering the strait of this bill, considering the condition of the country and of the Treasury, I do not feel warranted, because of an amendment which I regret so much as this, in attempting to overset or aid in overthrowing the work of the committee; but I call attention to it thus early for two or three reasons, one of which will suffice. If concurring now in this amendment the Senate shall hereafter go back and refuse to concur in other reductions or in other instances in which appropriations are stricken out, I do not wish to be held inconsistent when I maintain, as I shall, that if the Senate refuses to concur with the committee and begins to add to this bill, in the case of local improvements or even of general improvements, this improvement is conspicuously one in which the Senate, should it adopt that line of action, ought to revise the recommendation of the committee.

The same remark I wish to make, so as not to vex the ear of the Senate again, touching the amendment striking out everything for the harbor at Olcott, everything for the harbor at Pultneyville, everything for the harbor at Great Sodus Bay, and other recommendations striking out altogether appropriations for harbors on Lake Ontario, a coast so little indented that harbors are rare and important. I believe there was not, before the committee saw the bill, one single appropriation for a work located in the State of New York in any sense local. The chairman of the committee will bear me out when I say that there was not in any version of this bill an appropriation for any stream lying within the State of New York, and in any sense local. The appropriations were for improvements of arms of the sea, and of the Hudson River which for this purpose I might almost call an arm of the sea, and which certainly is a great national highway.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is tide-water.

Mr. CONKLING. It is part of a highway extending from the western extremity of the lakes to tide-water, and a river in which the Senator from Vermont reminds me the tide ebbs and flows to the head of navigation. There may have been one appropriation in the bill not falling strictly within the description I have given, a single one relating to the improvement of Harlem River so as to connect, by means of the Spuyten Duyvil and the Harlem River, the North River with Long Island Sound. I should not describe that as a work applying to an arm of the sea, because in some sense and to some extent it was an attempt to create a channel by excavation and by other means. Omitting that, unless I have forgotten some appropriation, the bill contained none for a work located in the State of New York, except the harbors on the great lakes of Ontario and Erie, and improvement of the arms of the sea, and of this one great channel of national commerce.

Therefore I shall not be called in the after stages of this bill to insist, whatever may be the line of policy adopted by the Senate, that any local improvement shall be provided for in the bill, which improvement is located in the State which it is my privilege in part to represent. I wish, however, to file this general caveat, that if the committee shall be overthrown by the Senate, so that we are to revise their work touching national improvements which they have discarded, and more especially touching local improvements, then I shall hold myself convicted of no inconsistency, having agreed with the committee in the beginning, if I adopt what shall turn out to be the judgment and the action of the Senate as the rule to govern me touching appropriations which it may be considered more especially my business to understand and to regard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is that motion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations be agreed to in gross.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not if objected to.

Mr. CONKLING. It is only in order by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know I run some risk of being thought captious, but one who thinks he is doing his duty can bear that; and I may be allowed to say that that would be just like the previous question in the House of Representatives, and by and by, when we get to a conference, we shall be told by the House, whose appropriations we have reduced, "You have never considered this thing; a committee has fixed it up; and you behave just as we do."

Mr. ALLISON. I do not press the motion.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Do I understand the Senator in charge of the bill to consent to take the items separately?

Mr. ALLISON. One objection compels me to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects, and it could not be done without unanimous consent. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be reported.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 9 and 10, in the following words:

For the improvement of the harbor at Dunkirk, New York, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 12, to increase the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Buffalo, New York," from $75,000 to $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 15 and 16, in the following words:

For the improvement of the harbor at Olcott, New York, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 18, to increase the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Oak Orchard, New York," from $2,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 19 and 20, in the following words:

For the improvement of the harbor at Pultneyville, New York, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 21 and 22, in the following words:

For the improvement of the harbor at Great Sodus Bay, New York, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 24, to increase the appropriation

"for removing obstructions in the East River and Hell Gate, New York," from $200,000 to $290,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 35, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of Eagle Harbor, Michigan," from $15,000 to $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 38, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Marquette, Michigan," from $5,000 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 40, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Frankfort, Michigan," from $5,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 42, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Manistee, Michigan," from $15,000 to $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 45 and 46, in the following words:

For the improvement of the harbor at Pent Water, Michigan, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 47 and 48, in the following words:

For the improvement of the harbor at White River, Michigan, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 56, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Menomonee, Wisconsin," from $10,000 to $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 58, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Ahnepee, Wisconsin," from $10,000 to $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 60, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Two Rivers, Wisconsin," from $15,000 to $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 62, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the Falls of Saint Anthony, Minnesota," from $125,000 to $120,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 66, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Toledo, Ohio," from $75,000 to $60,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose it would be ineffective to make any opposition to this amendment, but I think I must complain, not only geographically but upon the ground of merit, of harbors like Toledo and Cleveland being reduced insignificantly to a sum barely sufficient to maintain the works there where the commerce is very great, and while $275,000 is given for the improvement of the Kanawha River, a mere branch of a branch of a branch of a branch. I do not feel disposed myself to stand here and submit to a discrimination which I think is geographical in character throughout the bill. There is the breakwater at Cleveland, a work that has been undertaken by the Government of the United States, which is now in progress, an impediment to navigation, with a customs business of $197,000,000 at that harbor. There is the harbor of Toledo which is a great entrepôt, the great out-going place for all the produce of Indiana and Western Ohio. The town contains 35,000 or 40,000 inhabitants, and the commerce is very large; I have not the statistics before me. The House appropriated the very lowest sum the engineers supposed they could get on with, and it does seem to me that for the committee after appropriating for slack-water navigation on the Great Kanawha River $275,000, and appropriating money for the mountain streams in some of the southern and western States, to refuse to make an appropriation for these great harbors is not making a bill which ought to be sustained by the Senate. It is wrong, wrong geographically, for this reason: The Kanawha is a stream that I am somewhat familiar with; at least with its geographical position. Just on the other side of the Ohio River, above it, is the Muskingum River which the State of Ohio has improved and spent all the money necessary to be spent on it, two or three million dollars. On the opposite side of the Ohio River there is another tributary of the Ohio, the Kanawha, and it is proposed that we shall make slack-water navigation there and spend I do not know how many millions of dollars in carrying out a system of improvement. One of the members of the Committee on Appropriations told me that this was part of a great line of improvements which if the Government undertakes will cost from thirty-five to seventy millions of dollars; that is, to carry the slack-water navigation over the Alleghany Mountains on the summit between West Virginia and Virginia. It seems to me that that class of work ought to be cut out of this bill if we are to bear reductions in all the great harbors of the country. I feel that now I cannot sit here and see the improvements on these harbors known to be of the very highest importance, like Toledo and Cleveland, cut down to a sum barely sufficient to make a show of work while there are other improvements through this bill that I supposed would be dropped out, such as the improvement of the French Broad River, and especially the improvement of the Great Kanawha River, and the removal of snags out of the Little Kanawha, comparatively a very small stream. I do think that this ought not to be done.

Mr. ALLISON. I quite agree with the Senator from Ohio that more money could be judiciously expended at the harbors of Toledo, Cleveland, and Sandusky City. I perhaps might agree with him in what he says about the Kanawha, but I am not quite ready to do so. The Kanawha improvement is one that has been sanctioned by the Senate. Large appropriations have hitherto been made for this improvement, and the Committee on Appropriations were only carrying out what they believed to be the judgment of the Senate in regard to this work. The State of Ohio is chiefly to be benefited by this Kanawha improvement, the Kanawha itself emptying into the Ohio River, which river washes the shore of that State on its entire eastern and southern border, and if the voice of the Senator from Ohio comes up against the Kanawha improvement I do not know that I, located as I am upon the Mississippi, incidentally benefited by this improvement, should complain; but we supposed, an appropriation for the Kanawha River being in this bill, and the improvement having been sanctioned by an appropriation of Congress last year of $300,000, that it was an improvement national in its character and not local. Therefore the committee did not feel at liberty to reduce the Kanawha appropriation more than $30,000.

Mr. CONKLING. May I make an inquiry?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. Upon the theory now suggested by the Senator, that finding in the House bill a work for which appropriation had been made before, they did not feel at liberty to strike it out, how comes it that when the committee find in the House bill the harbor of Dunkirk, for example, which they know to be an important harbor, which has a work incomplete and which will suffer for the lack of preservation, they not only reduce but strike out altogether an improvement of that sort which in everybody's view involves in its completion only a very limited sum, comparatively, and retain an appropriation for a work which, as the Senator from Ohio well says, and we all know him to be right, involves an immense expenditure with a very doubtful result?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the entire system involves from thirty-five to seventy-millions of dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. In answer to the statement of the Senator from New York, I reply simply that the harbor at Dunkirk, New York, cannot be made with $18,000 as appropriated in the House bill. Eighteen thousand dollars will make no progress toward the improvement of the harbor at Dunkirk. If we had felt at liberty to enlarge all the appropriations in the State of New York, as we did increase the appropriations at Buffalo, at Oswego, at New York City, and on the Hudson River, we might have been able and willing to have given the harbor at Dunkirk such an appropriation as would make an economical expenditure of the public money justifiable; but because we could not increase the appropriation for the harbor at Dunkirk we struck it out entirely, trusting to next year for a more ample appropriation. The harbor at Dunkirk is in as good a condition as any harbor in the United States, and is so reported by the Engineer Bureau.

Mr. CONKLING. What about the breakwater?

Mr. ALLISON. The breakwater is a large improvement, as a matter of course, and it ought to be extended; but $18,000 will not extend it. We could not increase that appropriation and do justice to Buffalo, Oswego, and Hell Gate, and at the same time limit our total appropriations to $5,000,000. I would be exceedingly glad to stand by the Senator from Ohio with his appropriations for the harbors on Lake Erie; but when you put the Committee on Appropriations in a vise and said "You must bring this bill down to a particular sum," we were compelled to cut off somewhere. The Senator from Ohio says we did not cut off the Kanawha appropriation. If he thinks that is an unjustifiable expenditure of public money, he is at liberty to move to strike out that appropriation entirely. The State of Ohio is more largely interested in that appropriation than any other State in this Union, not excepting even the State of Virginia or the State of West Virginia. It is a work especially calculated to improve and enlarge the commercial facilities of the State of Ohio. If a Senator from that State comes and says that this Kanawha appropriation is an absolute waste of the public money, it is time for us to consider whether it is important or not. But making the reductions which we deem advisable in all these States and with reference to all these appropriations we could not keep the harbor of Toledo, Ohio, at $75,000, and therefore we reduced it $15,000 so as to bring the general scope of the bill within the $5,000,000. It is for the Senate to take this bill and either vote it up or vote it down. If the Senator from Ohio or any other Senator can stand the defeat of this bill, let him move to lay it on the table. I have no interest in the bill other than a general interest. I have endeavored, as has the Committee on Appropriations, to make the bill the best possible for every section and every interest, looking neither to the West, nor to the North, nor to the South, and having no regard whatever to personal interests, sectional interests, or political interests; and therefore if this bill is not satisfactory, vote it down. If you amend it so far as the amounts are concerned by enlarging the appropriations suggested by the committee, it will have the same effect.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say only a few words now in regard to this matter.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senator from Ohio to let me say a word in reply to what he has said and then he can reply to me.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio apparently has selected the Kanawha River to make an attack upon it. That Senator perhaps has forgotten that he himself recommended that the Kanawha should be improved. I think the committee of which he was a distinguished member was unanimous, after making a personal examination of the Ohio River, that the Kanawha should be improved to its falls, no matter what became of the through water-line between the two Virginias.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What county are the falls in?

Mr. DAVIS. In Kanawha County.

Mr. SHERMAN. Above Charleston.

Mr. DAVIS. Above Charleston, thirty or forty miles. The Kanawha River, which the Senator from Ohio calls "the branch of a branch of a branch," is as we all know probably fully as large as the Ohio River is above its junction with the Kanawha.

Mr. SHERMAN. Above the junction of the Ohio with the Monongahela?

Mr. DAVIS. I say the Kanawha River is as navigable now for as large capacity of boats, except some shoals, and floats perhaps as much water as the Ohio does above its junction with the Kanawha. Further than that, the Kanawha River has been examined within the last twelve months by a board of engineers consisting of the engineer-in-chief, General Wright, and another whose name I do not recollect, and their report was unanimous that the river ought to be improved and would if improved be of great general benefit. Again the commerce on that river is greater perhaps than on any river in the West, other than the Ohio itself. It is a well-known fact that in the Book of Estimates for the present year the engineers estimate that $1,000,000 should be expended for this year upon the Kanawha River. Not only that but I say now that in proportion to the recommendations of the Engineer Department there is less appropriated for it than for any other improvement of a general character.

I do not want to take up time in talking of the Kanawha River. Of course there is a great deal that can be said. The Senator from Ohio as well as my friend from New York concurred in a report which was unanimous that that river should be improved, no matter whether the canal was built or not.

Mr. CONKLING. Has the Senator the report here?

Mr. DAVIS. I have just sent for it.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish the Senator would read where we said that improvement ought to be made.

Mr. DAVIS. I will do so, if I can lay my hand on it. I will do so in a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I certainly do not want to interfere with the local interests of the State of West Virginia and the river Kanawha, but I feel bound to say to Senators that if they will look at a map of the river Kanawha they will find that it is a mountain stream until it reaches what are called the falls above Charleston. I do not know the distance exactly from the falls to the Ohio River.

Mr. DAVIS. About a hundred miles; not beyond that distance.

Mr. SHERMAN. It runs in a northern direction until it strikes the Ohio River and is one of the tributaries of the Ohio. As a part of a great system of internal communication my impression is that the Senator from New York and myself did sign a report to the effect that if this whole system of internal navigation was to be adopted it would be necessary to improve the Kanawha. We signed a general report giving the statistics and the facts. But let me state to the Senate that a short distance above the mouth of the Kanawha there is another river which enters into the Ohio which is about the same size as the Kanawha, that is the Muskingum. It is probably as large as the Kanawha, and yet the Muskingum is improved entirely by the State of Ohio and has never been improved at all by the General Government. The navigation of the Kanawha is simply local in its character. The products of that region of country are nearly all coal and timber, and the like, valuable, of course, and they no doubt contribute to the commerce of the Ohio River; but to compare the Kanawha River, which is to get $275,000 of money by this bill, with the harbor at Cleveland or the harbor at Toledo is comparing a mole-hill to a mountain. I do not want to say that the Kanawha is not an important river. There is appropriated by this bill about $200,000 for the Ohio River, which is a thousand miles long from the city of Pittsburgh to the mouth of the Ohio. It carries through a devious course a vast internal commerce, estimated at $700,000,000 per annum. The Kanawha is but a branch of the Ohio, and the Ohio itself is but a branch of the Mississippi River.

It seems to me that to make these large appropriations for interior rivers, which are only the commencement of great works of internal improvement which the Government of the United States will never probably make to the prejudice of harbors of daily service and daily use, is not doing the best that can be done with a limited sum of money. I am disposed myself to stand by the Committee on Appropriations for $5,000,000; and yet I see two of the harbors of my State struck out entirely which are strongly recommended by the engineers. My colleague now brings me evidence that appropriations for two of the harbors proposed to be stricken out were recommended even since the proposed reduction by the Engineer Corps. The great harbors at Toledo, Cleveland, and Sandusky, which command not only the commerce of Ohio, but the commerce of many States, are reduced to a paltry sum, one from $75,000 to $60,000, another from $75,000 to $50,000, and the other from $30,000 to $25,000. The harbor of Toledo is cut down now for the first time. In the last bill it was not reduced. It seems to me that this creates a clear case of geographical injustice as well as of commercial injustice. Therefore I cannot, for one, submit to see this done without making an explanation to the Senate and showing that while the committee have no doubt done the best they could under all the circumstances, they have allowed local interests to control to a greater or less degree their decision in this matter. They probably have not fixed the relative importance of these different improvements. I happen to know something about the Kanawha River. As the Senator from West Virginia says, it flows into the river Ohio. I have been along the river Ohio many times, not much to the Kanawha, though once. It seems to me the committee have discriminated, against the great harbors of the country, where the commerce of the country is being conducted, in favor of local improvements. They have given to the river Kanawha more money than they have given to the river Ohio, a thousand miles long, and more money than they have given to all those great harbors that I speak of at Cleveland, Toledo, Sandusky, and other points. It seems to me therefore that they have discriminated in favor of local and State improvements against the improvements of the nation which affect the interests of many States.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I have no doubt of the importance of the harbors at Toledo, Sandusky, and Cleveland, and all the other harbors along the lake. I agree with much that the Senator from Ohio has said. Those harbors are on navigable water, and stand upon the same footing as appropriations for harbors along the sea-coast. But when I say that of Ohio it applies equally to all the harbors of Michigan. They are all upon navigable waters, all upon inland seas, none of them being rivers away up in the interior. They are all ports along the border of those inland seas; and yet for a coast of nearly eighteen hundred miles this bill, including the appropriation for the Saint Mary's Canal and the harbor of refuge, appropriates $357,000 only. It is my belief that a proper disposition of the $5,000,000 would apply more of it along those lakes; but I take into consideration the fact that here are a great multitude of local interests. I do not speak of them in an offensive sense as mere local improvements, although some of those provided in this bill may be such, but every Senator is expected to look to those appropriations which fall within his own State, not that he would or should vote for one in his own State which he would not vote for in another if it were equally deserving, but there is a clashing of separate interests. The whole sum to be appropriated is to be brought down by the determination of the Senate to $5,000,000. The committee have taken this matter in charge. They have looked over it with the best lights before them, and more than any one Senator possesses outside of the committee, and they have, I have no doubt, conscientiously and carefully done the best they possibly could to distribute this $5,000,000 among the works which are deserving of improvement. I foresee unless we stand by the committee and support the amendments generally which they have recommended, that we shall find ourselves where we found ourselves at first on the same bill. We shall find ourselves utterly at sea, and get a bill which cannot either pass this Senate or the House of Representatives, and the entire appropriation for rivers and harbors at this time must fail. For one, therefore, although I do not think that justice has been done to the harbors in the State of Michigan, and perhaps not in Ohio, perhaps not in any of the States, and that such appropriations are proposed as ought to be made, yet as we are to be limited within the $5,000,000, and the committee are better qualified for distributing that than the Senate as an entire body when all the local interests come to clash with each other, I think it is much better for us to support the committee than to undertake individually to change the different appropriations.

It seems to me there is but one result, if we begin to cut up this bill as it is now recommended by the committee, and that result will be similar to the result the other day of the bill when it came from the House. I hope therefore the committee will be sustained throughout.

Mr. HOWE. I want to say a word on this subject. When the Senator from Ohio complains of this appropriation, I sympathize with him, because undoubtedly the importance of that harbor demands a larger appropriation and the true interests of the Government require a larger appropriation. The engineers say it will take $200,000, in addition to former appropriations, to finish the work, and that that ought to be appropriated in one bill and expended in one season.

It seems to me if any business man in Christendom was doing that work on private account and had the means, he would make the expenditure in one season and finish the work; and I have no sort of doubt that that is what good sense requires of Congress; but we have deliberately refused to do it. It does not make any difference practically to the people of the United States whether we expend that $200,000 this year, or part this year and part next and part the year after next. But we have arbitrarily said to the committee "You must limit this appropriation to the sum of $5,000,000." That is the duty we assigned them. I suspect they have done the best they could. That they could be absolutely just in the distribution of a given sum of money is not easy to suppose. It would be more than human if they were so. I think the great mistake was made by us the other day when we instructed them to cut these appropriations down to an arbitrary sum. I think it was unnecessary, and yet the committee was bound by that vote and I think we had better abide by that vote and abide by the consequences of that vote. The committee which has executed that trust was as fair a one as we could select, and I have no doubt it has discharged that most difficult trust on the whole as well as any other committee would. And so, although there are some features of this bill which are extremely unwelcome to a representative from Wisconsin, I think we had better "accept the situation" and take the bill as it stands.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on the amendment now pending I desire to say something in reference to the general frame-work of this bill.

It seems to be conceded that the committee should have reported appropriations for great national works, and that it ought to be the policy to appropriate the main portion of the $5,000,000 which they were instructed to report to these works of great national importance. Now I find, when I come to look at the report of this committee on the appropriations for the State of Texas, that for continuing the work on the outer bar at Galveston Harbor they have given us $150,000 instead of $200,000 as in the House bill. The Senator in charge of this bill will see that the appropriation recommended by the Chief Engineer was $350,000, and he urged the entire appropriation for one year. As I explained the other day, that harbor is a necessity for a people now of a million and a half in the State of Texas, besides the commerce that goes out of that bay from the Indian Territory, and I will appeal to the Senators from Kansas who have had their commissioners down at Galveston, time after time, negotiating in regard to getting their shipments through that harbor, because it is about one-half nearer to salt water for them than the route by New York or any other route. It is hoped by the people of Kansas that the improvement of that harbor will be of such a character as to justify them in getting to salt water through that harbor, because it will be their cheapest route. The same is true of Nebraska. When we come to such a work of undoubted national importance, because it is the undoubted policy of this Government to get the vast shipments of cotton that go through that harbor as well as the vast amount of wheat that can go out from that harbor either in the shape of wheat or flour, it is unreasonable to cut down this appropriation of $350,000 recommended by the Chief of Engineers for the most important harbor, in my judgment, on the Gulf coast save and except that of New Orleans, a harbor that sends out now 600,000 bales of cotton, besides the immense outflow of wheat and of cattle; a harbor which is seeking to obtain the business of Kansas and Nebraska by making it cheaper for them to go out in that way than in any other way because it is about one-half nearer salt water than any other route. I ask if it is reasonable that this appropriation should be cut down, not only to the amount given by the House, $200,000, but to only $150,000, as against $350,000 which the Chief of Engineers says is a necessity to the improvement of the outer bar so as to save the vast amount of lighterage, which I explained the other day the people have to pay by reason of that bar being there.

Then when I come to the appropriation for Galveston Bay above the city of Galveston, carrying all the vast trade that accumulates at the city of Houston, I find that they have reduced that from $100,000 down to $75,000. It would be useless to talk about a comparison between the vast trade that goes through Galveston Bay and over the outer bar at Galveston and the trade of rivers for which they give double the amount which is given here. Upon what theory this bill is based, as it is now presented, I must confess I am totally unable to understand.

I make these remarks now because I fully appreciate the statement made by the Senator from Ohio, and I for one shall vote to non-concur in the amendment made here. I will, in other words, vote for all those works which are unquestionably of national importance, such as those that I represent and which have already received the indorsement not only of the House but the indorsement of the Senate, and on a test vote of three to one were decided in my favor; and yet the committee have utterly disregarded in this bill the action of the House and the action of the Senate on a test vote. I do not think that is right, and I for one shall not vote in favor of this bill of the Senate committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the five-minute rule be applied to this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the five-minute rule be applied to this bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SPENCER. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On agreeing to the amendment pertaining to the harbor of Toledo, Ohio.

Mr. SPENCER. If in order I wish to make an amendment on page 9.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order until the amendments of the committee have been acted upon.

Mr. SPENCER. It is an amendment which the committee will accept, I think.

Mr. SARGENT. It can be offered afterward.

Mr. THURMAN. This bill comes back after having been recommitted with instructions to report a bill so that the aggregate amount of appropriation should not be over $5,000,000. I am of course opposed to increasing the aggregate amount of this bill beyond five millions. I said in the debate before that if there were more meritorious cases than those in Ohio I for one was willing that the Ohio appropriations might be cut down, although they were very small indeed. Well, the committee have cut them down, I see, without a single exception, and I do not complain of that if the appropriations they have made are more meritorious than those that are contained in the bill for Ohio; but I for one do not quite understand that they are; it may be for want of information. There are some things that I really do not think are at all as meritorious as the provisions of the bill in respect to the ports in Ohio.

For the improvement of the harbor at Toledo, Ohio, the House appropriated $75,000. The committee cut it down to $60,000, a reduction of $15,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Sandusky City the House appropriated $30,000. The committee have cut it down to $25,000.

For the improvement of the breakwater at Cleveland Harbor the House appropriated $75,000, and the committee have cut it down to $50,000, and I believe they have stricken out the appropriations for Ashtabula and Fairport, and perhaps one other. At the same time that they have stricken out those they have increased the House appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Oswego, New York, from $70,000 to $90,000, being an increase of $20,000; for the improvement of the Hudson River from $25,000 to $66,000, being an increase of $41,000.

Mr. CONKLING. But the Senator must remember there that another appropriation for the Hudson River is stricken out altogether. It is all put together in that one appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. There were two twenty-five thousand dollar appropriations in the House bill for the Hudson River. We put both in one appropriation.

Mr. THURMAN. Then the increase is $16,000 for the Hudson. Then for the improvement of the Missouri River above the mouth of the Yellowstone the committee put in of their own motion $20,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is to facilitate military operations.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. THURMAN. If I am to be interrupted, my five minutes will soon be out.

Mr. PADDOCK. I will not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. THURMAN. Then, for the improvement of the Rush Chute, in the harbor of Burlington, Iowa, $10,000 is appropriated. That is new matter; for the improvement of the harbor at Fort Madison, Iowa, $10,000; and so on.

Now let me say one word about the specific amendment before the Senate as to Toledo. There are but two ports in all the United States whose business in grain equals that of Toledo. They are Chicago and Milwaukee. Toledo is the third port in the United States for the shipment of grain.

Mr. CONKLING. Where is Buffalo?

Mr. THURMAN. I speak of the shipments. Toledo is the third port as shown by the reports of the boards of trade of the various cities. In addition to that it has an immense business in iron from Lake Superior and in lumber from Michigan. It is one of the most important ports on Lake Erie, and there is no city on the lake that is growing much more rapidly than the city of Toledo, and there is no harbor on the lake that needs improvement much more than that. The only trouble in my mind is whether there is any difference really between $60,000 in a year and $75,000, the difference is so small. The truth is, if the situation of the Treasury permitted it, the appropriation ought to be large enough to go on with the work necessary there to complete it, but it is not. But I do think really that while I will not vote to increase the aggregate of this bill one dollar, there are appropriations that might much better be left off than to strike down Toledo from $75,000 to $60,000.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, the committee have done their best to obey the instructions of the Senate. I doubt if the committee supposed that as the result of their work Senators would be satisfied where reductions were made in the appropriations for works in their States; and yet, by the vote of the Senate almost unanimous, not quite, it was determined in effect that these reductions should be made. Now, it is very well perhaps to criticise item by item, and say "Why did you cut off here and why there, and why not cut off more in another place?" The committee can only reply generally that we did the best we could. There is one rule, however, to be observed when Senators from States like Ohio and New York rise to criticise the changes which have been made in the items referring to their States. All those harbors to which special reference has been made have had heretofore the fostering care of the Government, and immense amounts of money have been expended upon them, upon some of them reaching to millions. This very harbor of Toledo has had appropriated and expended by the Government for it heretofore $437,700. That ought to leave a harbor somewhere in a decent condition to receive the commerce which enters it, and Toledo, as the committee understand, is in very good condition. Of course there is some new work, but the position of that work at the present time is not of such a character that ought to require the sum of $75,000 this year more than it requires the sum of $60,000 or $150,000. That is to say, the amount of money which the committee report for Toledo can be judiciously and economically expended and will advance the work so much. If this were an entirely new harbor, with this commerce pressing to enter it, with this business to be done, there would be some force in the objection which is made that we make but a small appropriation. But, on the contrary, as I have said, this and some others have received from time to time, year after year, before any of us Senators had seats on this floor, appropriations at the hands of Congress for the purpose of accommodating their commerce, which has been growing up gradually year by year, and the improvements have kept pace with it.

I do not know but that the criticism might be just of some of the matters which are retained in the bill. It is barely possible that the committee should have disregarded the fact that the Great Kanawha River received last year $300,000 from the Government in accordance with the recommendations of the engineers and the apparent support of the Committee on Transportation making some recommendation on the matter; that the House had considered this still of great importance, and had made an appropriation of that amount to continue the works which were begun upon a considerable scale last year. We did not feel authorized to say, "This is a useless work." The Committee on Transportation were entirely mistaken so far as they sanctioned it; the previous Congress were throwing away $300,000 appropriated for it. I do not remember in the debates on the bill of last year that these objections were made when the pretty blunt edge of a wedge was about to be inserted in the Treasury for the benefit of this appropriation, that we were then told by the Senator from Ohio or anybody else that it was throwing away $300,000, and that the Muskingum, which had been improved by the State of Ohio at its own expense, was of equal importance, and this ought to be improved at the expense of the State of West Virginia. We got none of that information at that time when we might have paused. But now that $300,000 have been expended by the silence of these gentlemen who seem so well informed, we are told that this committee errs greatly because it comes in and recommends another appropriation less in amount but for the objects then sanctioned.

I do not know that I am entirely satisfied with this bill myself. I think I could do a little growling so far as my State is concerned. Nearly one-half in amount and one-third in number of objects there are cut down. Still I may vote for the bill because I think there are some objects in this bill, one of them in my own State and many in other States, where to omit all appropriation whatever would lead to an injury to the public service, there would be a deterioration of work; there are some which are in such a condition that they ought still to be carried on; and therefore I am disposed to vote for the bill although there may be items in the bill both of reduction and of addition, which if we could do exactly what is right would be changed; but I defy any committee to use more care than the Committee on Appropriations did use in this matter or to exercise a greater desire of impartiality or to labor more earnestly than we did to carry out the instructions of the Senate in the reduction of this bill.

If the line is broken in any particular, if the recommendation of the committee is not stuck to by the Senate and you increase Toledo, then I ask why shall we not increase Dunkirk; why shall we not restore some items which have been struck out and which are considered to be something more than of local importance? We were under the necessity of reporting the bill back in the shape in which it now is, if we wish to follow the instructions of the Senate, and any further changes made would simply have increased the dissatisfaction of some Senators while they might have gone a little way to relieve the dissatisfaction of others, but the general result would have been about the same.

Mr. WRIGHT. Before the vote is taken on this question, I wish to say one word. Thus far this session, and at previous sessions for that matter, in all appropriation bills my habit has been to follow the committee. It is utterly impossible that I or any other member of the Senate should undertake to follow the work of these appropriation bills and see what just should be done. In following the committee when the bill was before us heretofore, it was not because I approved in every respect their recommendation either increasing or decreasing amounts or changing in any way the House bill, but because I felt that they understood the question very much better than I did, and that it was safer for me to follow them.

Mr. President, my happiness is only extreme and unmixed during a session of the Senate when we come to an appropriation bill for rivers and harbors, for while I know that upon other appropriation bills and other bills that are brought in here personal considerations influence, local considerations influence, partisan considerations influence, when we come to an appropriation bill for rivers and harbors every person is disinterested and no member of the Senate is influenced in the least by personal and local considerations, and we come to its consideration entirely divested of anything of this kind. It has been so heretofore; it is so now. I know that sometimes when the questions have been before us I have occasionally heard my friend from North Carolina talk about the French Broad Creek.

Several SENATORS. River.

Mr. WRIGHT. River; I beg his pardon for calling it a creek.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was a creek last year. It has grown to be a river now.

Mr. WRIGHT. I hear something from other Senators about Muscleshell Shoals. I am always certain to see my friend from West Virginia on hand taking care of the Great Kanawha as he ought to, my two friends from North Carolina ever diligent in taking care of the interests there, while my friend from New York, if it becomes necessary, has something to say about Hell Gate, and my friend from New Jersey, not unmindful of the interests of New Jersey, but of course entirely disinterested and not influenced by any local consideration, also takes care of the interests of that State. I have never failed to observe that our excellent President is watchful of that seventeen, not thousand, but hundred miles of coast that Michigan has. We have heard year after year about the seventeen hundred miles of coast of Michigan, and his good Christian friend and assistant here is always ready to back him in that. Occasionally my colleague also has something to say about Iowa, taking care of the interests of that State. We have not very much this year. I am sure we could get more, not from any interested or selfish consideration, but because we are looking to the interests of that great State washed by those great rivers which flow, as has been said, like the affections of a people to an inseparable union. We ask a very little thing for the Mississippi so far as Iowa is concerned. I confess that I have regretted somewhat that my colleague who has the bill in charge has neglected entirely the interests of the place where I reside. I reside, sir, at the capital of that great State. There, sir, is a great river running entirely through that State; its two main branches come together at that town; and saying nothing of the coal that is floated upon it, nothing of the wood, nothing of the immense commerce that there is there in every other respect, I feel warranted in saying from actual statistics that there are from nine hundred and sixty-five to nine hundred and seventy pounds of maple-sugar coming down there every year. [Laughter.] Yet that is neglected entirely in this bill.

I say, therefore, that I am always extremely happy when this bill gets before us, because I feel that we can legislate entirely disinterestedly about it and are not influenced at all by local considerations. I followed the committee before and I propose to do it again, and I humbly submit that the best thing we can do in this, the almost closing hour, I hope, of this session, is to take this bill as it is reported and dispose of it. It will be utterly impossible that any one of us can have this bill just as he would like to have it. I was more than pleased that the Senator from New York opened by saying that while there were important interests to be consulted in connection with the ports to which he referred, he surrendered them all. Others have done the same thing; and now I propose that we shall vote this bill through as it stands; and if others can surrender so far as Hell Gate and Toledo and these other places are concerned, I shall not insist upon an appropriation so far as my own town is concerned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 68, to reduce the appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Sandusky, Ohio, from $30,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 72, to decrease the appropriation for a breakwater at Cleveland Harbor, Ohio, from $75,000 to $50,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope my friend from Iowa and the whole Senate will be generous. There is a work that ought to be continued in the manner in which it has been commenced. I will not make a bargain with the Senator, but I shall probably behave myself very well if he will allow this item to stand as the House left it, because I know there is a great city where this work is going on and I know it is important. I hope he will therefore not insist on the amendment, but let the appropriation stand as it came from the House.

Mr. WITHERS. We give you $8,000 for the pier.

Mr. SHERMAN. But if you do not mend the pier you will have to pay $150,000 next year.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust my friend from Ohio will waive the question of this $25,000 this year. I think the harbor of Cleveland can get along with the amount we reported, especially so as the engineer says that is an ample sum to carry on the work.

Mr. SHERMAN. O, no; he does not say that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, as lines 73 and 74, the following:

For repair of east pier at Cleveland, Ohio, $8,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to have the Senator in charge of this bill read to us the recommendation of the engineer for that performance.

Mr. ALLISON. I am rather taken by surprise at the request of the Senator from Vermont. I read it here when this question was under discussion before. This is an old pier and it is important that it should be repaired, and the amount required is $8,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But is there any estimate or recommendation for it from the Chief of Engineers?

Mr. ALLISON. There is a letter from the Chief of Engineers. I have in my hand a letter of the Secretary of War relating to this subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear it read, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLISON. I will send it to the desk.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am in pursuit of information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, June 19, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit letter of the Chief of Engineers and plan of Cleveland Harbor, illustrating the encroachments of railroad companies on the United States east pier, and the condition of the inner end of said pier, in reply to your letter of the 2d instant, and beg to say that these papers exhibit the state of the case. As the question of title to the property and the right of the Pittsburgh and Cleveland Railroad Company to occupy it is now being investigated by the Department of Justice, this Department feels unable to make any specific recommendation in regard to the improvement of the pier.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. D. CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

Hon. H. B. PAYNE,
House of Representatives.

Mr. ALLISON. There is also a letter from the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, D. C., June 3, 1876

SIR: I submit herewith copy of a communication of the 2d instant from Hon. H. B. PAYNE, and have to state that the condition of the inner end of the east pier of Cleveland Harbor is such as to require immediate repair to prevent its destruction and material injury to the harbor of Cleveland, and that the needed repairs may cost some $8,000.

Respecting this pier, built by the United States, it is to be remarked that as far back as 1853 it was taken possession of and occupied by certain railroad companies for their own especial use and benefit, and has been retained in their possession to the present day, they having refused to vacate it even for repair, the necessity for some of which has grown out of their abuse of the structure. As the Engineer Department has been unable to get possession of the pier, no part of any appropriation by Congress has been expended upon it for repair. The subject was submitted to the attention of Congress in the report of the Chief of Engineers January 26, 1867, but no remedy has been provided.

For these reasons I have not felt authorized to recommend that any money should be expended upon the repair of the pier by the United States, but have suggested to the honorable Secretary of War to require the Pittsburgh and Cleveland Railroad Company to make the needed repairs, and to take steps preliminary to a suit to eject the company from its occupancy and use. Whether it is probable that these efforts will effect the object sought, I am unable to surmise even.

It is further submitted whether the circumstances would not justify the granting of authority to the Secretary of War to yield the free occupancy and use to the Pittsburgh and Cleveland Railroad Company of such portion of the east pier as he might deem advisable upon the condition that the company immediately repair the pier and keep it in repair in future, the United States reserving a right of way over it at all times.

I would suggest that this letter be transmitted to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, which has the river and harbor bill before it.

A sketch of the harbor piers is inclosed.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Brigadier-General and Chief of Engineers.

Hon. J. D. CAMERON,
Secretary of War.

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senate will observe, here is a pier built by the United States many years ago, taken possession of by a railway company in part and a dispute arising between the railway company and the proper engineer officers at this port. Having these letters before us, the committee believed the true way to test the right of the United States to this property was to make a specific appropriation for the repair of this pier, and in that manner have the proper officers of the United States take possession of it. Until some specific arrangement of this sort is made, as a matter of course this railway company will continue to encroach upon the rights of commerce at this harbor and to occupy a portion of this great work belonging to the United States. With this view, the committee inserted this small item of $8,000.

Mr. WEST. The condition of the pier impairs the harbor.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly. That is clearly shown in the letters.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, this illustrates this river and harbor bill very well. Many years ago the United States built what is called the east pier on the eastern side of the Cuyahoga River, which empties into Lake Erie, a little tributary that falls in there, which makes a handy harbor for the town undoubtedly. The State of Ohio granted to the Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company—as I assume, because I have not the books before me but I take it it must be so—the right to build a railway to the navigable waters of Lake Erie, on the shores of the Cuyahoga Creek. They built down alongside of this east pier, as is shown in the diagram which my friend has handed me, from the Engineer Department, and so building down they took possession of this east pier, being within the jurisdiction and on the soil of the sovereign State of Ohio under that grant, and have occupied it for their warehouses and tracks and for lading vessels alongside their tracks, and so on. Now, after many years of uninterrupted and adverse occupation, the railway company denying and defying the authority of the United States to interfere with their rights under the State of Ohio, it is proposed to test their title to that property by appropriating $8,000 to repair it. That is rather the most extraordinary proposition that I have ever heard set forth lately since we have dissolved the mob and got into regular constitutional jurisdiction again.

If the object of the Committee on Appropriations is to test the right that this railway company has exercised for many years in occupying this pier under a grant from the State of Ohio, the best way to do it is to direct the Attorney-General of the United States to institute proceedings, and eject them from that property of the United States; and if the Senate wishes to appropriate $8,000, if that be necessary, to put the wheels of the law in motion to ascertain whether the United States has a right to the pier, or whether this railway company has, which it now occupies, and has for many years under the State of Ohio, I should not much oppose it; but this proceeds on the idea that you are going to trouble this railway company and disturb its claim, and test it by repairing the wharf, which it will be very glad indeed to have us do. If that be so I do not understand the best methods of testing a disputed title.

You will perceive in the report of the Secretary of War, and in the report of the engineer in charge, coming through General Humphreys as I suppose it does, that the War Department has thought it improper to recommend any money to repair the pier until the right of the United States to have the pier at all shall first be tested. Here is a corporation under the laws of the State of Ohio occupying this property as a wharf and for store-houses and things of that sort, and now we are blandly called upon in this time of public distress to give $8,000 to repair that property in order to show that we have got a right to it.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on adopting this amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Vermont assumes a fact that is not true in order to base his argument against the Government repairing its own pier. Take these papers together, and this is the fact: The State of Ohio has never granted to this railroad company a single thing that belongs to the United States of America. The pier was built by the United States on its own ground. It is a double line of piers running into the lake at the mouth of the Cuyahoga River just as the piers do at the mouth of Buffalo Creek. The river itself is not a very large river, but forms a very fine harbor, which does a business of about $200,000,000 a year. It is not a very large stream, but the piers are the property of the United States. The State of Ohio has given to a railroad company a grant of a right of way along certain lands. The railroad property lies alongside this pier. They own the land, they own the riparian rights, and like all other riparian owners they have extended gradually their property out, out, out into the lake to get wharfage and ground on which to do a very large railroad business. Still the right of the United States to its pier is intact; so far as I know no one questions that right, no one disputes that right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The engineer says the contrary.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; there is no dispute as to the right of the United States to this pier; but there is a controversy between the United States and the railroad company as to the encroachments on the outer bank of the pier and as to the right of the railroad company to fill in its ground toward the lake. The railroad company may be a trespasser. If so, the United States ought at least to assert its rights in its own courts and maintain its rights.

Now, what is the question presented by this amendment? In the march of time there is a wear and tear and gradual encroachment on the east pier of this great harbor. The map drawn by the engineers shows the exact condition of affairs. A part of the wall is crumbling into decay on the east pier. Remember that crumbling is in the harbor, as is shown here. The wall is crumbling away and it is almost broken, until it now threatens to endanger the whole of the pier. The railroad company owning property on the outside of the pier have filled it up and are using it for their railroad operations in loading chiefly iron and coal in the great business between Lake Superior and the coal regions. They have filled in and are occupying this, but this breach is in the Government pier and in the harbor.

Mr. CONKLING. Now, may I ask a question? Is it not true that the business brought that pier by the railroad has caused, or assisted in, this injury?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know that; but suppose it to be so, then ought not the United States to assert its power to prevent this? Will it in the mean time allow this pier to be broken down in the controversy between the United States engineers and this railroad company? As to the effect of the building of these works, which they built under their riparian rights, would you allow this great pier and this great harbor to be obstructed for the want of $8,000? That is the whole case.

DEATH OF HON. EDWARD Y. PARSONS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, communicated to the Senate a copy of the proceedings this day had in the House in reference to the death of Hon. EDWARD Y. PARSONS, late a member from the State of Kentucky.

Mr. MCCREERY called for the reading of the proceedings of the House of Representatives.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
August 1, 1876.

Resolved, That this House has heard with deep regret of the death of Hon. EDWARD Y. PARSONS, late a member of this House from the State of Kentucky.

Resolved, That as a testimony of respect to his memory the officers and members of this body will wear the usual badge of mourning for the space of thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Clerk of this House to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to communicate a copy of these proceedings to the Senate, and that as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased this House do now adjourn.

Mr. MCCREERY. My friend and colleague of the House of Representatives, Hon. EDWARD YOUNG PARSONS, is no more. He has been cut off in the flower of his youth and in the strength of his manhood. He entered political life at the opening of this session of Congress, and before its close his mortal remains have been consigned to the grave. He inherited the stalwart form, the easy grace, and the commanding talents of his father, whose fame as an actor and as a pulpit orator is still fresh and green in the memories of the American people. If the son had been spared, his gentleness, his culture, and his genius would have placed the name on a foundation more solid and enduring. In person, in acquirement, and in mental endowment he stood far above ordinary men, and, take him all in all, we are not likely soon to "look upon his like again." But he is gone! The devoted husband, the fond father, the steadfast friend, and the able and incorruptible public servant sleeps with his fathers. We will forget his faults and remember his many virtues.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, the sad event announced so feelingly to the Senate by my colleague admonishes us that death comes to the young as to the old. EDWARD YOUNG PARSONS was among the youngest members of the House. He took his seat for the first time at the beginning of the present session. Gifted in intellect, of high culture, and possessed of varied information, he gave promise and great hope of brilliant distinction; but death has set its seal upon all these bright hopes. Young as he is, he sleeps in a new-made grave.

I beg leave, sir, to offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with sincere sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. EDWARD YOUNG PARSONS, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Kentucky.

Resolved, That from a sincere respect for the memory of the deceased the members of the Senate will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect for the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously; and (at five oclock and five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, August 1, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 4053) to further authorize the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to purchase supplies for the Indian Bureau in open market;

A bill (H. R. No. 4054) to continue the provisions of an act entitled "An act to continue the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;'" and

A bill (H. R. No. 4055) to continue the public printing.

The message further announced that the Senate having proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to consider the bill entitled "An act for the relief of Nelson Tiffany," returned to the House of Representatives by the President of the United States with his objections, and sent by the House of Representatives to the Senate with the message of the President returning the same, the Senate had passed the bill, two-thirds agreeing to the same.

The message further announced that the Senate was ready to proceed with the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap and to receive the managers on the part of the House, and that the Senate Chamber was prepared with accommodations for the reception of the House of Representatives.

IN MEMORY OF HON. EDWARD Y. PARSONS.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent that it may be regarded as the order of this House that this day at four o'clock p. m. the House will proceed to pay the last honors to the memory of our late colleague from Kentucky, Hon. EDWARD Y. PARSONS.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

CAPTAIN EDWARD S. MEYER.

Mr. BANNING. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill No. 36, which has been returned by the Senate with a slight amendment. It is a bill restoring to the active list of the Army Captain Edward S. Meyer. The General of the Army wishes to assign him to the Seventh Cavalry, which is now in great need of officers. I ask that the bill be taken up and the Senate amendments concurred in at this time.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BANNING. I hope the gentleman will not do that now. The unfortunate Seventh Cavalry is very much in need of officers, and the General of the Army desires to assign Captain Meyer to that regiment.

Mr. BLAND. I have this to say; there is a bill now pending in the morning hour——

Mr. BANNING. There will be no debate.

Mr. BLAND. Very well. I give notice that I will call the regular order after this bill has been disposed of.

There was no objection, and the bill (H. R. No. 36) to restore the name of Captain Edward S. Meyer to the active list of the Army was taken from the Speaker's table with the Senate amendment thereto.

The amendment of the Senate was to add to the bill the following:

Provided, That the time he has been on the retired list shall not be counted in his service in getting promotion.

Mr. BANNING. I move that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BANNING moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPENDITURES IN THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. BEEBE. The Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department have instructed me to submit their report to the House at this time. There are two reports, one by the majority, and one by the minority prepared by my colleague, [Mr. BAKER,] and they ask that the reports be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. HALE. I object to reporting at any time.

Mr. BEEBE. Will the gentleman object to making the report a special order at some particular time?

Mr. HALE. I must object to that now.

Mr. BEEBE. Then I ask that the reports be printed and recommitted.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the testimony being printed——

Mr. BEEBE. The testimony is already printed.

Mr. HALE. And to the reports being printed, in order that both sides may be represented.

Mr. BEEBE. Does the gentleman object to the reports being made a special order?

Mr. HALE. Yes, for I do not know what time we may want to adjourn or what other business of greater importance may come before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to receiving the report of the majority of the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, together with the views of the minority, and having them printed and recommitted?

Mr. HURLBUT. Not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be understood.

There was no objection, and the order to print and recommit was made.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BLAND. I now call for the regular order.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. In a remark which I made yesterday during the speech of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. WHITTHORNE] I referred to a contract made by the Navy Department with Messrs. Seyfert, McManus & Co., of Philadelphia, and I characterized that contract as improvident, wasteful, and extravagant. I have received within a few minutes a telegram from Seyfert, McManus & Co. which I deem it my duty to place before the House. It is as follows:

Our contract with Navy Department embraced considerable quantities of iron, for which we paid ten cents per pound, and for the beam we paid six cents, less 2½ per cent. Will you please correct your statement in reference to price of latter, as an act of justice to the Department and ourselves?

I desire to have this telegram entered upon the RECORD in justice to the Secretary of the Navy and in justice to Messrs. Seyfert, McManus & Co. But at the same time I desire to repeat the statement which I made yesterday, that if the Secretary of the Navy had advertised this contract——

Mr. BANKS. I rise to a question of order. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] wishes to re-open this question in regard to the Secretary of the Navy there are others who desire to reply to him. The reading of the telegram is a proper thing; but I do not think it is the gentleman's right to go into an argument upon that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that any extended discussion of this matter could hardly be regarded as a question of privilege; but he has great confidence in the discretion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. The question of privilege which I wish to bring before the House——

Mr. BANKS. This is no question of privilege at all.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. When the correctness of my statement is called in question, I certainly have the right to re-affirm it as a matter of fact.

Mr. BANKS. I make the point that this is no question of privilege at all. It is altogether by the grace of the House that the gentleman speaks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It certainly is not a question of privilege.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Then, Mr. Speaker, bowing of course to the decision of the Chair, I have only to say that this telegram in justice to these parties should be put upon the record.

Mr. HOLMAN, (to Mr. HEWITT, of New York.) Finish your remarks.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I understand that I have no right to finish my remarks.

Mr. RANDALL. The objection came after the gentleman had taken the floor without objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman to have concluded his remarks; but the question may be raised whether this is a matter of personal privilege. The Chair is inclined to think that it clearly is not; but the question may be submitted to the House.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I understand that there was no objection to the gentleman rising to a question of privilege and making an explanation of this telegram.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Do I understand that I have not the right to say on this floor that I re-affirm the correctness of the statement I made?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has made that statement and the telegram has been presented.

COINAGE OF GOLD AND SILVER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being called for, the morning hour begins at twenty-three minutes after twelve o'clock. The pending business in the morning hour is the consideration of a bill reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining, being the bill (H. R. No. 3635) to utilize the product of gold and silver mines, and for other purposes. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BLAND. As this is a question of very great importance to the people of this country, and as the friends of the bill desire debate upon it, I ask consent of the House that the debate continue to-day until four o'clock, the time already assigned for other business, and that to-morrow morning immediately after the reading of the Journal I shall have the right to demand the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether he intends to allow debate on this bill and an opportunity for amendment?

Mr. BLAND. I have not said anything about amendments, simply debate.

Mr. KASSON. How much time does the gentleman propose to allow for debate?

Mr. BLAND. Until four o'clock this evening.

Mr. KASSON. But I understand this bill to be in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri. It is that by unanimous consent the order be made that the debate on this bill shall continue to-day until four o'clock, the time set apart for the announcement of the death of the late Representative from Kentucky, Mr. PARSONS.

Mr. KASSON. I must object to the bill going out of the morning hour. Other business should have its chance outside the morning hour.

Mr. BLAND. I wish it understood that the friends of this bill have no objection to debate; they desire to offer every fair opportunity for it; but the opponents of the bill filibustered the first morning hour, and now——

Mr. KASSON. That is not quite correct. The point of order was an honest one and honestly urged.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was to gain time.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to discusss this question, but to ask the Clerk to read certain sections of the Revised Statutes in reference to it showing by what means the silver in this country has been demonetized, and showing that by the act of 1869 it was recognized as coin in full effect with all men for all debts, public as well as private. I now ask the Clerk to read from page 700 of the Revised Statutes, section 3511.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3511. The gold coins of the United States shall be a one-dollar piece, which, at the standard weight of twenty-five and eight-tenths grains, shall be the unit of value; a quarter-eagle or two-and-a-half-dollar piece; a three-dollar piece; a half-eagle, or five-dollar piece; an eagle, or ten-dollar piece; and a double-eagle, or twenty-dollar piece. And the standard weight of the gold dollar shall be twenty-five and eight-tenths grains; of the quarter-eagle, or two-and-a-half-dollar piece, sixty-four and a half grains; of the three-dollar piece, seventy-seven and four-tenths grains; of the half-eagle or five-dollar piece, one hundred and twenty-nine grains; of the eagle, or ten-dollar piece, two hundred and fifty-eight grains; of the double-eagle, or twenty dollar piece, five hundred and sixteen grains.

Mr. BLAND. I now ask the Clerk to read from page 712 of the Revised Statutes, section 3586.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3586. The silver coins of the United States shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding $5 in any one payment.

Mr. BLAND. That will do. I call the attention of the House to these sections of the Revised Statutes for the purpose of showing that by section 3511 the gold dollar was made the unit of value and by section 3586 the silver coins of the United States are made a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding $5, thus showing the demonetization of silver by the act of February 12, 1873.

I now desire the Clerk to read on page 735 of the Revised Statutes sections 3693 and 3694.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3693. The faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment in coin or its equivalent of all the obligations of the United States not bearing interest, known as United States notes, and of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of any such obligation has expressly provided that the same may be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver. But none of the interest-bearing obligations not already due shall be redeemed or paid before maturity, unless at such time United States notes are convertible into coin at the option of the holder, or unless at such time bonds of the United States bearing a lower rate of interest than the bonds to be redeemed can be sold at par in coin. The faith of the United States is also solemnly pledged to make provisions at the earliest practicable period for the redemption of the United States notes in coin.

SEC. 3694. The coin paid for duties on imported goods shall be set apart as a special fund, and shall be applied as follows:

First. To the payment in coin of the interest on the bonds and notes of the United States.

Second. To the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct.

Third. The residue to be paid into the Treasury.

Mr. BLAND. That is the act of the 18th of March, 1869. By that act silver was specially recognized as coin competent to be applied to the payment of the public debt, and the statute provides a fund out of moneys received from duties on imports and mentions the word "coin" without regard to whether it is silver or gold coin, but simply the word "coin," showing under that act silver at that time being a coin of full legal-tender was receivable by law for duties on imports, and is by law a legal tender for all public debts. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire further to discuss this question, knowing that every effort will be made to defeat its consideration in the morning hour, and I therefore now demand the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the gentleman demands the previous question I ask him to yield to me for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I am willing to let the amendment be read.

Mr. LYNCH. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. BLAND. I have no objection to having the amendment read for information, but I decline to yield to any amendment to the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask this may be pending when the previous question is called, as an additional section to the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I yield simply to have it read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

That so much of the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, as reads as follows, to wit: "And on and after the 1st day of January, 1879, the Secretary of the Treasury shall redeem in coin the United States legal-tender notes then outstanding on their presentation for redemption at the office of the assistant treasurer of the United States in the city of New York, in sums of not less than $50, be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

Mr. BLAND. While I am in favor of that amendment, I must decline to have this bill embarrassed by it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is but one remedy, and that is, if gentlemen do not desire the previous question sustained, to vote it down.

Mr. KASSON rose.

Mr. BLAND. I decline to yield to this or any other amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the gentleman from Missouri whether he will not allow me the same time to say a word as he has taken up himself in stating the question?

Mr. BLAND. I insist on my demand for the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. Then, if the gentleman will allow no debate, I move that the House do now adjourn; and upon that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LYNCH. As a member of the committee I rise to a question of order.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LYNCH] has an amendment which the committee agreed might be voted on.

Mr. LYNCH. As a member of the committee that reported this bill I desire to call the attention of the Chair——

Mr. BLAND. Let me say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] that I am willing he shall be heard after the previous question is seconded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LYNCH] on a point of order, and will hear him on the point of order. A point of order is not the introduction of an amendment.

Mr. LYNCH. As a member of the committee which reported this bill, the chairman of the committee will remember that it was distinctly understood that the minority of the committee should be allowed to propose two amendments and have a separate vote taken thereon.

Mr. BLAND. I have yielded to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LYNCH] for that purpose.

Mr. LYNCH. It was agreed that that should be done before the previous question was ordered.

Mr. BLAND. I have yielded for that purpose.

Mr. LYNCH. One of the amendments was to be proposed by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. CASWELL,] and, if I understand it correctly, his amendment is as follows——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman must forward his amendments to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. LYNCH. I am stating them because I have not got them here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must protect the rights of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND.] That gentleman has not yielded for discussion.

Mr. LYNCH. I simply desire to state what are the amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will submit his amendments in writing and send them to the Clerk's desk. The Chair must insist on the observance of the rules.

Mr. LYNCH. I will prepare the amendments and send them to the desk.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] to yield to me for a moment while I present the protest of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New York.

Mr. BLAND. I will yield to the gentleman after the previous question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] allow the amendments of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LYNCH] to be considered as pending?

Mr. BLAND. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Missouri will allow my amendment to be offered.

Mr. BLAND. I have stated that I do not yield for that amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the demand of the gentleman from Missouri for the previous question on the bill and amendments, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] moves that the House adjourn.

Mr. KASSON. And on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAND. Let it be understood that I have offered to yield to the gentleman from Iowa after the previous question is seconded.

Mr. KASSON. Let it be understood, also, that if the previous question is seconded there is no opportunity for amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BLAND and Mr. KASSON made remarks which were inaudible from the rappings of the Speaker's gavel.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Pending the motion to adjourn, I move that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Friday next; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays on the motion of Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, there were—ayes 35, noes 84.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: whether the time consumed in this filibustering comes out of the morning hour?

Mr. KASSON. Unquestionably.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly it does.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, I hope not. [Laughter.]

The question was taken on the motion that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Friday next, and there were—yeas 2, nays 183, not voting 100; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Hoge, and Nash—2.

NAYS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Cannon, Cason, Cate, Caulfield, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Conger, Cook, Cox, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Davis, Davy, Dibrell, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Evans, Felton, Finley, Forney, Fort, Foster, Franklin, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gause, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Gunter, Hale, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, John T. Harris, Hartridge, Hartzell, Haymond, Henkle, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Holman, Hopkins, House, Hubbell, Hunton, Hurlbut, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, Knott, Franklin Landers, Lane, Lawrence, Le Moyne, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynch, Mackey, Maish, MacDougall, McCrary, McFarland, Metcalfe, Miller, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Neal, New, Norton, O'Brien, O'Neill, Page, Payne, John F. Philips, Pierce, Poppleton, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Miles Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Scales, Schleicher, Seelye, Sheakley, Singleton, Sinnickson, Slemons, A. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Strait, Stevenson, Stone, Teese, Terry, Thompson, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Turney, Van Vorhes, Waddell, Wait, Gilbert C. Walker, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whiting, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Woodburn, Yeates, and Young—183.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Adams, Ashe, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, Bass, Blair, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Bradley, William R. Brown, Burleigh, Campbell, Candler, Caswell, Chapin, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cowan, Culberson, Darrall, DeBolt, Denison, Douglas, Durand, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Fuller, Goodin, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Henry R. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hooker, Hoskins, Hunter, Hurd, Hyman, Frank Jones, King, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lapham, Leavenworth, Levy, Lord, Lynde, Magoon, McDill, McMahon, Money, Odell, Oliver, Packer, Phelps, William A. Phillips, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Purman, Sobieski Ross, Sayler, Schumaker, Smalls, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Springer, Stenger, Stowell, Swann, Tarbox, Thomas, Washington Townsend, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, and Woodworth—100.

So the motion of Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, said: I am paired upon this question with Mr. ELY. If he were present I think he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question then recurred upon the motion of Mr. KASSON, that the House adjourn, upon which the yeas and nays were called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 2, nays 186, not voting 98; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Hoge and Hurd—2.

NAYS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blair, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Caulfield, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Clymer, Cochrane, Conger, Cook, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Davis, Dibrell, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durand, Durham, Eames, Eden, Evans, Felton, Finley, Forney, Fort, Foster, Franklin, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, John T. Harris, Hartridge, Hartzell, Haymond, Hays, Henderson, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Holman, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Hubbell, Hunton, Hurlbut, Thomas L. Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, Knott, Franklin Landers, Lane, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynch, Mackey, Maish, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, McFarland, Metcalfe, Miller, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Neal, New, Norton, O'Brien, O'Neill, Page, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Poppleton, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Miles Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Scales, Seelye, Singleton, Sinnickson, Slemons, A. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Strait, Stevenson, Stone, Teese, Terry, Thompson, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Turney, Van Vorhes, Waddell, Wait, Gilbert C. Walker, Walsh, Ward, Warren, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Yeates, and Young—186.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Adams, Ashe, John H. Baker, Bass, Bliss, Blount, Bradley, Burleigh, Candler, Cate, Chapin, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Collins, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Darrall, Davy, De Bolt, Denison, Douglas, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Fuller, Gause, Goode, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Haralson, Henry R. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hendee, Henkle, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoskins, Hunter, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, King, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lapham, Levy, Lord, Lynde, Magoon, McMahon, Meade, Money, Nash, Odell, Oliver, Packer, William A. Phillips, Platt, Purman, Sobieski Ross, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Sheakley, Smalls, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Springer, Stenger, Stowell, Swann, Tarbox, Thomas, Thornburgh, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Andrew Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, and Woodworth—97.

During the roll-call,

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, said: Upon this question I am paired with Mr. ELY. If present, I do not know how he would vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriation for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, on which a new conference was asked, and the Senate had appointed Mr. SARGENT, Mr. BOUTWELL, and Mr. NORWOOD as managers of said conference on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 810) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a House bill and a joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1972) to authorize the construction of an inclosure around the United States penitentiary at Boisé City, in the Territory of Idaho; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 77) providing for the restoration of the original Declaration of Independence.

REAL ESTATE POOL.

Mr. GLOVER. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on the Real Estate Pool of the District of Columbia to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I wish the resolution which accompanies the report be read and adopted by the House.

Mr. HURLBUT. Is there a minority report?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the minority report will be presented.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I must object, if it gives rise to any debate.

Mr. GLOVER. It will cause no debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] asks that the resolutions be read, and that the report be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GLOVER. I also ask that the resolution be adopted.

Mr. HALE. I reserve my point of order until after the resolution has been read.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That this report and accompanying testimony, together with the letters of George M. Robeson, Secretary of the Navy, addressed to the committee, be printed and referred to the Judiciary Committee, and that said committee be instructed to inquire into said alleged violations of law, and to ascertain the liability of George

M. Robeson, Secretary of the Navy, for such alleged acts, and make such report to the House as the facts and law may justify, and in compliance with these instructions said committee shall have authority to take and hear additional testimony.

The report was signed by Mr. GLOVER, Mr. LEWIS, and Mr. CULBERSON.

Mr. CONGER. I reserve my right to object until the resolution of the minority of the committee is read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRATT] to submit the views of the minority of the committee.

Mr. PRATT. In submitting the views of the minority I desire to say that it was my hope that this report would now be considered by the House. I consent, however, to the reference to the Committee on the Judiciary of the report of the majority and the views of the minority only for the reason that on yesterday the House referred to that committee the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs, which refers to exactly the same subject-matter as is embraced in this report. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution appended to the report of the minority of this committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House finds no cause of complaint or censure attaching to George M. Robeson, Secretary of the Navy, growing out of his official relations and transactions with the firm of Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co., of London, as the temporary special agents of the Navy Department.

The report of the minority was signed by Mr. PRATT, and Mr. SMITH of Pennsylvania.

Mr. HALE. I now rise to a point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose that the right to object will come before the point of order. I desire to state that I shall object to these reports being received and printed, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, unless there is added to the majority resolution an instruction to the Committee on the Judiciary to report at this session of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] on his point of order.

Mr. HALE. I rise to present a point of order, and I would not present it unless I believed it to be unanswerable. My point of order is this: The Committee on Naval Affairs by authority of the House early in the winter entered upon the investigation of all matters relating to the conduct of the Navy Department. The Committee on the Real Estate Pool, as it is called, of which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] is chairman, received its first authority to act on the 24th day of January.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Is not this proceeding by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not at all; the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] reserved his right to raise a point of order, and the Chair will hear him.

Mr. HALE. The committee seeking to report this morning received its first authority on the 24th day of January, 1876. I ask the careful attention of the Chair to the resolution of that date, because this is a special committee, limited in its powers to the jurisdiction conferred upon it by the authority of the House setting it on foot. This is the preamble and resolution adopted by the House on the 24th of January last:

Whereas the Government of the United States is a creditor of the firm of Jay Cooke & Co., now in bankruptcy by order and decree of the district court of the United States in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, resulting from the improvident deposits made by the Secretary of the Navy of the United States with the London branch of said house of Jay Cooke & Co. of the public moneys; and whereas the matter known as the "real-estate pool" was only partially inquired into by the late Joint Select Committee to Inquire into the Affairs of the District of Columbia, in which Jay Cooke & Co. had a large and valuable interest; and whereas Edwin M. Lewis, trustee of the estate and effects of the said firm of Jay Cooke & Co., has recently made a settlement of the interest of the estate of Jay Cooke & Co. with the associates of said firm of Jay Cooke & Co., to the disadvantage and loss, as it is alleged, of the numerous creditors of said estate, including the Government of the United States; and whereas the courts are now powerless, by reason of said settlement, to afford adequate redress to said creditors:

Resolved, That a special committee of five members of this House, to be selected by the Speaker, be appointed to inquire into the nature and history of said "real-estate pool," and the character of said settlement, with the amount of property involved, in which Jay Cooke & Co. were interested, and the amount paid or to be paid in said settlement, with power to send for persons and papers, and report to this House.

The Chair will see that that authority, so late even as the 24th of January, related only to the real-estate pool which gives the name to this committee; it is confined to that. But the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. GLOVER,] seeking to extend the jurisdiction of his committee, on the 3d of April last introduced and the House passed the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas on the 24th day of January, A. D. 1876, the House adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved, That a special committee of five members of this House, to be selected by the Speaker, be appointed to inquire into the nature and history of said real-estate pool, and the character of said settlement, with the amount of property involved, in which Jay Cooke & Co. were interested, and the amount paid or to be paid in settlement, with power to send for persons and papers, and report to this House:" Therefore,

Be it resolved, That said committee be further authorized and directed to likewise investigate any and all matters touching the official misconduct of any officer of the Government of the United States or of any member of the present Congress of the United States which may come to the knowledge of said committee: Provided, That this resolution shall not affect any such matter now being investigated by any other committee under authority of either House of Congress; and for this purpose said committee shall have the same powers to send for persons and papers as conferred by said original resolution.

The limitation is distinct, is undoubted. It was not intended to give to this committee any power to investigate subject-matters then being investigated by any other committee.

I make the point of order that it is already within the knowledge of the House and of the Speaker that before the 3d of April this identical subject-matter was considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs; their report, a part of our proceedings, shows that fact; the discussion, which is a part of our proceedings, shows it. If any doubt exists as to the time of the inception of this investigation in the Committee on Naval Affairs, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a letter to the Secretary of the Navy from the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 1, 1876.

SIR: The Committee on Naval Affairs, acting under the orders of the House of Representatives, to make certain inquiries, &c., have instructed me to inquire of you, whether at any time any deposit of funds of the Government appropriated by Congress for the use of the Navy was made with the house of McCulloch, Cooke & Co. (or Jay Cooke & Co., or other firm composed of said parties) doing business in London, and if so, it is desired to know the date of the making of such deposit or deposits, the amounts thereof; what security, if any, was exacted at the time the same was done, or agreed to be done; the reasons for making it and upon whose recommendation the same was ordered; to what extent said deposit or deposits have been accounted for; if any deficit remains, the amount thereof and its present condition, and what security, if any, the Government now holds for its return, and the nature and value of the security so held; and under what orders and for what reason the Paymaster-General United States Navy is absent from this city and in Europe, and for what length of time he has been absent. Has his absence any connection with the deposit so made with McCulloch, Cooke & Co.? Further, whether prior to the making of this deposit the agents of the Department had not been the Messrs. Baring Brothers, who had discharged their duties as such agents with great fidelity and but little cost to the Government; and what reason, if any, existed for their discharge as such agents?

Respectfully,

W. C. WHITTHORNE,
Chairman.

To Hon. GEORGE M. ROBESON,
Secretary of Navy.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, it will be noticed that this letter bears date more than two months before any authority was given to this special committee to enlarge the scope of action originally provided for late in January.

I will not occupy further the time of the House or the Chair, but will only ask, is not this point impregnable? Is it not clear that this is a special committee and that it has no iota of power outside of the power given it in the resolutions constituting it? Is it not clear that in the resolution of April 3 the limitation is distinct that this committee should go into no fields already plowed by other committees? Is it not clear that before this, long before, another committee having general jurisdiction over the subject-matters of the Navy Department took up this special point and was considering it, and that therefore this committee is ousted of jurisdiction from the beginning?

Mr. GLOVER. I would like to have the attention of the House for a moment to reply to the gentleman's point of order. I hold that if the committee of which I am chairman has any authority at all to investigate the matters specifically set forth in the first resolution, it has authority to pursue that investigation to the extent to which it has gone. The resolution empowers the committee to investigate the subject of the indebtedness of Jay Cooke & Co. to the Federal Government. Now, how is that to be ascertained? It turns out that the house of Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co., of London, had an established claim against Jay Cooke & Co. in this country. Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co., of London, were indebted to the Navy Department and assigned their claim to the Secretary of the Navy as part of the indemnity to secure their indebtedness.

Now, the committee, in pursuing the matter of establishing this indebtedness, was compelled to investigate the matters out of which this indebtedness arose; and it would be and was impossible for the committee to make this investigation thorough without investigating the transactions of the Secretary of the Navy and the affairs of Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co., of London.

Of course these two committees might, under their respective resolutions, have concurrent jurisdiction; but to deny that the committee of which I am chairman has authority to investigate the accounts of Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co. and their indebtedness to the Navy Department is to deny us the right to investigate the accounts of Jay Cooke & Co. and the indebtedness of that banking firm to the Government of the United States.

I think the House will certainly see the distinction involved in this statement, which the gentleman from Maine has overlooked; and I hope he will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. HALE. If I understand the point of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] it is that originally by the first resolution there was some measure of power that gave this committee authority to go outside or that it developed certain matters which required them to go outside. My very point is that if they had authority by the original resolution to go into this matter there could have been no need of extending it. But they found, upon examination it may be, that there were other matters which they desired to go into, but which they did not get authority to examine until the 3d day of April, 1876, long before which the other committee had been investigating. If they did not need more power on the 3d of April, when this supplementary resolution was adopted, why did they ask the House to increase their powers by that resolution?

Mr. PRATT. I desire to say one word. I think the point of order made by the gentleman from Maine is certainly well taken, and the minority have in their report set out all the facts in reference to the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Real Estate Pool, the time when they commenced this investigation, the time when the House by resolution specifically directed the Committee on Naval Affairs to investigate the affairs of the Navy Department, and the time when that committee commenced its investigation. The report of the minority shows that at the time this resolution of April 3 was adopted the subject of naval affairs—the whole subject of administration of the affairs of the Navy—was then being investigated; the investigation had actually been commenced by the Committee on Naval Affairs and by the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the gentleman whether it was ever claimed in the committee before this supplementary resolution of April 3 that the committee had authority to go into this deposit of the Secretary of the Navy with Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co.?

Mr. PRATT. No such claim was ever made.

Mr. MORRISON. I submit that that is not a proper inquiry. No gentleman has the right to state what occurred in committee; and no one knows this better than the gentleman from Maine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proceedings in committee are not a proper subject of discussion in the House.

Mr. PRATT. I can say further——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman need say nothing as to the proceedings in committee.

Mr. PRATT. I do not propose to say what was done in committee; I propose to state what was not done in committee, if the Chair will allow me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will rely on the gentleman's own discretion; but he will bear in mind that the point of order has been made.

Mr. PRATT. It was never formally proposed in the committee at all to investigate the official conduct of Secretary Robeson; and all the investigation that has ever been had touching the affairs of the Navy Department has been under the pretense that it was necessary to inquire into the source and origin of the indebtedness of Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co. to the United States that the committee might ascertain whether the firm of Jay Cooke & Co. in this country had any property or assets covered up in the "real-estate pool" which could be made available for the payment of that indebtedness.

But I desire to say this on this point of order: While I think the point of order is well taken, and have always thought so, I hope the gentleman from Maine will not insist on it. I think it would be best to allow these reports to be made, to allow the testimony taken by the Real Estate Pool Committee to be printed, and allow it all to go to the Committee on the Judiciary. Not because I think there is anything shown either in the testimony or in the report to the discredit of Secretary Robeson, but because I think a fair and careful examination of the testimony taken by the committee will in any candid mind completely vindicate the Secretary in all his transactions and dealings with the firm of Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co., of London, in reference to their indebtedness to the United States. And the minority have thought best to co-operate with the majority to get these reports and this testimony before the House, in order that they might be printed as an act of justice to Secretary Robeson, believing that course will best tend to vindicate him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maine insist on his point of order?

Mr. HALE. It is so important not only now, but as settling the rights of committees under special orders that I must insist on it in order to obtain the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair regards the matter quite as much, or more, a question of fact than a question of parliamentary law. It is very clear a committee may not report to the House that which has not been committed to it by the House, but whether exactly the matter referred to in this report has been committed to this Select Committee on the Real-Estate Pool and Jay Cooke & Co. Indebtedness is, as the Chair suggests, rather a question of fact than a question of parliamentary law. Under the circumstances, therefore, the Chair is not inclined to sustain the point of order raised by the gentleman from Maine. Does the gentleman from Michigan insist on his point of order?

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw my point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There being no objection, the report of the majority and the views of the minority, together with the testimony, will be ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GLOVER. I ask the resolution containing the proposition which I have submitted to the House be voted upon.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. An agreement was made a moment since that the reports were not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. GLOVER. I wish to ask one more request of the House, and that is, that I shall be permitted to print in the RECORD as part of the debates some remarks in reference to the subject of the report just ordered to be printed, and also that the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRATT,] representing the minority of the committee, shall have the same privilege.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That there may be no misapprehension, the Chair will now direct the resolution moved by the gentleman from Missouri be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this report and accompanying testimony, together with the letters of George M. Robeson, Secretary of the Navy, addressed to the committee, be printed and referred to the Judiciary Committee; and that said committee be instructed to inquire into said violation of law, and ascertain the liability of George M. Robeson, Secretary of the Navy, for such alleged acts, and make such report to the House as the facts and law may justify; and in compliance with these instructions said committee shall have authority to take and hear additional testimony,

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. GLOVER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now read the recommendation accompanying the minority report, which also has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary under the previous order of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House finds no cause of complaint or censure attaching to George M. Robeson, Secretary of the Navy, growing out of his official relations and transactions with the firm of Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co., London, as special temporary agents of the Navy Department.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I rise to a personal explanation. Yesterday morning, as an act of courtesy, I yielded to the gentleman from Philadelphia [Mr. FREEMAN] to ask the printing in the RECORD of a communication which was not read. That request was granted by the House. On noticing the RECORD this morning I find it not only reflects upon the committee but upon myself. That communication from Captain Wells is false so far as it refers to me. Besides, it is unjust to the House, as it publishes in the record of our debates the merely personal record of Captain Wells. If I had known what it contained I certainly would not have consented to its publication, nor do I think the House would. It certainly has nothing to do with our proceedings. I understand my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. FREEMAN,] which I believe to be the fact, did not know what was in that communication when he asked it to be inserted in the RECORD, and I now move it be stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. HURLBUT. Let it be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee will indicate what portion he desires to have read.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I simply move that it be stricken from the RECORD. If it be read now it will go into the RECORD in the morning as part of our debates.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not necessarily.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I simply ask that the communication be expunged from the RECORD. It was inserted without anybody's knowing what it was.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The House cannot agree to anything of that kind without knowing what it is.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I do not want it to go into the permanent RECORD.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But we must have it read before we strike it out.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. If the gentleman is desirous to hear it read, I have no objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I know nothing at all about it; but to ask me to strike something from the RECORD without knowing what it is, I certainly object to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is well taken. The gentleman from Iowa is right, and the communication will be read.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I think I can save the time of the House.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FREEMAN] did not intend any reflection on myself or upon the majority of the committee, for in the communication referred to the only reflection that was justified—I am authorized by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (am I not?) to state it—was upon the action of the minority of the committee, and not of the majority of the committee, for the majority of the committee did not make any reflection upon Captain Wells of the Philadelphia navy-yard. It was only the minority of the committee who did so. And yet it would appear from that communication that it was the majority of the committee, or myself, that had made that reflection. Now, sir, I beg to withdraw the motion.

Mr. FREEMAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] withdraws his motion, and there is nothing before the House.

Mr. FREEMAN. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. FREEMAN. I desire to say, as otherwise I might be misunderstood by the House——

Mr. CONGER. Unless the subject-matter may be read, I object to any further discussion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FREEMAN] rises to a question of personal privilege. The Chair is not presumed to know what is the question to which he rises. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. FREEMAN. I desire to say that in presenting that communication to this House I did only what I was requested to do by the gentleman commanding the navy-yard in my district. I did so without reading it and in a great hurry, not desiring to take any advantage of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs or to force upon this House anything that was improper.

CONTESTED ELECTION—SECOND DISTRICT NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to make a privileged report. On behalf of the Committee of Elections I make the unanimous report which I send to the desk, and move the adoption of the accompanying resolution, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That John A. Hyman, the sitting member, was duly elected a Representative in the Forty-fourth Congress from the second congressional district of North Carolina, and he is entitled to retain his seat as such.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask the adoption of that resolution. It seats Mr. Hyman, and is a unanimous report.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED ELECTION—FIFTH DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am also instructed by the Committee of Elections to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That Milton A. Candler, the sitting member, was duly elected as a Representative in the Forty-fourth Congress from the fifth congressional district of Georgia, and he is entitled to retain his seat as such.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED ELECTION—SIXTH DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am also instructed by the Committee of Elections to present the following report:

Resolved, That John R. Lynch, the sitting member, was duly elected as a Representative in the Forty-fourth Congress from the sixth congressional district of Mississippi, and he is entitled to retain his seat as such.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED ELECTION—THIRTY-THIRD DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am also instructed by the Committee of Elections to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That Nelson I. Norton, the sitting member, was duly elected as a Representative in the Forty-fourth Congress from the thirty-third congressional district of New York, and he is entitled to retain his seat as such.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED ELECTION—FIRST DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am also instructed by the Committee of Elections to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That Chapman Freeman, the sitting member, was duly elected as a Representative in the Forty-fourth Congress from the first congressional district of Pennsylvania, and he is entitled to retain his seat as such.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AFFAIRS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BUCKNER. I rise to a privileged question. I call up the report of the Committee for the District of Columbia on affairs in the District of Columbia. I send to the desk two resolutions unanimously recommended by the committee, and ask the Clerk to read them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved, (1.) That the Clerk of this House be, and he is hereby, instructed to certify to the Attorney-General of the United States a copy of this report, with the accompanying evidence, for such action in the premises as he may deem proper under the law and the facts as developed in said testimony.

(2.) That the Clerk of this House be, and he is hereby, further instructed to certify a copy of the evidence accompanying this report to the grand jury of the District of Columbia, with directions to investigate the criminal charges against parties referred to in said evidence as having been guilty of a violation of the criminal laws of the United States; and the Attorney-General is also directed, by the aid of such special counsel as he may appoint, to institute such proceedings as he may deem proper under the evidence to recover any and all sums of money due the District of Columbia which have been obtained illegally or improperly by any parties mentioned in said evidence.

Mr. KASSON. May I ask the gentleman from Missouri whether that is a joint or a House resolution?

Mr. BUCKNER. It is a House resolution.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to suggest to the gentleman that one House has not the right to direct a public officer or a grand jury, and that he had better, therefore, change the word "directions" to "request;" which is as far as the House has power to go. There is no power in a single House to direct the grand jury.

Mr. BUCKNER. We did not suppose there was any doubt as to the power of the House to direct or request as it saw fit.

Mr. GARFIELD. The House has not power to direct. Better say "request."

Mr. BUCKNER. I have no objection to making it a joint resolution.

Mr. KASSON. It is only a question of propriety. The word "request" will answer the same purpose.

Mr. BUCKNER. I will move that the words "the request" be substituted in place of "directions" in the third line of the second resolution. I move further that instead of the words "this report" to insert the words "the report of this committee," and at the end of the second resolution add the words "and that the Attorney-General make a report to the President of the United States, to be transmitted to this House at the next session of Congress, as to his action under these resolutions, as well as his reasons therefor."

The resolutions, as modified, were read; as follows:

Be it resolved, 1. That the Clerk of this House be, and he is hereby, directed to certify to the Attorney-General of the United States a copy of the report of this committee, with the accompanying evidence, for such action in the premises as he may deem proper under the law and the facts as developed in said testimony.

2. That the Clerk of this House be, and he is hereby, further directed to certify a copy of the evidence accompanying this report to the grand jury of the District of Columbia, with the request to investigate the criminal charges against parties referred to in said evidence as having been guilty of a violation of the criminal laws of the United States; and the Attorney-General is also directed, by the aid of such special counsel as he may appoint, to institute such proceedings as he may deem proper under the evidence to recover any and all sums of money due the District of Columbia which have been obtained illegally or improperly by any parties mentioned in said evidence, and that the Attorney-General make report to the President of the United States, to be transmitted to this House at the next session of Congress, as to his action under these resolutions, as well as his reasons therefor.

The question was taken on the amendments, and they were agreed to.

The resolutions, as modified, were then agreed to.

Mr. BUCKNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE, NEW YORK.

Mr. SAMPSON. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to call up a motion to reconsider.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask leave to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations. I desire to report a bill and ask its consideration at this time.

Mr. SAMPSON. Is it a report from the committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is a privileged report.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4060) to provide for the payment of certain indebtedness incurred in the construction of the New York court-house and post-office building; which was read a first and second time.

The bill provides that to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the indebtedness incurred in the construction of a building for the court-house and post-office in New York City, in addition to the amount appropriated for said purpose for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, the sum of $227,568.78 be appropriated in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings in their report to the House of July 17, 1876.

Mr. RANDALL. This report is made by the Committee on Appropriations in consequence of the report of the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to reserve points of order upon this bill until I hear the explanation of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is too late to raise points of order.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the wording of that bill. Appropriations for public buildings are not appropriations for any fiscal year.

Mr. RANDALL. They do not under the law lapse until two years have expired.

Mr. CONGER. There is a provision of law that these appropriations shall not lapse.

Mr. RANDALL. They are exempted from lapsing under a general law, just as are appropriations for light-houses and for rivers and harbors.

Mr. CONGER. So that this is not really an appropriation for any fiscal year. It is a special appropriation, unlimited as to time.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. This was an expenditure in excess of the appropriation. It is an indebtedness which the Government has to father in violation of law, which requires those who administer the Government to keep the expenditures within the appropriations provided by law.

Mr. CONGER. But as I understand the bill the gentleman undertakes to say that this is a deficiency for the last fiscal year, which is not the fact, and therefore the bill misleads the House and the public.

Mr. RANDALL. This indebtedness was incurred during the last year and has nothing to do with this year.

Mr. CONGER. But the gentleman must see that is not an appropriation for any fiscal year.

Mr. RANDALL. There was an appropriation for the court-house and post-office at New York of a certain amount of money, and not only was that amount of money so appropriated expended, but the Government was involved in an additional expenditure of the amount provided for in this bill.

Mr. CONGER. That expenditure, then, was in violation of law.

Mr. RANDALL. I know it was.

Mr. CONGER. Then why say that it is a deficiency for last year?

Mr. RANDALL. We are in this condition to-day; you must either punish innocent parties who deliver supplies to the Government in good faith, or else you must make this appropriation.

I propose, so far as I can, not to do any injustice to those people who are upon the edge of bankruptcy in consequence of this delay in payment; I propose to pay them, and then to look after the officers who have violated the law, and see if we cannot punish them.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman claim that his sympathy for those men should lead him to make the statement in regard to this lack of money as if it was a deficiency?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not make any statement. It was an indebtedness, a deficiency in the amount of money not supplied by the appropriation for that year.

Mr. CONGER. But there was no appropriation for that fiscal year ever made.

Mr. RANDALL. I have great sympathy for all people who in honesty and in good faith have supplied this Government with materials, and who supposed they were acting with men who understood the law, and who, as they ought to have done, confined themselves to their authority conferred by law in their dealings with others; I have great sympathy with them. But I have no sympathy with officers who knowingly violated not only the spirit but the letter of the law; they ought to be punished. The committee who examined this subject very properly characterized the conduct of these officers when they said, as they say in their report—

That it was clearly the duty of the Supervising Architect and superintendent of said building to have fully understood the exact condition of the appropriations for said work, and to have seen to it that not one dollar of money was expended or a single obligation incurred by either of them after they might have reasonably ascertained that the money for said building was exhausted, is a clear proposition about which there can be no doubt; and your committee are satisfied that the persons having in charge said work have been guilty of gross negligence and carelessness in the discharge of their official duties, if not totally reckless of the public interest in their disregard of law; but your committee are satisfied from all the evidence that all the persons holding claims against the Government embraced in the foregoing schedule are innocent parties, that they acted in good faith in the premises, and that in equity they are entitled to have their claims paid.

Upon that ground the Committee on Appropriations recommend the passage of this bill.

Mr. CONGER. I want to say to the gentleman that there are many cases of this kind among the smaller buildings all over the West and Northwest.

Mr. RANDALL. I know that the violation of law extends all over the length and breadth of this land.

Mr. CONGER. No; not a violation of law, but a lack of appropriation. The gentleman has said repeatedly here that he could not allow his sympathies to avail in such cases as those. But in the city of New York, and I might perhaps say in the city of Philadelphia, the gentleman's sympathies are much more potent.

Mr. RANDALL. What do you mean? Be more definite in your insinuations.

Mr. CONGER. I generally mean just what I say.

Mr. RANDALL. If you mean to say or to imply in the least degree that in the direction of New York claims I have gone one hair's breadth from the line of duty, you state that which you know to be not founded in fact.

Mr. CONGER. I think in regard to the other buildings the gentleman's duty was in the same direction.

Mr. RANDALL. When they come up it will be time enough to judge in regard to other buildings. I have presented no deficiency for Philadelphia at all. I have no doubt that, as I have said before, all over this land there are deficiencies incurred in utter disregard of the law in the expenditure of the public money. And we have seen in the evidence which has been presented enough to convince us that it struck at those even in high places.

Mr. PRATT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. PRATT. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has read from the report of the majority of the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings certain portions characterizing the conduct of certain public officers, I desire to call attention to a few facts that do not appear in that report. When the present Supervising Architect, Mr. Potter, took possession of his Office he necessarily inherited the mode of transacting business, the manner of keeping the accounts, and the machinery by which the business of his Office was transacted. He explained to the committee, but no reference is made in the report to that explanation, that that mode of doing business, that manner of keeping the accounts, which he found prevailing in the Office when he took possession of it, was not reliable; that it did not inform him at all times of the true condition of the appropriation with which he was dealing, and that he found himself misled by that system of keeping the accounts.

Another fact which ought to be stated in justice to Mr. Potter is that the superintendent of the building in New York was often behind, sometimes months and months, in his monthly reports of the progress of the work and of the expenditures made upon that building. And then again the Supervising Architect found it impossible to ascertain at any given time the exact state of the appropriation for that building.

It also appears in the testimony that in the spring of 1875 there was an enormous pressure brought to bear upon the Supervising Architect and the superintendent of the building in New York to press forward the building to an early completion, and the public necessities seemed imperatively to demand that that should be done.

In the first place, the Federal courts in the city of New York had for a number of years rented quarters in Chambers street. They were small and inconvenient; and, as the district attorney, Mr. Bliss, testified before the committee, the transaction of the business of the courts in those rooms was attended with great inconvenience and oftentimes with great loss to the Government. He states that the early completion of that building so that it might be occupied by the Federal courts for the fall business of 1875 saved the Government in rents not less than $60,000, and has been of immeasurable advantage to the Government by furnishing improved facilities for the transaction of business. The postmaster of New York City, a gentleman whose integrity and truthfulness I believe will not be questioned in this House, testifies that the early removal of the New York post-office to this new building enabled him to transact the postal business at an annual saving of about $50,000; that by reason of the improved facilities for transacting the business of that office he was enabled to discharge clerks and other employés that would have cost from $45,000 to $50,000 annually. He further states that had the Government continued to occupy the old post-office building the fast mail would have been an utter impossibility, because the accommodations at that office would not have allowed the necessary work in order to dispatch that mail. The Government has been saved large sums of money in that direction, the public service has been immeasurably improved, until now that particular branch of it is taken away by the failure of appropriations to sustain it. All these considerations operated upon the minds of the superintendent of the building in New York and the Supervising Architect in Washington to induce them to press forward the work as rapidly as possible, so that the building might be promptly occupied by the Federal authorities.

It is proper also in this connection to call attention to the fact that if this indebtedness had not been incurred and the building finished it could not have been occupied to-day. No appropriation has since been made by which the building could have been completed. It is further shown that all the work done, all the material furnished, all the furniture purchased, everything on account of which this indebtedness was incurred was absolutely essential to the finishing of that building in order that it might be occupied by the Government; that nothing has been done beyond what the necessities of the public service demanded.

I wish to state further that it must be perfectly apparent to any man who reads the testimony that neither the superintendent in New York nor the Supervising Architect in Washington ever intended or designed to exceed the appropriations, but that in the press and hurry of finishing the building the Supervising Architect was misled by the way in which the public accounts of that appropriation were kept; he was not correctly informed as to the condition of those accounts. Thus the appropriation was exceeded before the officers had any idea that the limit had been reached; and when they ascertained the true state of things they were in such a position that they were either obliged to go forward and finish up what they had commenced, or to stop and let the building in its incomplete state be injured by exposure to the weather to an extent beyond the sum for which this indebtedness has been incurred.

Under that state of things, I hold that while there was perhaps carelessness, while there may have been some degree of negligence on the part of these officers, there is no intentional or conscious guilt attaching to any officer of the Government in connection with the construction or furnishing of that building. This much I have deemed it proper to state, as it is fairly apparent from a candid reading of the testimony.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman does not deny that to exceed the appropriations authorized by law is an offense, a violation of law which is made penal; but he makes the plea of necessity. I do not believe from the examination I have made that any such plea would hold good. I believe that it was the duty both of the Supervising Architect and of the superintendent at New York to make themselves acquainted with the amount of money under their control to be expended for these purposes.

I do not intend to reflect severely upon the present Architect in connection with this matter. Perhaps what the gentleman states as to his endeavor to correct the abuses of his predecessor is true; but there is a remarkable fact now extant that this very gentleman who has sought to correct in many particulars the abuses of his predecessor has been invited to resign; and it would be a remarkable coincidence if his predecessor should be called upon to take his place.

Mr. HALE. If the gentleman will excuse me, I doubt whether he is borne out by the facts in the statement that the Architect has been invited to resign.

Mr. RANDALL. I see it stated in the Republican newspaper of this morning, which is generally good authority in matters of this kind.

Mr. HALE. I am sorry to say that there are now and then items of news in republican papers that are not exactly correct. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. What is the fact? Perhaps the gentleman will tell us. It may be that he makes "a distinction without a difference." Has the Supervising Architect been invited to resign; or has he resigned; or is he going to resign; and if so, why?

Mr. HALE. It is not for me to say; only I doubt whether the gentleman is borne out in his statement by the facts.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not intend to say exactly that his resignation had been requested because he had done his duty in this respect; but when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRATT] commended him for doing his duty it occurred to me that he ought to be retained, and that the man whose errors he has been correcting ought not to be reinstated.

Mr. HALE. I suppose that he has resigned of his own motion without any invitation; and that there is nothing in his going out of the Department that involves his character at all or implies any censure upon him.

Mr. RANDALL I understand how people get out of office. Secretary Bristow got out; Solicitor Wilson got out; Yaryan got out; Dyer got out; Henderson got out. I do not know whether they were invited out or not.

Mr. HALE. Now and then, although the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not seem to understand it, men do actually resign of their own motion.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman knows the old rule in regard to office-holders, "Few die and none resign."

The bill was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION ACT.

Mr. HALE. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the President's message in relation to the sundry civil appropriation act was referred yesterday to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no objection to that motion being entered. It will open the question to debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

EDWARD PAINTER.

Mr. FOSTER, by unanimous consent, moved that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of the papers in the case of Edward Painter, and that the same be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRANE. I hope that the title of these papers will be reported so that we may understand what they are.

Mr. FOSTER. This is simply a change of reference of papers erroneously referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COCHRANE. My reason for asking that the title of the papers might be reported was that some time ago a matter was referred to this same committee and reported back for reference to the Committee of Claims, when in my judgment the Committee on Appropriations should have taken the responsibility of acting on the question, as it belonged more appropriately to that committee than any other.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reference has been made.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A bill (S. No. 436) for the relief of William S. Robinson, of Malden, Massachusetts;

A bill (S. No. 538) to create an additional land district in the Territory of Idaho;

A bill (S. No. 990) to remove the political disabilities of Reuben Davis, of Mississippi; and

A bill (S. No. 1006) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to use the surplus of certain moneys heretofore appropriated.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill of the House of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 1336) to establish a new land district in the Territory of Wyoming.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 3625) providing for the sale of the Osage ceded lands in Kansas to actual settlers.

INFRINGEMENT OF PATENTS.

Mr. SAMPSON. I desire to call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 3370) to amend the statutes in relation to damages for infringement of patents and for other purposes was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time. I will state further that I desire to discuss the motion.

Mr. RICE. I raise the question of consideration upon this motion; and I desire to announce that the bill upon which I wish action by the House at this time is the bill (H. R. No. 2830) to provide for arrears of pension on account of wounds received in the late war. This is a matter of great importance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House now proceed to consider the motion to reconsider indicated by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. SAMPSON?]

The question being taken, there were—ayes 39, noes 56; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SAMPSON and Mr. RICE were appointed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill upon which the gentleman from Iowa desires action be read.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. BANNING. As I understand, Mr. Speaker, the question of consideration is before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is; but it is not debatable.

Mr. BANNING. I would like to have read the title of the bill which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICE] desires to bring up, so that we may vote understandingly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That may be done by unanimous consent, not otherwise. Under the rules all questions as to the priority of business must be settled without debate.

Mr. SAMPSON. I object.

The House divided; the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 88.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the yeas and nays upon this question. This is a bill to protect manufacturers against extortions in connection with patent rights.

Mr. RICE. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No debate is in order.

Mr. WADDELL. Is a motion to adjourn in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. WADDELL. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would remind the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WADDELL] that the hour of four o'clock to-day has been assigned for the proceedings relative to the death of the late member from Kentucky, Hon. Mr. PARSONS.

Mr. WADDELL. I withdraw the motion to adjourn, and move that the House take a recess until four o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MILLS. Before the yeas and nays are called I desire to ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot ask unanimous consent for any purpose while the House is dividing.

Mr. WHITE. Is it in order to ask a question for information? If this motion is voted down will it not be in order to take up the bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RICE] concerning arrearages of pension?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly it will if the House chooses to do so.

Mr. WHITE. Then I hope it will be voted down.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 72, nays 104, not voting 109; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, John H. Baker, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Cabell, William P. Caldwell, Cannon, Cason, Cate, Canlfield, Collins, Crounse, Danford, Darrall, Davis, Durham, Forney, Fort, Frye, Glover, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Harrison, Hartzell, Haymond, Henderson, Holman, Hunton, Hurlbut, Kasson, Franklin Landers, Lawrence, Le Moyne, Levy, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynde, McCrary, McDill, Meade, Milliken, New, Norton, O'Neill, Payne, John F. Philips, Piper, Potter, Pratt, Randall, Rea, Reagan, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Sampson, A. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Stevenson, Stone, Teese, Terry, Throckmorton, Charles C. B. Walker, Erastus Wells, Whiting, Willard, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, James Wilson, and Woodburn—72.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., Ballou, Banks, Banning, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John H. Caldwell, Caswell, Chittenden, Cochrane, Conger, Cook, Crapo, Cutler, Davy, Dibrell, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durand, Eames, Eden, Evans, Felton, Finley, Foster, Franklin, Garfield, Gause, Gibson, Goode, Goodin, Benjamin W. Harris, John T. Harris, Hartridge, Hays, Abram S. Hewitt, Hooker, Hopkins, House, Hubbell, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Joyce, Kelley, Kimball, Lapham, Leavenworth, Lynch, Mackey, Maish, MacDougall, McMahon, Metcalfe, Miller, Mills, Monroe, Morgan, Mutchler, Nash, Neal, O'Brien, Phelps, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Poppleton, Rainey, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Roberts, Robinson, Rusk, Savage, Scales, Seelye, Singleton, Sinnickson, Slemons, Smalls, Strait, Thompson, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Tufts, Turney, Van Vorhes, Wait, Gilbert C. Walker, Walsh, Warren, White, James Williams, Benjamin Wilson, and Yeates—104.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ashe, William H. Baker, Bass, Blair, Bliss, Blount, Bradley, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Campbell, Candler, Chapin, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, De Bolt, Denison, Douglas, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Freeman, Fuller, Gunter, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Henry R. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hendee, Henkle, Hereford, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hoskins, Hunter, Hurd, Hyman, Frank Jones, Kehr, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lane, Lord, Magoon, McFarland, Money, Morrison, Odell, Oliver, Packer, Page, Plaisted, Platt, Powell, Purman, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Sheakley, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Springer, Stenger, Stowell, Swann, Tarbox, Thomas, Washington Townsend, Tucker, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Young—109.

So the House refused to proceed to the consideration of Mr. SAMPSON'S motion to reconsider.

During the vote

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, said: Not considering this a political question, I will vote in the affirmative.

Mr. MILLS. In order to save time I move that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has refused to take up for consideration the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 3370) to amend the statutes in relation to damages for infringement of patents, and for other purposes, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. RICE.]

ARREARAGES OF PENSIONS.

Mr. RICE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up and considering the bill (H. R. No. 2803) to provide for arrears of pensions on account of death or wounds received or disease contracted in the service of the United States since the 4th day of March, 1861, and for the payment of the same.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to have a report printed and recommitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from Ohio yields to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio cannot yield.

Mr. SAMPSON. I understand the motion of the gentleman from Ohio is that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering a special bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is so.

Mr. SAMPSON. Can that be done? Must not all bills be taken up in their order when the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The parliamentary motion is to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. That motion is in order, and the rules may be suspended for that purpose by a majority vote. The Chair is informed it has been the custom to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for a certain purpose and to antagonize against that other purposes, and to settle the question prior to going into Committee of the Whole. On that question the Chair would be glad to be advised by members who have been here for some time. The Chair will be glad to hear from the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. That custom extends only to appropriation bills. A special motion to go into Committee of the Whole on a particular appropriation bill is in order. My friend from Maine [Mr. HALE] knows better than I do in reference to that. But, sir, all other bills in Committee of the Whole must be taken up in their order on the Calendar and laid aside one by one. The Chair will pardon me for referring to a noted instance. In order to take up the celebrated Kansas and Nebraska bill, every bill on the Calendar was laid aside one by one.

A MEMBER. That is too old a precedent.

Mr. GARFIELD. If we go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, we must take up the Calendar in order, just as on Friday.

Mr. HALE. That has been the invariable practice.

Mr. RICE. It has been the practice so far as I have observed during this session to go into Committee of the Whole on bills specially indicated. I wish to say the usage has been during this session at least in accordance with the motion I have made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the journal clerk, however, that when this has been done it has always been journalized as by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARFIELD. Unanimous consent can always do it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But that does not affect the question, and the Chair must hold the rule to be that the House may at any time, by a vote of a majority of the members present, suspend the rules and orders for the purpose of going into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and that when in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the bills must be taken up and disposed of in their order on the Calendar. If objection is made therefore to going into Committee of the Whole on the special bill indicated by the gentleman from Ohio the House can only resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Calendar generally.

Mr. RICE. Then I insist on my motion that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

KITTERY NAVY-YARD.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to present a report from the Committee on Naval Affairs on charges made by Hon. JOHN H. BURLEIGH relative to the conduct of the Kittery navy-yard, and to move that it be printed and recommitted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I present the views of the minority on the same subject, and move that they be printed and recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I have a similar request to make. I ask unanimous consent to present the report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department relative to the management of the Hospital for the Insane, and move that it be printed and recommitted. I also present a report from the same committee relative to surveys of the public lands, and in regard to that make the same request.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is there a minority report on the subject of the Insane Asylum investigation?

Mr. MUTCHLER. I think not; but my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. TUFTS,] can respond to that question.

Mr. GARFIELD. My object is to know if any one desires to present a minority report on that subject.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RICE] will not yield the floor for all these matters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has not yielded the floor. The Chair is giving the floor by unanimous consent.

Mr. RUSK. Then I object to everything but the regular order. We have been here for three months trying to get this pension bill before the House, and I object to any more time being lost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question before the House is, Will the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 81, noes 46; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SAMPSON and Mr. RICE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 105, noes 45.

Mr. DURAND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 24, noes 107.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays are refused, the motion is agreed to, and the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Mr. MONROE. Too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN,] in the judgment of the Chair, rose in sufficient time to demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering tellers, there were ayes 14; not one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were refused, the yeas and nays were refused, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Before the House goes into Committee of the Whole, I ask that Rule 114, which shows the order of proceedings in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE 114. In Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the bills shall be taken up and disposed of in their order on the Calendar; but when objection is made to the consideration of a bill, a majority of the committee shall decide, without debate, whether it shall be taken up and disposed of, or laid aside: Provided, That general appropriation bills, and, in time of war, bills for raising men or money, and bills concerning a treaty of peace, shall be preferred to all other bills, at the discretion of the committee; and when demanded by any member, the question shall first be put in regard to them.

SURVEYS AND RECONNAISSANCES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Chief of Engineers, asking for legislation to provide for surveys and reconnaissances; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was given as follows:

To Mr. KELLEY, indefinitely from Friday next; and

To Mr. CRAPO, for ten days.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. BAKER, of New York, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution and bills of the following titles; when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 77) providing for the restoration of the original Declaration of Independence;

An act (H. R. No. 36) to restore the name of Captain Edward S. Meyer to the active list of the Army;

An act (H. R. No. 1972) to authorize the construction of an inclosure around the United States penitentiary at Boisé City, in the Territory of Idaho;

An act (H. R. No. 4053) to further authorize the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to purchase supplies for the Indian Bureau in open market;

An act (H. R. No. 4054) to continue the provisions of an act entitled "An act to continue the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;'" and

An act (H. R. No. 4055) to continue the public printing.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE ON THE STATE OF THE UNION.

The House, pursuant to order, resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CLYMER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Public Calendar. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 53) to amend the third section of the act of Congress approved March 12, 1863, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States."

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that that bill be laid aside.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Before that question is decided, I desire that the bill may be read that we may know what we are voting upon.

Mr. BANKS. It is not necessary that the bill should be read before deciding the question of laying aside.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that if the demand is made by any member for the reading of the bill he has a right to have it read.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to know whether the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] fails by a single objection or whether it requires a majority of the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. Unquestionably a majority of the committee is required.

The bill was read.

The question was taken on laying aside the bill; and on a division there were—ayes 73, noes 11; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RICE and Mr. PIERCE were appointed.

The committee divided; and tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 25; no quorum voting.

The roll was accordingly called; when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Abbott, Adams, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, George A. Bagley, Bass, Bliss, Blount, Bradley, Burleigh, Campbell, Candler, Canfield, Chapin, Cochrane, Cowan, Culberson, De Bolt, Denison, Douglas, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Felton, Freeman, Fuller, Gunter, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, Hatcher, Hatborn, Hendee, Henderson, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoskins, Hunter, Jenks, Frank Jones, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lord, Magoon, Meade, Mills, Money, Odell, Oliver, Packer, William A. Philips, Piper, Pla sted, Platt, Putnam, Randall, Sobieski Ross, Schumaker, Sheakley, Singleton, Southard, Sparks, Spencer, Stenger, Stowell, Swann, Tarbox, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Andrew Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Young.

The committee then rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CLYMER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union having found itself without a quorum he had caused the roll to be called and reported the names of the absentees to the House.

DEATH OF HON. EDWARD Y. PARSONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum have answered to their names, but the Chair will state that the hour of four o'clock has arrived and under the arrangement made for to-day the time has arrived for proceedings in memory of Hon. EDWARD Y. PARSONS, late a Representative from the State of Kentucky; and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BOONE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BOONE. Mr. Speaker, I arise to perform a melancholy duty: to announce the death and pay a humble tribute of respect to the memory of my late colleague, Hon. EDWARD Y. PARSONS, who departed this life at his residence in this city on the 8th day of July at about two o'clock p. m. Mr. PARSONS was born in Jefferson County, Kentucky, on the 12th day of December, 1842, and was therefore in his thirty-fourth year when he died. He was the son of Rev. C. B. Parsons, who was widely known as one of the most eloquent pulpit speakers in the West. His father having moved to the city of Louisville while he was yet very young, Edward at an early age entered the public schools of that city and manifested a peculiar fondness for books, and generally stood at the head of his class.

He afterward entered the male high school of the city, where he prosecuted his studies with diligence, and at the early age of nineteen graduated with the highest honors. Shortly thereafter he became a professor in the school, which position he filled with great credit for about three years; during which time he studied law, and in 1864 resigned his position in order to enter the law school of that city, which was one of the best in the country, having for its professors such men as Judges Pirtle, Muir, and Bullock. The regular course in this school was of two years' duration, but the deceased mastered it in one year, graduating with distinction.

He entered the profession as a practicing attorney in 1865, and by his energy, talents, and superior attainments soon won for himself honorable distinction at the bar and drew around himself a large number of admirers and warm personal friends, who felt proud, and justly so, of the success of their young townsman; and permit me to say, Mr. Speaker, that it was no small matter for a young man in so short a time to rise to distinction at the Louisville bar, composed as it was then and is now of men of marked ability and profound legal learning.

In 1874 Mr. PARSONS was elected a member of the Fourty-fourth Congress, by a very large majority, from a district where resided many able and distinguished men, which is an indication to us of the estimate placed upon him by the people among whom he had been reared and lived from childhood.

Although a citizen of the same State, it was not my good fortune to enjoy an intimate acquaintance with him previous to the beginning of this session of Congress. It is true, I knew of him as one of the rising young men of my State; but I had no opportunity to observe those peculiar traits of disposition and character which distinguished him as a man of rare social qualities and marked him as a man of more than common ability. But upon a more intimate acquaintance with him I found him to be all that his most intimate friends claimed for him—brave, generous, open-hearted, noble, a man of rare cultivation and refined sensibilities. He was a man of extensive reading and remarkable memory. He seemed to be as familiar with the poets and the polite literature of the age as most men are with the rudiments of a common education. He was a good lawyer and a vigorous and accurate thinker; in a word, Mr. Speaker, he was an accomplished gentleman.

He entered this Hall at the beginning of this session of Congress full of life and hope, with far better prospects of long life than most of us. Young, buoyant, of powerful frame and commanding presence, there seemed to be before him a long life of usefulness to his State and country; and who that saw him then would have supposed that so soon we should be called upon to mourn his death? How well I remember the look of astonishment and almost of consternation that settled upon the countenances of the members of this body when the news reached us that he was dead. How anxiously the inquiry passed from one to another if it were not possible that there was some mistake. How unwilling we were to believe it true, and how sadly we all felt when we were forced to realize the truth of the solemn announcement.

His death was sudden and unexpected. Almost without a note of warning he was stricken down, his large, generous heart ceased to beat, and his spirit ushered into the presence of that almighty and all-wise Being who hath the issues of life and death in His own hands. Almost in the twinkling of an eye the strong man was brought low, furnishing us another instance of the truth of the saying, "In the midst of life we are in death."

Mr. Speaker, perhaps silence would become me best in the presence of so solemn an event, for nothing we can say can at all affect the condition of the dead; but may I be permitted to say that these notes of warning as they fall, ever and anon, upon our ears should not pass unheeded by us? They are the palpable evidences of our own mortality; they should remind us that we too must sooner or later pass the portals of the grave; that we too are pressing rapidly in the footsteps of him whose memory we this day honor; and that ere the circle of another moon, you, sir, or I, or some other member of this body may be called to pass the same solemn and dreadful ordeal through which two of our brother-members have been called to pass since we assembled here.

Sir, in the presence of such realities how empty are all earthly honors, how hollow all earthly enjoyments, and how utterly insignificant all earthly ambitions; for, at a time when we least expect it, the dark-winged messenger of death hovers over us, and all our earthly hopes vanish as chaff before a driving wind. Truly hath it been said, "As for man, his days are as grass; as a flower of the field so he flourisheth. For the wind passeth over it and it is gone, and the place thereof shall know it no more."

Although Mr. PARSONS died away from his home and among comparative strangers, everything that medical skill, the promptings of friendship, and the ties of a noble brotherhood could suggest were resorted to in order to arrest the arm of death and save him from the fatal blow. But, sir, the grim messenger would listen to no parley, would take no denial. The grief, the woe, the bruised heart, the crushed hopes of a stricken wife, the helplessness, the innocence, the unconscious grief of children could not appease him. But amid them all the silver cord was loosed, the golden bowl was broken, the pitcher was broken at the fountain, the wheel was broken at the cistern, and the dust returned to the earth as it was; and the spirit returned unto God who gave it.

He leaves behind him a tender and affectionate wife and two small children, for whom our sympathies go out this day, and with them we mingle our tears of sorrow over the sad event which has deprived them of a husband and father and us of a friend and brother.

It would be wiser and better for us all, Mr. Speaker, to think more seriously than we do of the uncertainty of this life, and contemplate more frequently the grandeur, the glory, and durability of that better and brighter existence which has been made possible to us through the mercy of Him who ruleth both in heaven and in earth.

I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this House has heard with deep regret of the death of Hon. EDWARD Y. PARSONS, a member of this House from the State of Kentucky.

Resolved, That as a testimony of respect to his memory, the officers and members of this House will wear the usual badge of mourning for the space of thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Clerk of this House to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to communicate a copy of these proceedings to the Senate; and that as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased this House do now adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker,

Pallida mors æquo pulsat pede pauperum tabernas
Regumque turres.

Death is so common in the land that we can but seldom if ever truly apply the lesson he would teach or give a passing thought how soon he may knock at our own door. He may in an instant blight the beauteous rosebud, wither the fairest flower of the garden, shiver the giant oak of the forest, tear away the venerable forms of our households, snatch from our embrace the tender idols of our hearts, or strike down at our very side splendid young manhood, the highest image of God himself, and although we feel the shock, bow our heads, and look with awe and wonder, yet soon again, O! how soon, does the world with its duties, its pleasures, and its cares absorb and lead us on in the same accustomed way! But this inevitable and dread visitor heeds not our ways nor respects our condition; in his quiver he has an arrow for all; he strikes the low and the high, the bad and the good, the poor and the rich; he calls at every habitation, from the lowly hovel in its poverty to the majestic Capitol in its grandeur, and thus with impartial step and unerring aim marches on forever. In the hour of our grief and in the weakness of our nature, unmindful of the divine economy, which respects neither person nor condition, we cry out, O! why, why could not the great God, the Giver of life and death, have spared my loved one as a merciful exception?

Man is ever taught the truth, but heeds it not, that life is death, creation is dissolution, and none can tell how soon the latter may follow the former. How little do we remember that as we begin to live we begin to die. In the structure and economy of life, every blow we strike, every thought we think, is accompanied by the death and disintegration of a certain amount of muscular and nervous tissue as its necessary condition, and thus every action of our corporeal life from its beginning to its close takes place at the expense of the vitality of a certain amount of organized matter; and yet from the beginning of the life of man to this day of how little importance to his fellows is his death!

Epictetus, the Phrygian philosopher, went forth one day and saw a woman weeping for her pitcher of earth that was broken, and he went forth the next day and saw a woman weeping for her son that was dead, and when he returned to his house he exclaimed,

Heri vidi fragilem frangi, hodie vidi mortalem mori.

Yesterday a vase was broken, to-day a man dies, and one may be of as little consequence as the other. The philosopher of Uz in his affliction exclaimed:

Man that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble. He cometh forth like a flower, and is cut down: he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not.

Again it is said:

Man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets.

Mr. Speaker, has one from our midst been suddenly removed? Does death make no impression here, although his shaft has smitten us like the flash of the lightning? Is the pale monster to be regarded with no more terror than one going to sleep, the vanishing of a cloud, the decay of a flower, the rolling up of a scroll, the folding of a tent, or the gentle approach of night?

Sir, but a few days ago the stalwart and splendid form of Kentucky's young statesman walked and sat in this Hall almost the very perfection of manly vigor, grace, and elegance. Like Absalom, the praise of Israel, "from the sole of his foot even to the crown of his head there was no blemish in him." Methinks I see him now, sir, as was his wont to approach us with that stately mein, open hand, rich voice, and frank cordiality which seemed to belong to him alone, which indeed dignified his race, and presented in himself a brilliant type of the young manhood, courage, and gallantry of the noble State he represented. His morning salutation was to me, sir, a pleasure for the day. Others may not, but I do miss him.

How sudden, Mr. Speaker, was his taking off! When the news came and rang through this House we could not have been more appalled if a bolt from heaven at noon-day with the sun in his glory had rent asunder the dome of the Capitol. When but an hour after I entered his chamber and laid my hand upon that majestic brow, pulseless and cold as marble, how truly was it manifest "In the midst of life we are in death."

Mr. Speaker, what a transition! Think of it. At twelve o'clock, high noon, this man stood in noble stature and perfect health with every apparent promise of length of days and increasing honors, and at twelve o'clock at night he was dead, his body embalmed and on its way with congressional escort to his home for burial. Thus was our young brother stricken down and spirited away. Death indeed found in him "a shining mark."

How vain and transitory is life in its highest aspect; how futile man's ambition; how apparently worthless all his labors; how his brightest hopes are suddenly blasted! Here was high intellectual endowment, cultivated in the best schools of learning, chastened and accomplished by classical lore from the great old masters, whom he loved to repeat and praise. Here was solid learning in jurisprudence and eminence already in professional reputation and honors. Here was political ability of rare merit, just developing into large and comprehensive statesmanship. Here was pure character, admired and loved from birth to death. Here, too, if indeed it become eulogy, was a combination of personal lineaments with a grand outline that attracted the gaze of every beholder; a face as beautiful as the Apollo and a form that Phidias or Praxiteles would have chosen for a model. No prouder step ever graced the Avenue, no manlier person ever sat in the Capitol. All this vanished and gone, as it were, like the blaze of a meteor. Thus goes the glory of the world.

O man!

Boast not thyself of to-morrow: for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth.

Mr. Speaker, when our friends die we are apt to inquire or conjecture what were their last thoughts or expressions or how they received the final message. In what manner our young brother, so full of happiness and hope, welcomed the sudden and unexpected messenger we know not. Whether he had time to cast a look behind or a look beyond, we know not. It is said, sir, and it is a happy thought, that when man is about to be gat hered to his people or go to his fathers, visions of bright scenes and glorious companies gleam before his expiring gaze. Such happy close would have been in keeping with the life of our friend; and let us think that if in that final moment he could have reached our ears, he would have called to us:

Saw ye not now a blessed troop
Invite me to a banquet, whose bright faces
Cast thousand beams upon me like the sun?

May we not trust that our loved companion so departed, was so received, and is now seated in that glorious assembly in the realms of bliss!

Mr. Speaker, death itself is not without its consolations. Ecclesiastes taught that "a good name is better than precious ointment, and the day of death than the day of one's birth." Lord Bacon said: "Death hath this also, that it openeth the gate to good fame and extinguisheth envy." If a man die, shall he not live again? Death is but the end of care, and opens the door to that better and true life where He presides who, greater than all, has pronounced the glorious promise to man, "I am the resurrection and the life."

But, Mr. Speaker, my poor words are vain. I bring no fitting eulogy; I claim no philosophy of life and death. I teach no moral from this sad bereavement. Every heart must draw its own lesson, and that is better felt than expressed. I only know that our valiant young brother has gone from these Halls forever. Kentucky's budding promise, her blushing pride under national honors has been returned to her in a casket for the grave. Her metropolis—the city of his home—has honored him with a funeral pageant becoming a king, and loving hands have laid him away in the lap of his mother earth.

Mr. Speaker, Kentucky will cherish her distinguished dead, young and old, and ever honor those who honor her. Though blessed in climate and soil, prolific and pre-eminent in the productions of earth and animal, high advanced in the improvements and embellishments of civilized life, proud of all she possesses, yet, like the Roman mother, "her jewels are her sons." In coming time, when she shall build a pantheon to her great, the marble image of this younger son may perhaps be seen and admired like that of the beautiful young Augustus in the Vatican. Peace, peace, to his ashes! consolation to his friends and loved ones! gentle flowers for his tomb, and may sweet memories ever linger around the name of EDWARD YOUNG PARSONS!

O beate Sesti,
Vitæ summa brevis spem nos vetat inchoare longam.

Mr. MAISH. Mr. Speaker, I first met Mr. PARSONS on this floor shortly after the commencement of the present session of Congress. Our acquaintance rapidly grew into a firm and cordial friendship. In our brief association I learned to honor him for his virtues and respect him for his talents.

Nature had endowed him with superior mental faculties, which had been carefully cultivated in youth, and he preserved in manhood the tastes he then acquired. He was a man of genuine culture. Familiar with the best productions of the ancients, he loved to recall and dwell upon their beauties. He was especially fond of the German, and had read the master-pieces of that language. With the literature of his own language his acquaintance was extensive and intimate. It was apparent to those who knew him that he had read much and remembered what he had read.

Furthermore, he possessed a voice remarkable for its depth and compass, improved by all the graces of elocution. Thus qualified, he had before him a future full of hope and promise.

He died a little over thirty-four years of age; and yet I venture to say that "in all the points in which personal merit can be viewed; in science, in erudition, in taste, in honor, in generosity, in humanity, in every liberal sentiment, and every liberal accomplishment," he had few superiors in this body.

He was naturally of a retiring disposition, and seldom participated in the debates of this Chamber. Indeed he did so only when impelled by the interests of his constituency or his immediate duties as a member. In this, as in other deliberative bodies, the position a member occupies in public estimation is not always the true measure of his worth or abilities. If he is not fortunate in being allotted to prominent committees, he must make his reputation without the adventitious aids they afford. The committee on which Mr. PARSONS served did not invite newspaper reporters into its quiet retreat, nor did its labors receive much of the attention of the House nor the public, notwithstanding the duties of the members were arduous, important, and frequently involved much research and learning.

Mr. PARSONS, in this capacity, prepared a number of reports. They give evidence of a high order of ability, and show, too, how faithfully and conscientiously he performed his quiet official duties. Doubtless he longed sometimes to enter the lists in the intellectual combats here witnessed. His young ambition no doubt aspired to court the applause that the public arena of the House afforded. His unobtrusive nature made him a cheerful observer of the triumphs of others.

He was a man of warm impulses. His cordial manners and tender emotions constituted the most beautiful traits of his character. Envy found no place in his bosom. He had a word of good cheer for all, and, as I often observed, was among the first to lend the assuring hand and offer the encouraging word to his fellow-members.

Those of us who sat nearest to him will not soon forget his accustomed kindly greetings, his buoyant spirits, and harmless pleasantries. No longer will we see his manly presence; that fine, honest face, nor hear that deep-toned voice of EDWARD Y. PARSONS.

In the turmoil of business here, amid party strife and passion, the nobler qualities of our associates are too often overlooked. When death invades our Chamber our minds are brought to serious meditation. Then only do we fully realize the inner virtues of those whose death arrests our deliberations.

In EDWARD Y. PARSONS Kentucky has lost an honest, able, and faithful Representative and this House a valuable and efficient member.

In conclusion, permit me to say, Mr. Speaker, that few members have been removed by death from a seat in this House who will be more kindly remembered or sincerely regretted than our departed brother.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, the demise of a citizen of the United States while holding the position of a Representative in Congress can rarely ever fail to furnish some food for reflection. The loss of a member who has rendered long and useful service may naturally attract the widest attention. But the loss of one whose talents, education, and real merits have won the confidence of a constituency at an early age, whose career in Congress has been brilliant and useful, though comparatively brief, may be really greater than that of one whose "course is run." It is appointed unto all men once to die. He who has lived out his allotted time, who has finished his work, dies and disappoints no hopes. A life of usefulness finished finds its reward. Its purpose is complete. Its termination may indeed bring the pangs of sadness and sorrow. But sadder still it is when in the providence of God we are called to mourn the loss of one whose life in many respects has already accomplished much, but promising still more and more, is cut off in early manhood and in the midst of its usefulness.

In proportion as the inclination and capacity of a citizen and his opportunities for usefulness are great, to that extent will his loss be largely felt. There is perhaps no country in the world where so many opportunities for usefulness are open for a citizen to accomplish good among men as in this, the American Republic. Here is a land whose resources equal if they do not excel any other, and to a very large extent they await the hand of development and even of discovery. Here is a Government "of the people, by the people, and for the people."

Here is a Republic which invites to participation in its affairs the talents and usefulness of every citizen whom the people may select to represent them or who may be selected in pursuance of law. This combination of material resources and political advantages, offering so many inducements to industry, repaying it with rewards so diversified and so liberal, offering to talent so many and so inviting fields for usefulness, finds here an immense population grown and growing with unequaled rapidity. A century of national existence "looks down upon us" with its lessons of experience from which all are ready and willing to profit, and in this morning of a second centennial a united people are resolved that henceforth we shall continue one and indivisible.

It is at such a time as this, so full of instructions from the past, of promise and of hope for the future, and in a country like this, demanding so fully the energies of talent and industry, and in a Government like this, where every representative in Congress is charged with a trust in which he may be useful to our own and other nations, and among a people whose prosperity and happiness demand watchfulness, wisdom, forbearance, and justice in deliberation and legislation in our national councils, that we are called upon to chronicle the decease of our departed friend, the late Hon. EDWARD Y. PARSONS, of Kentucky. Truth and justice, even more than usage, demand that we perform the sad and solemn duty of paying a tribute of respect to the memory of one so gifted by nature, so cultured by study, endowed with so many good qualities of head and heart, that he shared the respect, the confidence, the admiration and love of all who really knew him.

It belongs more appropriately to the immediate Representatives from Kentucky rather than to me to sketch in detail the history and leading events in the life of their late colleague in this House, and this has been faithfully done. These are full of interest and instruction. They are such as to inspire young men with hope, and all men who know them with admiration.

It was my good fortune to make the personal acquaintance of our now departed friend at an early day in the present Congress. Even before that I knew of his deservedly high reputation as a scholar, as a lawyer, as a man of talents, and of the noble and generous impulses of his nature. I knew him as one of the leading lawyers of his native State of Kentucky, and of its largest commercial city of Louisville, distinguished for his learning, for his eloquence, and ability.

As one of the committee of this House which accompanied his remains to their last resting-place in the beautiful city of Louisville, which constituted a part of his district, I had opportunities to know that he shared the entire confidence and respect of the people whom he so ably and faithfully represented, and the sincerity of their sorrow at the loss they and the public sustained in his decease. Not Kentucky alone but the whole public indeed may well feel this bereavement.

For wise purposes it has been ordained by nature and nature's God that men shall be and are endowed with an infinite variety in their tastes and capacities. The diversified wants of society make this a necessity. Poets and painters, and orators and statesmen, and scientists and writers of varied styles and orders are in some sense "born, not made." There is no superabundance of the most useful and highest order of talent. In this we find the "concord of a general plan."

It was to this high order of talent that EDWARD Y. PARSONS belonged. He was an orator by nature, and culture had largely enriched the gifts which nature bestowed. His powers in this respect were so highly appreciated by those who knew him best that at an early age, while a tutor in the male high school of the city of Louisville, the board of school trustees instituted a chair of elocution and assigned him to its important duties. This, at so early an age, was no small honor in a city distinguished for the talent of its citizens and its patronage of the higher branches of education.

It is not very usual for a member of Congress during his first session to speak very frequently. Mr. PARSONS, though a new member, was by no means silent. He spoke when the interests of his constituents or the occasion required, and when he did so he spoke to the purpose ably and well. The State of Kentucky in common with others is deeply interested in the construction of the Texas and Pacific Railroad. On the 14th of June Mr. PARSONS addressed the House in support of a bill proposing to aid the construction of this road. He argued with marked ability the question of the constitutional power of Congress to pass the bill and the expediency of the measure. As a specimen of the patriotic sentiment which pervaded the entire speech I may quote a single paragraph, in which he said:

> If there be any sincerity in the oft-repeated asseverations made upon this floor during the present session of Congress that the disposition of the people is to forget past differences and in the practices of friendship and patriotism to perfect the Union of the States, and if it be true that a general amnesty is desired, it may be said that in the construction of this road as proposed an important step will be taken in the direction of the consummation wished. The North, the East, the West, and the South will join not only in the profitable embrace of commerce, but in that intercourse which, familiarizing each with all, strengthens the bond which now unites them and verifies the assertion of peace and good-will. From the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Gulf to the lakes the effects of this great highway will be felt and its advantages realized. No better period can be imagined than the present for the encouragement of sentiments of union and no more fitting monument can be erected to mark the complete reconciliation of the sections.

And as a specimen of that eloquence which seemed to flow with easy grace and elegant force from his lips, I may quote another paragraph, in which he said:

> The ancient cities of the world have been celebrated for their arts and their arms. The fame of their sculpture and their architecture has reached even unto us. Their conquests were glorious, the scholars cultured, their poets and orators, who are with us to-day, incomparable, and on the pages of history their works are emblazoned. They have erected monuments to the energy, industry, grace, love, valor, and enterprise of their respective cities.
>
> Indebted, as we are, to their brilliant examples in literature and science for whatever of excellence we may have attained, we feel constrained to say that more enduring monuments than works of art, statuary, grouping, and painting remain for us to contemplate. The Appian Way will be remembered when the name of Cato is thought of only by the scholar, and the great roads of Rome will prove more lasting reminders of the success of her arts than the conquest of Gaul or the fame of Cæsar.
>
> Splendid as were their achievements in arms, material improvements in the territory of conquests are better remembered than the battles of warriors, and causeways and roads are the enduring monuments to glory. Facilitating commerce, they destroy sloth in the mart; promoting intercourse, they abolish differences of opinion; and embracing sections, they establish harmony.

At an earlier day in the session, on the 16th of February, the House had under consideration a bill to re-organize the judiciary of the United States.

The bill proposed to create new courts of appeal. One of the questions presented on an amendment was whether one of these courts should be located at Cincinnati or Louisville.

In a few remarks which I submitted I advocated the location at Cincinnati. Mr. PARSONS replied with great force and power in an able speech in favor of the location at Louisville. Though he had no previous opportunity to know this question would arise, he met it with a force of logic which left nothing to be added on that side of the question and which proved his masterly ability in debate.

But it is unnecessary now to refer to more of his course in Congress. That is well understood here and by the public. However much members here may have differed in opinion on important questions of public policy, no one ever doubted the sincerity and honesty of purpose of Mr. PARSONS. He combined in his character that "suaviter in modo et fortiter in re" which inspired respect without giving offense to any.

The light of a great intellect has gone out. A citizen of Kentucky and of the United States, distinguished for learning, ability, and talents, alike honest and honored in public and private life for mental and moral and personal worth, is no more.

Kentucky mourns his loss and the whole Republic shares alike her sorrow and her bereavement for it is not alone the loss of any State, but more even than a loss to all. This must be so, because we cannot fail to realize that truth so well announced by Sir William Jones, that:

—— men, high-minded men,
These constitute a state.

The universal sentiment of all who knew our now-departed friend is that as a husband, a father, as a member of society, as a private citizen, in all the relations of life he was kind, generous, just, endowed with every noble quality which rendered him worthy to be endeared to all.

The question was taken on the resolutions, and they were agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, memorials, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. RIDDLE: Papers relating to the claim of A. S. Hamilton, for whisky furnished the United States Army, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. WOOD, of New York: The petition of Henry Bauer, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, August 2, 1876.

Prayer by Rev. J. J. READ, of Houston, Texas.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4060) to provide for the payment of certain indebtedness incurred in the construction of the New York court-house and post-office building was read twice by its title.

Mr. MORRILL. Upon conference with the Committee on Appropriations, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

REDEMPTION OF TAX LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 84) extending the time for the redemption of lands held by the United States under the several acts levying direct taxes, and for other purposes.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were read; and, on motion of Mr. SHERMAN, referred to the Committee on Finance.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, inviting attention to a letter from the Chief of Engineers, in regard to the failure of the appropriation in the sundry civil bill for surveys and reconnaissances in military divisions and departments, and recommending the passage of an act making available the unexpended balance of the appropriation of February 10, 1875, amounting to $18,000; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SPENCER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 100) providing a commission to frame a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments and ask the passage of the resolution. As it is very short, and I do not think there will be any objection to it, I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

The Committee on the District of Columbia proposed to amend it by striking out in lines 3 and 4 the words "two non-residents of the District of Columbia and one resident thereof" and inserting "three members of the House of Representatives;" in line 4, by striking out "appointed" and inserting "designated;" in lines 5 and 6, by striking out "two residents of said District and one non-resident thereof" and inserting "three Senators;" and in line 6, by striking out "selected" and inserting "designated;" so as to read:

That a commission consisting of three members of the House of Representatives, to be designated by the Speaker of the House, and three Senators, to be designated by the presiding officer of the Senate, is hereby appointed, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think it had better go over. It involves the raising of a commission composed of members of the Senate and House of Representatives to frame a government for the District, to sit during the recess. I think it is a wrong practice to raise committees to sit during the recess of Congress. At any rate, I think the joint resolution had better go over and let us think about it.

Mr. SPENCER. I will say to the Senator from Delaware that the joint resolution as proposed to be amended provides for the appointment of a select joint committee of the two Houses to sit during the recess in order to prepare a bill during the recess.

Mr. ALLISON. How much money does it appropriate?

Mr. SPENCER. Five thousand dollars is appropriated by the joint resolution as it passed the House, and the amount was not changed by the committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The whole matter ought to be printed with the amendments just reported.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not think $5,000 will be necessary. I think $2,000 will be sufficient for the purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware object to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I am directed by the Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service to report a bill authorizing the payment of pensions by the Treasurer of the United States. I will say that I report it now and ask to have it printed to go on the Calendar, not with the design of considering it at the present session, but I may state that I believe it will facilitate the payment of pensions, and enable pensioners to obtain their pensions at less cost, more expeditiously, and at a saving to the Government of about $200,000 a year.

The bill (S. No. 1013) authorizing the payment of pensions by the Treasurer of the United States was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. WRIGHT. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, asking the passage of a law authorizing the adjustment and settlement of the claim of the widow and heirs of the late Peter T. Crutchfield, deceased, for moneys alleged to have been taken from him by the State of Arkansas while acting as United States marshal, have had the same under consideration, and recommend that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I will state in this connection that some two months since precisely such a resolution was referred to our committee, and it was reported back by us and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask that this joint resolution take the same course.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 901) for the relief of J. E. Robertson & Co., of Indianapolis, Indiana, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Oliver Moses and others, asking indemnity for the loss of the ship John Carver, destroyed on the high seas by the rebel cruiser Jeff Davis, August 11, 1861, submitted the report thereon adopted by the committee at the last session of Congress, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1015) for the relief of Oliver Moses, Frank O. Moses, Galen C. Moses, Charles Owen, Robert P. Monson, and George W. Edge, owners of the ship John Carver; which was read and passed to the second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 353) for the relief of William Talbert, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 940) for the relief of William S. Lawrenson, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 439) for the relief of George A. Stevens, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of William C. Zantzinger, praying that the Admiral, Vice-Admiral and rear-admiral commanding a foreign station shall be allowed a secretary, entitled to the rank and allowances of a lieutenant in the Navy, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Charles F. Yeager, late second assistant engineer on the United States vessel Samson, praying the passage of a law authorizing the redistribution of prize-money arising from the sale of cotton alleged to have been captured on the Red River during the late war, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of A. C. Rhind, captain United States Navy, praying to be restored to his proper position on the active list of captains of the Navy so as to rank next below Commodore A. K. Hughes, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1016) for the relief of John H. Pickering; which was read and passed to the second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 1017) authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to settle certain accounts pertaining to the Red Cloud investigating commission; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 405) for the relief of William S. Morris, William S. Mann, Charles A. Oakman, George W. Hillman, the Union Transfer Company, all of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; the Union Transfer Company of Baltimore, Maryland; and John R. Graham, late of Philadelphia, now of Washington, District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 967) authorizing the survey of certain townships in Michigan and making an appropriation therefor, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the Union Bank of Louisiana, praying compensation for certain confederate moneys seized under an order of Major-General Banks in 1863, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1018) for the relief of the Union National Bank of Louisiana, successor to the Union Bank of Louisiana.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE, from the Joint Committee on the Library, who were directed by a resolution of the Senate of May 30, 1876, to inquire into the propriety and expediency of collecting and printing in convenient form for use the legislative resolves and ordinances passed by the Continental Congress and the Congress of the Confederation, reported a bill (S. No. 1019) to provide for a reprint of the resolutions, ordinances, and acts passed by the Continental Congress and the Congress of the Confederation; which was read and passed to the second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 511) appropriating money to compensate Fisk Mills, sculptor, for the "plaster model of General Rawlins," submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

EMERICK W. HANSELL.

Mr. WRIGHT. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3184) granting a pension to Emerick W. Hansell, have instructed me to report it back with amendments, and as thus amended to recommend its passage. I wish to say in reporting the bill, unless there should be some morning business to interfere with it, that I think it belongs to that class of cases which ought to be considered at once. The House passed it as a pension bill. It is for the relief of Mr. Hansell, who was disabled in his defense of Mr. Seward at the time of his attempted assassination. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions [Mr. INGALLS] reported it from the Committee on Pensions. I do not remember whether he expressed any opinion on the merits of the case; but he said it was not thought proper to grant him a pension, because it might introduce a dangerous precedent, and hence he asked that it might be referred to the Committee on Claims, as it was more in the nature of a claim. We have amended the bill so as to provide for the allowance of $2,000, to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury. If there be no objection, as this is a very old man, who is disabled and for some eleven years has been without any compensation, I should like to have the bill considered now.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Emerick W. Hansell, of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000, on account of injuries received by said Hansell while in attendance upon the late William H. Seward, former Secretary of State, on the occasion of the attempted assassination of said Seward.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN. I wish the gentleman who reported the bill would state a little more fully this case. We could not hear him over on this side.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Hansell was in attendance upon the late William H. Seward at the time of his attempted assassination, and was injured so that he has been disabled ever since. The House passed a bill allowing him a pension, putting him on the pension-roll. The Pension Committee of the Senate concluded that it would be a dangerous precedent to put him on the pension-roll, and reported the bill back to the Senate for reference to the Committee on Claims. We have considered it, and instead of granting him a pension at so much per month, we allow him a gross sum of $2,000.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether the injury he received was very serious and whether it has disabled him?

Mr. WRIGHT. The testimony of physicians is upon the record that he was disabled at the time and has been disabled since, so that he has been entirely unable to attend to any occupation or do any manual labor.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not think I have heard any Senator state the fact that this is in accordance with what Congress has already done in relation to the other person who was present.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. Robinson.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Robinson, a citizen of Maine.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have not mentioned it, but the report shows that fact.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is the fact, that the other person who was very much disabled received a compensation of, I think, $5,000.

Mr. INGALLS. Five thousand dollars was the sum he received.

Mr. HAMLIN. And it was a most just act, in my judgment, as I believe this to be.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like very much to have the amount in the bill increased to $5,000. I think it is a great shame that this Government did not pay the expenses of the sickness, slow recovery, and surgical treatment of the illustrious Secretary of State and all others who were injured in that attempt at assassination which sent a thrill of horror throughout every part of the country, the South as well as the North. I should very much like, if it will not interfere with the bill and if my friend from Iowa will accept it, to amend it so as to give him $5,000, which I think is a very small compensation for the injuries which this faithful man suffered and which have disabled him for the whole of his future life.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves an amendment increasing the amount from $2,000 to $5,000. The question is upon the amendment.

Mr. KERNAN. I should not want to disagree with the committee and increase the amount which they fixed, without hearing more facts than I have yet heard about this case. Is there a written report?

Mr. WRIGHT. There is a written report from the House, which was adopted by the Senate committee. The report recommends the payment of a pension, and we have put in a gross sum of $2,000.

Mr. KERNAN. Allow me to inquire how much was the pension fixed by the House?

Mr. WRIGHT. Eight dollars a month, dating back to 1865.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state that the Pension Committee did not feel themselves authorized to recommend the passage of the bill as a pension bill, because it was in a line of precedents which they did not approve, giving a pension for civil service. This man was not in the military service and therefore the Pension Committee declined to report the bill, but asked that it be referred to the Committee on Claims. The evidence before them of disability, however, I think was satisfactory; and I myself am far from objecting to the bill, believing that some compensation ought to be made for this injury.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa when this payment is to commence. It is an annual payment, I understand?

Mr. WRIGHT. No, it is the sum of $2,000 in gross.

Mr. KERNAN. Allow me to inquire what is the age of the man who was injured?

Mr. WRIGHT. The age is not given, except it is said that he is advanced in years, and disabled, and needy.

Mr. KERNAN. I submit that if we are to help this man we had better pass the bill as the committee reported it; because the House only gave him a pension of $96 a year, and I do not think we ought to make the gross amount larger than $2,000.

Mr. INGALLS. The beneficiary of this bill was one of the attendants upon the late Secretary Seward on the night of his attempted assassination. He was at that time a messenger in the State Department, and continued in the employment of the Government until in consequence of the injury that he received on that occasion he became entirely incapable of any further manual labor.

Mr. MERRIMON. How old is he?

Mr. INGALLS. He is now a man very advanced in years, and in the very last stages of decrepitude and infirmity in consequence of these injuries. The reason why the Committee on Pensions declined to pass a bill was twofold. In the first place, it provided for the payment of arrears back to the time when the injury was received, which is contrary to precedent and to law. In the second place, Mr. Hansell was not in the service of the Government at the time the injury was received, either in the military or naval arm. We therefore, to avoid the difficulty that would be established by a precedent of that kind, reported that the bill should be referred to the Committee on Claims with the suggestion that a sum in gross be allowed for the injuries he had received. My own impression is that inasmuch as Mr. Hansell only asked himself for $8 a month, he should receive a gross amount that when capitalized would give him an income that would be equivalent to the sum that he asked; that is from $96 to $100 a year.

I am aware that it is a very ungracious thing and a very difficult thing to attempt to argue against a sentiment, to resist an appeal that is made upon the ground of sympathy. So far as Mr. Hansell is concerned, of course no Senator here desires to say that he shall not be amply remunerated; but it does seem to me that we ought not to give any more than he has asked; and inasmuch as he himself has asked for but $8 a month, I can conceive that no good will be obtained by doubling the sum that when capitalized would give him an income equal to the sum that the pension would award to him. The $2,000, even at the lowest rate of interest that is allowed, 5 per cent., will allow him more than the annual compensation that he would receive under the pension.

The House bill, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] suggests, gives back pension for eleven years, which would be about $1,000 or $1,100. It seems to me that the bill ought to pass as it comes from the Committee on Claims, and that in passing it we shall only do an act that is graceful and reasonable and just. As the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] has said, one of the associates of Mr. Hansell, who was assaulted at the same time that he received his injuries, has been awarded by act of Congress the sum of $5,000.

Mr. WRIGHT. This whole question was considered by the committee and after looking the whole ground over we thought $2,000 was about a fair sum in view of what had been named by the House bill and what we understood was the claim of the petitioner, and we therefore recommended $2,000. I suggest to my friend from Rhode Island that he had better let the bill pass as it is.

Mr. ANTHONY. I shall follow the committee. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, it is much better for this pensioner to take this House bill than to take the $2,000. There are eleven years of back pay due him at $96 a year.

Mr. INGALLS. How does the Senator say it is due to him?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I understood so from the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. The House proposed to give him that, but there is certainly nothing due him.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Certainly. I was only comparing the two bills to see which was the most advantageous to the party. The House bill will give him $1,056 in money at once and then will give him a pension of $96 a year. That $1,056 at 6 per cent. interest will yield him about $62, which would make $158 annual income; but if you give him $2,000 it is only $120.

Mr. WRIGHT. Under the House bill he would only get $96 a year.

Mr. BOUTWELL. And a thousand dollars back pay.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, this man has been in the employment of the State Department ever since his injury until within comparatively a recent time. He has had a constant income and has been employed by the Government at a reasonable compensation. Therefore he has no claim, equitable or legal, to back pay.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask whether the House bill does not allow him a pension from the time the injuries were suffered?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir; but that is wrong in principle.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I am only considering whether the House bill or the proposition of the committee of the Senate is most favorable to the party. I am for doing the best I can for him. Therefore I should prefer giving him the pension granted by the House bill without any inquiry as to whether he has been in the service of the Government or not. If he had not served the Government he would have served somebody else and received his pay. He has rendered an equivalent for that. It is no compensation to him for the injuries he suffered at the time of the attempted assassination of Mr. Seward that he has been in the service either of the Government or somebody else and earned some money. We have nothing to do with that. If we intend to compensate him for that sacrifice and suffering, let us do it without inquiring whether he has earned something else or not. It is no part of our business whether he has been industrious and earned some money and received that money from the Government or a railway corporation.

I will say now, with the leave of the Senate, that there is a poor woman at work in a very subordinate capacity in the Treasury Department, whose name I cannot recall, who suffered at the same time and was disabled for many months from performing any labor whatever. As I cannot give her name I cannot move an amendment, but I certainly think her as deserving in the nature of her sufferings as this person, or Mr. Robinson, who has already been relieved.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Emerich W. Hansell."

WILLIAM K. SEBASTIAN.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of William K. Sebastian, deceased, formerly a Senator from the State of Arkansas, praying for the pay, perquisites, and emoluments of which he was deprived by being expelled from the Senate, have instructed me to report the petition back with a resolution and submit a written report. I ask that the resolution lie on the table until the report is printed, and I give notice that at an early day after the report is printed I shall call up the resolution for action.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the preamble and resolution of this body of July 11, 1861, wherein and whereby the late William K. Sebastian, of Arkansas, an honorable and loyal Senator and member at the time of this body, was expelled for supposed disloyalty to the Government of the United States, be, and the same is hereby, revoked and annulled as of the day and date of its passage, in so far as the said Senator William K. Sebastian is concerned, and no further; and that without detriment on account of duties or rights of the Senator, obstructed or prevented by said act of expulsion, the Secretary or other proper officer of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle the unpaid accounts of the said Senator at the rates provided by the laws existing at the time, (the same to be certified by the President of the Senate,) and to be paid to the heirs of said Senator, or to their legal representatives, out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The report was ordered to be printed.

EXPENSES OF COMMITTEE ON CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred a resolution offered yesterday in reference to disbursing the fund for the expenses of the Committee on Chinese Immigration, find that it is necessary that a bill shall be passed to meet the difficulties of the case, and have instructed me to report a bill accordingly.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

Mr. DAWES. I think there will be no objection.

The bill (S. No. 1014) regulating the disbursement of certain moneys therein named was read three times, and passed. It provides that the disbursing officer of the Senate shall advance such parts of the sum appropriated to pay the expenses of the Joint Select Committee on Chinese Immigration, and ordered to be paid into the contingent fund of the Senate to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, as the chairman of the committee shall in writing direct for the purposes aforesaid, and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall, as soon as may be, make a detailed report of the expenditure thereof, with proper vouchers, which, when so made, shall be received by said disbursing officer and returned with his accounts to the proper officer of the Treasury Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints on that committee on the part of the Senate the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT,] and the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. COOPER.]

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1020) to punish embezzlement in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS H. HALSEY.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the bill (S. No. 912) for the relief of Thomas H. Halsey, paymaster, United States Army, which was accidentally referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, be referred to the Committee on Claims. I have once before made this request, but it does not seem to have got on the Journal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the change of reference will be made.

IMPEACHMENT TRIAL.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 5,000 copies of the impeachment trial of William W. Belknap, including the opinions of Senators, be printed, of which 1,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 350 copies for the use of the managers, and 200 copies for the use of the counsel.

HAMBURGH RIOT.

Mr. MORTON. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That 10,000 copies of the President's message and accompanying documents in regard to the late massacre at Hamburgh, South Carolina, be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. THURMAN. Let it lie over.

ERASTUS T. BUSSELL.

Mr. MORTON. I move to take up Senate bill No. 917.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 917) to enable Erastus T. Bussell, of Indianapolis, Indiana, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for extension of letters-patent for a "combined rubber and spiral steel spring" was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Patents reported an amendment, to strike out in line — the words "passage of this act" and insert "issue of the extension;" so as to read:

He is hereby authorized and empowered to extend said letters-patent to the said Erastus T. Bussell for seven years from and after the issue of the extension.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand from the reading of the bill that it is a proposition to extend a patent which expired in 1867.

Mr. MORTON. Authorizing an application to be made for it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think that very erroneous legislation. The extension of patents is not favored by the American people, and ought not to be, as a general rule. Here is a patent that expired some eight years ago, and the proposition now is to allow the party to make application for an extension. I think that the bill had better go over.

Mr. MORTON. The committee reported unanimously in favor of the bill, and the proviso will save any one from damages, so that no harm can result from it. I have the report here, and if the Senator would like to hear it read——

Mr. SAULSBURY. No; the statement of the Senator would be sufficient, but I cannot vote for a proposition of that kind myself.

Mr. MORTON. I hope the bill will pass.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. This becomes a precedent, and if it be set here, we shall have applications for the extension of patents and for the privilege of applying for the extensions of patents. I cannot vote for this bill. I believe it entirely wrong to pass bills for the extension of patents, as a general rule. I do not say there are not exceptions; but here is a patent that has expired years ago; the party has not been deriving any benefit from his patent and has acquiesced in its expiration, and now the proposition is, after the expiration of the patent, to extend it. It is a very bad practice. I hope the Senate will not pass the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. ANTHONY. How long is it since the patent expired? I did not understand as to that.

Mr. MORTON. The best statement will be to read the report. It is very brief, and shows this to be a very meritorious case.

Mr. ANTHONY. I understood that this had expired some years ago. There is one thing to be taken into consideration in that connection. The bill saves from reclamations all persons who have used the patent after the time that it expired. But suppose a man has invested capital, has erected works for the manufacture of this article, what is to become of his investment? I do not know that it is so in this case; I ask for information; but I can perceive that there might be great injustice in renewing a patent that had expired years ago, and which, being open to the whole public, the manufacture of the article had been undertaken all over the country.

Mr. MORTON. In answer to the question of the Senator from Rhode Island I ask to have the report read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Patents, on the 28th of July:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 917, having had the same under consideration, are of opinion it ought to pass, and submit the following reasons:

First. This invention is a combined rubber and steel spiral spring of special value as a car-spring It has gone into general use, and is now placed upon some fifty thousand cars, at a saving to the railroad public of $1,500,000, and neither the inventor nor his assignee has realized one dollar profit from the invention, and it appears to be no fault of theirs that they did not realize.

Second. The original letters-patent, issued the 29th of November, 1853, were defective, giving no protection to the owner. Bussell asked the Patent Office to give him a broad claim, covering his invention; but the then Commissioner required him to accept a restricted claim, which subordinated his patent to one of prior date, issued to one Fowler M. Ray. Although Bussell used due diligence, for almost the whole life-time of his said patent, to introduce his invention, he was everywhere met by the owners of the Ray patent, who succeeded in driving capital away from him, and prevented him from making one dollar out of his invention.

Third. Bussell's repeated failures lost him many hundred dollars, besides much valuable time, and after the Ray patent had expired he accepted an offer of $500 for the nine months' remnant of the life of his patent and one extension. His assignee obtained the extension in 1867, with the defects of the old patent perpetuated. When they began to make and sell this spring infringers saw the defects in the patent, and began a systematic piracy of Bussell's invention. His assignee surrendered the old letters-patent and asked for a re-issue, correcting its faults. The Patent Office granted the re-issue in 1870, and reversed the former action of the Office, giving a protective claim for the first time, not to Bussell, but to his assignee, which did not inure a dollar to Bussell's benefit.

Fourth. Bussell's assignee then entered a long and expensive litigation against infringers of this patent, in the United States court for the southern district of New York, and obtained a verdict which fully sustained the originality and distinctive character of Bussell's invention, sustained the claims in the re-issue of 1870, and enjoined infringers thereafter. This verdict did not come until 1874, when there was but three months left of the extended term of this patent. Bussell's assignee, therefore, held a monopoly of his invention for three months only.

Fifth. The inventor never enjoyed any monopoly of his said invention, but lost money and time because of it. His assignee only had three months of monopoly, and expended all his profits in suits against infringers.

For these reasons we recommend the passage of this bill for the sole benefit of the inventor.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 15, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cragin, Dorsey, Hitchcock, Kernan, Key, Morton, Paddock, Spencer, Wadleigh, West, and Windom—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Boutwell, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cockrell, Eaton, Edmunds, Gordon, Hamilton, Harvey, Ingalls, Kelly, McCreery, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill, Randolph, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sherman, Wallace, Withers, and Wright—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Burnside, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamlin, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McDonald, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Sharon, Stevenson, Thurman, and Whyte—32.

So the bill was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote just taken. I voted against the bill because I thought it needed an important amendment to secure existing rights, and therefore I enter the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 2692) to relinquish the title of the United States to certain property in the city and county of San Francisco, California; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PETERS AND REED.

Mr. WITHERS. I move to take up House bill No. 2287.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2287) for the relief of Peters and Reed, naval contractors at Norfolk navy-yard in the year 1860, was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Is this a bill which has once before been considered?

Mr. WITHERS. It is a bill to which the Senator objected previously.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Was the bill under discussion at that time?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the report be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report of the House Committee, but before concluding he was interrupted by

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. WITHERS. I hope we shall be allowed to complete this bill. It has passed the House twice and been reported favorably by two committees of this Senate. The Department say the money is due and has never been paid.

Mr. ALLISON. I am told this proposition may give rise to debate.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the Senate go into executive session. It is very important to have a short executive session. It will not take ten minutes. It is on a very important matter, and I hope the Senate will have a short executive session.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the regular order be taken up first.

Mr. SHERMAN. The river and harbor bill is before the Senate.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations to insert as lines 73 and 74:

For repair of east pier at Cleveland, Ohio, $8,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to avoid the criticism or controversy about this, I submit the following amendment to the amendment of the committee. Add thereto:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to agree with the Pittsburgh and Cleveland Railroad Company for the free occupancy and use by it of said pier, upon such terms and conditions as he deems reasonable and just.

The letter from the Chief of Engineers read yesterday to the Senate shows distinctly that this pier ought to be repaired. He states:

That the condition of the inner end of the east pier of Cleveland Harbor is such as to require immediate repair to prevent its destruction and material injury to the harbor of Cleveland, and that the needed repairs may cost some $8,000.

The map shows that this breach is in the inner face of the east pier, and every man of ordinary intelligence will know that if that pier once breaks away, with the bank that is on the outer side of it sifting in, the harbor would at once fill it up probably in a single day; a single freshet, a single storm might cause injury to the extent of twenty times the cost of repairing the pier. There is no question about the necessity of its being repaired, and the Chief of Engineers says that necessity is apparent. But—and I learn this partly from information obtained since we adjourned last evening—there has been a controversy between an officer of engineers and an officer of the railroad company as to who should do certain work in connection with this business. It is perfectly manifest that the Government of the United States ought to repair this pier, that it ought to do the work because no other authority can go on there and to a certain extent impede the navigation of that harbor, except the Government of the United States. We would not allow any railroad company on any pretense whatever to undertake to repair or rebuild one of our piers. It will be necessary in order to repair the pier to make a coffer-dam, and we would not allow workmen unskilled and unprepared for that kind of work to enter on that harbor and repair the pier. It ought to be done by the United States.

But a question is made by the Engineer Department that this has been partly caused, not entirely, by the filling in of the land according to the riparian rights of the Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad on the outer side of the pier. That may be so; and if so the railroad company ought to pay some portion of this expense in the nature of damages. If they have caused this breach, they ought to be compelled to pay for it. There is no controversy as to the right of title. The railroad company own their land, as I understand. The pier, I take it, as a matter of course was built by the United States after gaining a proper title on which to build a public work.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How did it gain the title?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know; I am not prepared to say; but I take it as a matter of course that the United States took care to gain title to the ground occupied by its piers.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a very old work.

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been occupied there perhaps longer than I have lived. Under these circumstances, it is clear, first, that this work must be done; second, that it is right that the War Department or board of engineers should do it, because nobody else ought to be allowed to enter on that shallow harbor and repair the pier; and in the next place it seems to be right that the controversy between the United States and the railroad company should be settled, and if possible settled by agreement. The United States ought at once to assert its power or appeal to its courts. Thus, in any event this amendment ought to be adopted; the pier ought to be repaired by the Government of the United States, and then if the railroad company are trespassing on our rights we ought at once to assert those rights against the railroad. I have no sympathy with them in such a contest; but at the same time because two men, one an officer of the railroad company and another an officer of engineers, quarrel about who should do a particular work, I do not want the commerce of that port to be arrested and all the people interested in that commerce injured.

Mr. HOWE. I should like to hear the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment is copied from the language of the Secretary of War. Let the amendment I have offered be read.

The Chief Clerk read Mr. SHERMAN'S amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Here is what the Chief of Engineers says:

It is further submitted whether the circumstances would not justify the granting of authority to the Secretary of War to yield the free occupancy and use to the Pittsburgh and Cleveland Railroad Company of such portion of the east pier as he might deem advisable upon the condition that the company immediately repair the pier and keep it in repair in future, the United States reserving a right of way over it at all times.

I have adopted the plan of leaving the terms entirely open to the Secretary of War, instead of requiring and authorizing the railroad company to enter upon the pier and repair it.

Mr. HOWE. But your statute, it seems to me, will settle the terms. The "free occupancy" must be the occupancy of the pier without any restriction and without any price.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of War may think reasonable. However, I am willing that the Senator shall draw the amendment in his own language. I have no care about the Pittsburgh and Cleveland Railroad Company. If they trespass upon the rights of the United States, I will join the Senator in asserting those rights.

Mr. HOWE. I want the Senate, the Legislature, to assert them.

Mr. SHERMAN. I agree with the Senator there.

Mr. HOWE. It looked to me, as I listened to the case yesterday, as if a railroad company had turned one of your breakwaters into a dock, taken possession of it, used it for a dock for forwarding purposes, and had actually ejected the Government from it.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is on the outside of the east pier, the land side of the east pier. Owning the land there, the company have filled in until they have extended beyond.

Mr. HOWE. The pier has a certain depth. That is what the Government built on and what the Government occupies.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand the railroad company does not use that at all.

Mr. HOWE. I should infer from what the engineer says that the railroad does use it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will read what the engineer says. He does say they have occupied it, but they do not put their railroad track on it.

Mr. HOWE. I do not know where the track runs.

Mr. SHERMAN. He says it is—

Occupied by certain railroad companies for their own especial use and benefit, and has been retained in their possession to the present day, they having refused to vacate it even for repair, the necessity for some of which has grown out of their abuse of the structure.

Mr. HOWE. Part of their wharf, and they load from it; they transport over it from their depot to the boats.

Mr. SHERMAN. To some extent, although they have a front pier along the line of the lake, and I have seen coal and iron discharged there, but that could only be done when the lake was calm. Probably whenever there is a storm they have to come within the harbor and then may load over this pier, and I do not see why you should prevent them. I think the Government ought to allow not only this railroad company but all citizens to use this pier in that way.

Mr. HOWE. Undoubtedly there is no sort of objection to that. If the railroad company can give adequate security to maintain that which is a breakwater and maintain it as a dock, it answers as good a purpose as a breakwater, and there is no objection in the world that I see to the Government's relinquishing any portion of the work that somebody else will do. If the railroad company will maintain a dock there that is just as good as a breakwater, it answers every purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. They have maintained a dock beyond this pier. They have a dock and breakwater far beyond this.

Mr. HOWE. Somewhere else.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, right outside beyond the breach; but it is said that was filling it with earth and putting buildings on this new earth has added to the weight which presses on the pier. That is what I understand the engineers to say; that is, the company have contributed partly to this breach themselves.

Mr. HOWE. That may be one of the difficulties, but the engineer complains of another, and that is that the railroad company has actually ejected the Government from the pier itself. Now, if the railroad company wants docking privileges, wharfing privileges there, I do not see any sort of objection to letting it have them, to letting it maintain the work so as to make the harbor good. But the railroad company has no right to ask the Government to maintain a breakwater there and give them the use of it for a dock. That cannot be done.

Mr. SHERMAN. But would you in the mean time until that controversy was settled suspend and allow this breach to go on and fill up that harbor in the event of a sudden storm?

Mr. HOWE. If the railroad company is responsible and is fit to become the lessee——

Mr. SHERMAN. The railroad company is not responsible enough to repair the damage that might be done.

Mr. HOWE. Is not equal to $8,000?

Mr. SHERMAN. Suppose they will not expend the $8,000, why not make them do so?

Mr. HOWE. Do you propose to lease this property to an irresponsible company not good for $8,000 on any terms?

Mr. SHERMAN. I propose to do this work by the Government, and let the railroad company have the use of it on terms fixed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator's amendment is that the Government shall do this work, and not the railroad company. "The free occupancy" of it is given to the company. That is what the amendment is.

Mr. SHERMAN. The free occupancy upon such terms as the Secretary of War may think reasonable, and I have followed his language.

Mr. HOWE. What terms can the Secretary of War make with a company which is not responsible for $8,000?

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not say the company was not responsible. What I said was that the railroad company was not responsible for all the damages that might result from an open breach of the pier and the filling up of the harbor at the mouth of the river Cuyahoga. It would amount to hundreds of millions. It would stop the entire commerce of that whole region for a greater or less length of time. The Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company, as I know and perhaps the Senator knows, is a powerful corporation and amply sufficient to pay half a million of dollars.

Mr. HOWE. So I understand it, and now I submit to the candor of the Senator if that company has helped to destroy this pier, that is one reason why the company should help at least to restore it.

Mr. HOWE. And if the company wants it hereafter, that is only a reason why the company should restore it; but if they can have the use of it, it is a perfect reason why the Government should allow them to do it. Why not say——

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to know what has become of the five-minute rule?

Mr. SHERMAN. Will not the Senator from Wisconsin suggest an amendment to the proposition?

Mr. HOWE. I have spoken a dozen times under the five-minute rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Chair is informed that the debate has been proceeding by unanimous consent. The present occupant, having just come to the chair, was not aware until this moment that the five-minute rule had been adopted on this bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I object to debate beyond the time allowed.

Mr. THURMAN. I have a word to say on this and I will confine myself within my five minutes.

Mr. HOWE. What has become of the five-minute rule?

Mr. CONKLING. And the rule that no Senator shall speak but once?

Mr. THURMAN. I have not spoken on this at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yesterday.

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir; that was on another amendment. All this is not to be taken out of my five minutes.

Suppose this railroad company had been partially the cause of the breach in this pier; suppose it were true that a man had gone there and put nitro-glycerine in and blown up the pier, or made a breach in it, is that any reason why there shall be any delay in protecting the pier until the Government shall recover damages from the man who threw the nitro-glycerine in to blow it up? What sort of an idea is that?

I know nothing about the merits of this controversy between the railroad company and the Government. I only know that the railroad company have been occupying certain territory there for twenty-three years, and the Government has not turned them off. But I do not care whether the railroad company is at fault or not. Here is the port of the largest city on the lakes, with the exception of Chicago, that is in danger of being blocked up for want of immediate repairs, and here is objection made to it because it is said some railroad company is in fault and is a trespasser. I do not care whether the railroad company is a trespasser or not; I do not care for this purpose if the railroad company has blown up the pier with nitro-glycerine. That is not the question here. The question is whether or not there shall be this delay in protecting the entrance to the harbor of Cleveland until there can be a settlement between the railroad company and the Government. I protest against such delay.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from Ohio comes upon my close and does an injury and there it stops, a case has occurred such as he has been discussing. If that injury consists in blowing down a part of my house, it would be very absurd for me to live without a house until the end of the suit against the Senator to mulct him in damages for his trespass. But suppose the Senator from Ohio comes upon my close and sets up a possession and maintains it, and when I attempt to restore my possession, he drives me off, and he persists day after day and year after year, from 1853 to 1876, in holding actual possession, the case would be somewhat different; and if I were asked to persist in expenditures to repair to-day what he destroys to-morrow and so keep on, not waiting for the result of an action nor bringing one nor doing anything except to succumb to his trespass, I think the line of action would be rather extraordinary.

Now, in the case of this pier, the trouble is as it was when it was proposed—I cannot find the act to see whether it became a law or not,—to release to the city of Cleveland the title to the pier to the end that it might fight out this controversy; and that trouble was and is this:

Respecting this pier, built by the United States, it is to be remarked that as far back as 1855 it was taken possession of and occupied by certain railroad companies for their own especial use and benefit, and has been retained in their possession to the present day, they having refused to vacate it even for repair, the necessity for some of which has grown out of

Not their use, but "their abuse of the structure;" and I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to this. That is the report. Now, what is the fact about it? Here is a narrow tongue of space occupied by a pier, a wharf, and over that wharf this railway company trundles its ponderous traffic and crushes it down; and the question is whether the United States is to stand by and make appropriations year after year to build this pier up as fast as they crush it down.

One of two things is true: the United States owns this pier and the land it rests on, or it does not. If it does, these destroyers are trespassers, and they ought to be prosecuted, at least until the title is quieted and settled; they ought to be compelled, like other trespassers, to stand off, and the United States should maintain this pier as it would another. On the contrary, if the railroad company, either by prescription or by grant, has acquired a title with which it can defy all comers, including the United States, then this wharf belongs to the railroad company, and, like any other wharf belonging to a private person, ought to be maintained. If it becomes a public nuisance, because they let it fall down or let the stones fall into the harbor, then, like any other public nuisance, it may be abated in another form of action; and any man who runs a vessel licensed in the coastwise trade has his right of action to compel them to take out what they threw into the harbor, as stones or any other incumbrance which they put there, has he not? I believe that has been decided repeatedly.

I will vote for an appropriation for this pier, if pier it be; but, if it is a wharf of a railroad company to be used, and, in the language of this report, abused until it is crushed down, I cannot vote year after year to maintain, for the mere private utility of a corporation, a piece of property, although it stands adjacent to one of the harbors of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CONKLING. So have I. [Laughter.]

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to propose an amendment to the amendment. I understand it is the intention of the mover of the amendment to strike out the word "free."

Mr. SHERMAN. I will modify it in that way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are two amendments pending already.

Mr. SARGENT. Let my amendment be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And in case said railroad company shall neglect or refuse to make an agreement satisfactory to the Secretary of War, upon a certificate of that fact to the Attorney-General, it shall be the duty of the latter officer to enforce the rights of the United States in the premises by appropriate action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment just read is not now in order, being in the third degree.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio accepts the amendment suggested by the Senator from California.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it all be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to agree with the Pittsburgh and Cleveland Railroad Company for such use and occupancy of said pier as is consistent with public interests, upon such terms and conditions as he deems reasonable and just; and in case said railroad company shall neglect or refuse to make an agreement satisfactory to the Secretary of War, upon a certificate of that fact to the Attorney-General, it shall be the duty of the latter officer to enforce the rights of the United States in the premises by appropriate action.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from New York has expressed so much better than I could my views on the main part of this case that I will confine myself to another topic. The thing that troubles me is the defect of information as to where is the right as between the United States and the State of Ohio, to begin with, and the people who are exercising that franchise under a grant from her. I understand the law to be perfectly well settled over and over again, so that it is no longer a question for debate, that the soil under the waters of Lake Erie at that place when this pier was built, some time before the year 1853, belonged to the State of Ohio, and that the United States had no right to it whatever; and upon that subject I wish to read one clause from a decision of the Supreme Court; and as this embraces a general question, if my five minutes run out too soon I must take the opportunity of making another motion so that I shall say what I wish to say all together.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in an Alabama matter of land under water just like this, say—and I only read the condensed part in order to save the time of the Senate:

The right of eminent domain over the shores and the soils under the navigable waters, for all municipal purposes, belongs exclusively to the States within their respecive territorial jurisdiction, and they, and they only, have the constitutional power to exercise it.

Just before that the court has been referring to what was insisted about the power to regulate commerce as overriding that, and I do not read it but only call attention to the fact that the court is speaking of the very point of the power to regulate commerce.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to the Senator a fact that he is not aware of probably and that very few are aware of who were not born in Ohio, that the title in all that region of country never belonged to the State of Ohio or the United States, but belongs to the State of Connecticut and always belonged to the State of Connecticut and was reserved by Connecticut in the cession of western lands, and her right to all that territory was acknowledged by the United States. It will not change the argument, however.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will not change the argument a particle, because in the case of Virginia and in the case of Georgia who ceded a part of the western territory, and the other cases, when they ceded it they had the absolute dominion; and it is immaterial to my purpose, therefore, whether the State of Connecticut or the State of Ohio had the dominion. I have no doubt under the existing state of things that the State of Ohio has the dominion and the State of Connecticut could not reserve a naked easement, a proprietary right in soil under the sea, so to speak, under the lake when she granted the lands adjacent and a sovereign State has been set up under it; and that is what the Supreme Court say as to the power of the United States in respect of land that we got from Spain and from France, which is exactly the same thing and appears in this very case that I hold in my hand. Now I will go on; the court say:

This right of eminent domain over the shores and the soils under the navigable waters, for all municipal purposes, belongs exclusively to the States within their respective territorial jurisdictions, and they, and they only, have the constitutional power to exercise it. To give to the United States the right to transfer to a citizen the title to the shores and the soils under the navigable waters, would be placing in their hands a weapon which might be wielded greatly to the injury of State sovereignty, and deprive the States of the power to exercise a numerous and important class of police powers.

That is what now by way of lease, so to speak, the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is, for the United States to exercise dominion over this soil and this structure upon it and make arrangement for its occupation by the railroad company. If the State of Ohio has ceded this land to the United States for this purpose, that is one thing; but I can find no evidence of that, and judging from the report of the engineer and from the earliest appropriations for this harbor, which began merely by digging it out to make it more navigable and building structures alongside this river, I have no doubt it was done, as in almost every other instance those things are done, by the sufferance of the State, doing a good thing for their benefit, not interfering with their jurisdiction or taking possession of anything, but merely clearing out a water highway within the limits of a State over which the State so far as dominion is concerned had exclusive jurisdiction. It may be that the State of Ohio has at some time granted to the United States, as the States do for dock-yards and such things, the dominion over the place where this pier stands. If that were so, we should be relieved of all difficulty so far as that condition of the case is concerned; but without the evidence of that having been done, the trouble with this amendment, or with any amendment except merely to go on and spend the money, is that we have no authority to make it; that the State of Ohio has a right to control the pier and to grant to anybody she likes the right to use it, because our building a pier upon her land gives us no right; her dominion is over it exclusive and conclusive. If, on the other hand, the State of Ohio has made a grant of this kind, this matter of course is relieved of all difficulty of that character. But it appears that somehow or in some way in the year 1853 the Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company (undoubtedly chartered by the State of Ohio, because otherwise it would have had no franchise to carry freights I suppose, certainly not until it reached the border of the State of Pennsylvania) had a franchise to build a railroad to this point on Lake Erie.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent to go on for a minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and the Senator will proceed for five minutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall be as brief as possible.

Mr. THURMAN. I think it all comes to the same thing, but when we have a five-minute rule the best way would be for the Senator to make a motion, which will give him as much time as he chooses to occupy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will make a motion. I move to recommit the bill to the committee. I hope no Senators will suppose I am trying to weary out their time, but I think while we are on this general topic we might as well talk it out and be done with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I have only a few words to say.

The War Department report to us that in the year 1853 the pier was taken possession of and occupied, not built alongside of but taken possession of and occupied, by certain railway companies for their own especial use and benefit, and has been retained in their possession to the present day. Therefore, you have the official information that for the period of twenty-three years, long enough to give a title under the statute of limitations as between private persons, this very property, now said to be the property of the United States, has been held in the adverse possession of a railroad company, claiming under some title or without, no matter what, the absolute and exclusive possession and use of the pier for its own benefit and enjoyment; and in the course of that use the War Department go on to say:

As the Engineer Department has been unable to get possession of the pier, no part of any appropriation by Congress has been expended upon it for repair. The subject was submitted to the attention of Congress in the report of the Chief of Engineers, January 26, 1867—but no remedy has been provided.

Nine years ago—

Mr. CONKLING. That is a special report. I will hand to the Senator the report of 1867, containing six or eight lines on this point.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was not a report made to Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That depends upon the question whether Congress has got any right to interfere. That is the very question I should like to be informed about, because it appears clear to me that we have no right to interfere unless the State of Ohio has granted to us the land on which this pier stands and the jurisdiction over it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think, and my colleague concurs in the opinion, that the State of Ohio has passed a general law giving the jurisdiction of the United States in proper form in all cases of public buildings, piers, &c. I have sent for the statute.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was going to say that it is only a minute to the place where the statute is, and we can see it. If we find such a statute of Ohio, of course we shall be relieved of this difficulty; but while this difficulty exists it seems to me totally impossible to agree to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, because it is only putting us into trouble which will be difficult to get out of.

Mr. OGLESBY. May I ask the Senator a question in regard to a fact in this case?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. OGLESBY. Does the track of the railroad company run on this pier or only alongside of the pier on the accretions?

Mr. SHERMAN. Only on the accretions. Here is the map.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know. All I know is that the Department says in its responsible and official capacity that in 1853 the pier itself was taken possession of and occupied by the railroad companies for their own especial use and benefit, and has been retained in their possession to the present day. Whether the track, the iron, is actually on this pier, or whether the plank-work that holds the coal, the ore, the pork, and the iron is on the pier or not, I do not know; but I think it is entirely immaterial. It is of not the least consequence in the world, so far as I see, as they have got the possession of it and use it for railroad purposes in lading and unlading, whether their track is actually on it or on the side of it. They have got the exclusive possession of it as a private wharf, and I rather suspect every traveler who goes to Detroit by way of Cleveland from Pittsburgh and takes the steamboat leaves the car on the pier and gets into the steamboat on the other side of it as the private wharf of that company, excluding the public commerce of the lakes except as it is by sufferance allowed to land there to go on the railroad. That I suppose to be the fact, but I do not know it. At any rate, here we have the official report as I have stated. My friend from New York calls attention to the report of 1867 on this subject.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator referred to a special report, and I refer him to the general report of that year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is the general report:

Inasmuch as the principal part of the east pier had been monopolized by a railroad company, it was decided by orders from the Engineer Department that no repairs should be done to the east pier at the expense of the United States. In my former reports I have fully set forth the uses and abuses of this pier, all of which still continues, and in consequence the old pier is fast going to destruction.

This was in 1867. The railroad company seems to have kept it in good condition for a wharf, but it may not be in good condition for a pier. I do not know where the difference would come in. It is good enough for them to run the railroad cars there and use it for all the purposes of passenger and freight traffic, but we are called upon to spend $8,000 in order to put it in a little better condition in respect of the harbor itself. That is the application.

I will now go on with this general question. The Supreme Court, in the case of Pollard's lessee vs. Hagan, proceed to say:

But in the hands of the States this power—

That is, the sovereign municipal power—

can never be used so as to affect the exercise of any national right of eminent domain or jurisdiction with which the United States have been invested by the Constitution. For, although the territorial limits of Alabama have extended all her sovereign power into the sea, it is there, as on the shore, but municipal power, subject to the Constitution of the United States and the laws which shall be made in pursuance thereof.

By the preceding course of reasoning we have arrived at these general conclusions: First. The shores of navigable waters, and the soils under them, were not granted by the Constitution to the United States, but were reserved to the States respectively. Secondly. The new States have the same rights, sovereignty, and jurisdiction over this subject as the original States. (15 Curtis's Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, page 403.)

So that, Mr. President, it appears to me that until we know that the State of Ohio has granted jurisdiction over this old pier, now for twenty-three years the pier of a railway company in fact, and in its exclusive occupancy and possession, we ought not to be called upon to appropriate any money for it or to enter into any agreement with the parties in possession, because an agreement in the absence of a statute making a grant is a direct invasion of the sovereign rights of the State of Ohio.

I wish to say a word, while I am up, on a subject that was discussed the other day on this bill touching all the internal rivers and streams which it is proposed to improve above the falls to which naturally they are more or less navigable. I have before me an old case, decided as far back as 1852, of Veazie vs. Moor, to be found in 14 Howard. The facts in this case were that the State of Maine granted to certain persons the exclusive right to navigate the river Penobscot above its falls. Between the city of Bangor and Old Town, a distance of eight miles, the Penobscot passes over a fall, is crossed by four dams, but there is a railroad from Bangor to the steamboat landing at Old Town. On the 30th day of July, 1846, the Legislature of Maine granted to Moor and his associates the authority to improve the navigation of the Penobscot River above Old Town, and for that purpose they were authorized to deepen the channel, to cut down and remove any gravel or ledge, bars and rocks, &c., and made all the provisions for it. It then gave them as a consideration for that the exclusive right of navigation for the period, I believe, of twenty years. As it was navigable for steamboats for I do not know how far—I do not see the Senator from Maine, who can tell me—another steamboat man built a steamboat and ran an opposition line from Old Town up to the head of the upper navigation of the river. A suit was brought to prevent his doing it, and he defended on the ground that the State of Maine had undertaken to regulate commerce, as the State of New York did on the Hudson in the Fulton and Livingston steamboat cases, and therefore this act of the State of Maine was void and he had a right under the Constitution of the United States to run his steamboat on this navigable river. Now the court say:

Taking the term commerce in its broadest acceptation, supposing it to embrace not merely traffic, but the means and vehicles by which it is prosecuted, can it properly be made to include objects and purposes such as those contemplated by the law under review? Commerce with foreign nations must signify commerce which in some sense is necessarily connected with these nations, transactions which either immediately, or at some stage of their progress, must be extra-territorial. The phrase can never be applied to transactions wholly internal, between citizens of the same community, or to a polity and laws whose ends and purposes and operations are restricted to the territory and soil and jurisdiction of such community. Nor can it be properly concluded that because the products of domestic enterprise in agriculture or manufactures or in the arts may ultimately become the subjects of foreign commerce, that the control of the means or the encouragements by which enterprise is fostered and protected is legitimately within the import of the phrase foreign commerce or fairly implied in any investiture of the power to regulate such commerce. A pretension as far reaching as this would extend to contracts between citizen and citizen of the same State, would control the pursuits of the planter, the grazier, the manufacturer, the mechanic, the immense operations of the collieries and mines and furnaces of the country; for there is not one of these avocations the results of which may not become the subjects of foreign commerce, and be borne either by turnpikes, canals, or railroads, from point to point within the several States, toward an ultimate destination, like the one above mentioned. Such a pretension would effectually prevent or paralyze every effort at internal improvement by the several States; for it cannot be supposed that the States would exhaust their capital and their credit in the construction of turnpikes, canals, and railroads, the remuneration derivable from which and all control over which might be immediately wrested from them, because such public works would be facilities for a commerce which, while availing itself of those facilities, was unquestionably internal, although intermediately or ultimately it might become foreign.

The rule here given with respect to the regulation of foreign commerce equally excludes from the regulation of commerce between the States and the Indian tribes the control over turnpikes, canals, or railroads, or the clearing and deepening of water-courses exclusively within the States, or the management of the transportation upon and by means of such improvements. In truth, the power vested in Congress by article 1, section 8, of the Constitution, was not designed to operate upon matters like those embraced in the statute of the State of Maine, and which are essentially local in their nature and extent. The design and object of that power, as evinced in the history of the Constitution, was to establish a perfect equality among the several States as to commercial rights, and to prevent unjust and invidious distinctions, which local jealousies, or local and partial interests might be disposed to introduce and maintain. These were the views pressed upon the public attention by the advocates for the adoption of the Constitution, and in accordance therewith have been the expositions of this instrument propounded by this court in decisions quoted by counsel on either side of this cause, though differently applied by them. (20 Curtis's Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, pages 348, 349.)

Upon the whole, therefore, the court say that there is no authority to interfere in the exclusive jurisdiction of the State of Maine over this river above the falls, whether it is navigable from the east in the ordinary course. It does appear to me that several of the items that are still left in the bill are for improvements which are clearly beyond the constitutional power of the Congress of the United States, if the power to improve implies the power to control the thing improved and thereby trenches directly upon the power that belongs to a State.

Mr. MORTON. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Do I understand the Senator to assert that where the Government undertakes, for example, to improve a navigable river which is under the jurisdiction of the United States, or to improve a harbor on a lake, the Government cannot make the improvement either upon the bank or by removing a bar without the consent of the State?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I undertake to say that the law is this, as settled by the Supreme Court, that the sovereign dominion over the soil under the waters and the shore of navigable water is in the States, and it follows as a necessary consequence that Congress can take no exclusive possession of it or control of it without the assent of the States. I will not undertake to say whether, if in the harbor of New York, where there is municipal jurisdiction of the State of New York, Congress were to blow up the rocks at Hell Gate the State of New York could bring an action of trespass against the engineer or not. I do not undertake to pass upon that question. It is quite unnecessary.

Mr. SHERMAN. We ought not to appropriate this money until we settle that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I say the law is clear that on the shore of navigable water, certainly on the shore of water not navigable, the State sovereignty in respect of preventing the erection of any thing that it does not want there, if it chooses to exercise that sovereignty, is absolute and complete.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator from Vermont states the law differently from what I have understood it to be. I understand that where the United States undertakes to improve a river which is under the jurisdiction of the United States as navigable water, it has the right to remove a bar from that river or to make an improvement upon the bank without the authority of the State, because it has jurisdiction over it as navigable water; but so far as private rights are concerned the case is different. So far as the State is concerned the United States has a right to improve the harbor of Cleveland without consulting the State of Ohio about it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator has brought together two very different ideas and made them look a little as if they were one. The right to improve navigable water with a view to an easement and the right to go over it when it is improved is common to the United States and to all the people of it. The State of Ohio unquestionably would have no authority at all to prevent, by any regulation of its own, or any obstruction of its own, the free use of navigable waters within that State. The States of Ohio and Kentucky together could not stop the navigation by building a bridge across the Ohio River. That is perfectly plain. But the Senator in that respect is referring to the easement, which relates to the regulation of commerce, and I am referring to the fact of exercising control over the soil within the limits of a State. Whether the private property is in a citizen or whether the private property is in a corporation is entirely immaterial. If the State of Ohio owns a hundred acres of land on the outside of the city of Cleveland where there are two feet of water, that land is hers as property; but, so far as commerce is concerned, the right of free navigation, so that you can run a track, or have a right of way in the water and over the land, is complete in all the citizens of Ohio and of the United States and the State cannot take it away except so far as is necessary to the exercise of her jurisdiction in building proper wharves out to a suitable depth of water. Can it be maintained that the United States could enter into a system of wharfage and take possession of the whole shore at Cleveland, New York, or anywhere else, under her power to regulate commerce, and proceed to construct wharves for the convenient access of vessels to the land? I never heard such a proposition as that advanced.

Mr. MORTON. Removing a bar is a very different thing from building a wharf.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see whether it is a very different thing. A wharf is just as great a benefit to the interests of commerce, because commerce must come to the shore somewhere, as the removal of the obstruction is. They are both of the same kind, and they operate to the same end concurrently. One is entirely good for nothing without the other; so that you come right back to the question, when you take possession of the soil that lies within the limits of a State, you can only take possession of it by the consent of that State. When you want the right of way over that soil, that you have got by the Constitution of the United States, and you can regulate the exercise of that right, I think.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I do not want to prolong the debate. If we are to debate the constitutional question of the power of Congress to make works of internal improvement on this bill, and continue the debate, as that question has not been settled to everybody's satisfaction after a discussion of more than half a century, it is not very likely that this bill will pass at this session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How can we help considering a question of this kind when it is involved in the bill?

Mr. THURMAN. I have only this to say in respect to the States-rights doctrine of my friend from Vermont, which is the most thorough States-rights doctrine that I have heard now for more than a quarter of a century. If his doctrine is true in regard to this particular appropriation, then it is valid against every provision in this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not by any means.

Mr. THURMAN. I say against every one of them. If the Government cannot repair this pier, which it has made at the mouth of the Cuyahoga River, on the theory that the State of Ohio has jurisdiction over the soil on which the pier is built, then I want to know how it can do any one of the things that are provided for in this bill. How can it improve Otter Creek, in Vermont? How can it build a breakwater in the Delaware? How can it do anything at all if this doctrine is true? The whole theory is very plain. The State of Ohio undoubtedly has jurisdiction to a certain extent under the waters of Lake Erie and on its shore. Whether it goes to the boundary between it and the British dominions, I do not undertake to say at this time. I should have to look to see what are the boundaries of Ohio in the enabling act before I could answer that question; but her jurisdiction, which is not private property, is a jurisdiction subject to the power of the General Government, exercising all the powers that are granted by the Constitution to the General Government. If the Constitution gives to the General Government the power to make such works of improvement as this, then the right and power of the State of Ohio is subordinate to this power of the General Government; and that is the whole of it. If the Constitution does not confer upon Congress any power to do the things which are provided in the bill, then it does not require any State sovereignty or anything else to defeat the whole bill; it must fall for want of constitutional power to enact it, for want of a delegated power to us. If the power is granted to the General Government to do these things, then the sovereignty of the State of which the Senator speaks, and its jurisdiction over the waters in which these works are to be built, is subordinate to the power which the General Government has to make these improvements.

One word about the merits of this matter, and I am done. This railroad company may for aught I know be in equity, and I think it is in equity, bound to maintain the pier, at least to make the needed improvements and repairs, or at any rate to contribute toward making them; but the fact is not that the railroad company has taken absolute and exclusive possession of the pier; but what is the fact? The Government built two piers at the mouth of the Cuyahoga River, the effect of which was to deepen the channel and wash out the bar by a system of jetties. The railroad companies were authorized by their charters to construct railroads from Cleveland to diverse places, from Cleveland to Cincinnati, from Cleveland along the lake shore, the Lake Shore road, from Cleveland to Pittsburgh, from Cleveland and Toledo to the lake. Where they should go in the city of Cleveland was a question for the municipal authorities to decide, and infinitely to the advantage of the city, preventing its streets from being cut up by these railroads, it authorized the companies to run their railroads under the bank on the shore of the lake. What did the railroad companies have to do? They had to drive piles for miles or more to protect their tracks. They built their tracks partly on piles and partly on the bank, and when they came up to this pier the Pittsburgh and Cleveland road built a structure, a platform, on piles and joined that platform up to the pier and occupied that platform with its tracks and with its derrick, and with its derrick raises the freight from the schooners or boats lying in the river by the pier and transfers it to the cars of the company, or vice versa. It has no structure at all upon the pier, but it exercises the power of loading and unloading by means of this derrick over the pier; and that anybody else could do who had a piece of property as this railroad company has, which it has reclaimed itself and made itself, to which the United States claims no title whatsoever. That is the whole of it. It is very true it may be trundling freight backward and forward there on trucks and the like, and that may have contributed to the injury of this pier. The amendment of my colleague would remedy that, which is the amendment suggested by the Engineer Department itself; but this thing that is going on there is of immense public interest. It makes a perfect connection between the water and the railroad, and is of immense public interest. Are we to delay the repairing of the pier, which was built by the Government a quarter of a century ago or more, and which is in danger if it caves in of seriously obstructing the entrance into the port of Cleveland, until this question can be settled between the Government and the railroad? I say no.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, it often happens that it is useful in considering a case, first of all to fix the facts, and as I have succeeded now in finding the report which I had in mind before, made by Colonel P. J. Cram, of the Engineer Corps, and by the Chief Engineer of that corps transmitted to Congress in 1865, I beg to read a few words which I think will enable us all to understand more exactly the state and history of this matter:

In my report rendered 2d of November, 1864, upon the condition of this important harbor—

This is the harbor of Cleveland—

I described the abuses practiced upon this public property by private individuals and corporate companies in their use for private advantage of the east pier. So far from ceasing these abuses, they have been continued on an increasing scale, and it probably will not end until that pier is entirely destroyed; then a loud call will be made for the Government to build it up again. In consequence of my not being able without military force to get the entire possession of that pier out of the hands of those who are using it for private pecuniary advantage for docking purposes, no repairs have been put upon it at the public expense. But the west pier and the pier-head have been very thoroughly repaired, and both have been filled with stones, with the exception of a part of the inner sustaining work, put in to strengthen and preserve the old west pier.

I read that as a contribution to the question suggested by the Senator from Ohio, whether this corporation has in fact taken possession of the pier or not. This officer says military force would be necessary to enable him to dispossess it, and I should judge that must be a pretty good possessio pedis, which the railroad company is and was asserting at the pier. I will read now to the Senate this part of the report as bearing upon another branch of this case:

I have—

Says Colonel Cram—

the statistics of the amount that is docked and kept on the Government east pier, by said companies and individuals, who have been using, and still continue to use it for their own benefit. If this dockage were computed at half what is charged on any private dock in the city, it would amount to more, per year, than the whole cost just estimated for the pier extension.

The companies then could well afford to build the extensions there, and forever keep them in repair, and do all the dredging required, in consideration of the use they now enjoy of the existing east pier. I think Congress should be called upon to enact for some arrangement to this effect.

I ask attention to this part of the report:

The number of tons handled on and over the east pier, in two articles alone, computed at one-half the dockage for the same at private docks, amounts in the past two and present years to $166,945.

Observe, this is only for the coal and ore. The iron, lumber, wood, timber, and other heavy articles they pile on and sell from that public pier is enormous. Going back, and estimating from the time that pier was built the value of the dockage, for which it has been used by companies and individuals, to the present time, I find to be $882,500!

The present year, 1865, this dock privilege, in coal and ore, will be worth to the occupants of the pier not less than $82,500, for which they pay nothing.

Mr. President, without reference to any constitutional questions or any location, this report suggests to me this inquiry: Can it be that any system of legislation or act of legislation is just or true which enables an individual, whether a natural person or a corporation, to occupy for nothing, reaping a pecuniary advantage in a brief space of time of $882,500, public property of the United States (so treated and assumed by the legislation) for nothing, to destroy and continue and persevere in destroying it, for a long series of years, the legislation resting upon the idea that, without any determination, recompense, settlement, termination of that condition of things, the Government is to continue by annual stipends to maintain perpetually this work, thus to be treated, that thus a private harvest may be reaped?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from New York shows conclusively, beyond peradventure, that it is the duty of the Government of the United States at once to repair this pier, because of the amplitude of the interest involved in its repair. This work compared with hundreds of the provisions contained in the bill is simply out of all comparison. The Senator from New York says that the railroad companies in Cleveland and the citizens of Cleveland and the citizens of Ohio and of all that region of country have got the benefit of this pier to the extent of $882,000.

Mr. CONKLING. No, I beg my friend's pardon. I wish they had. What I say is given to us in a report which says the railroad company, not anybody else, have stored on, piled up, and sold what would amount to $882,000, and put it into their own pockets, and my friend's constituents have not received any benefit from it.

Mr. SHERMAN. As a matter of fact, every steamboat, every barge, every vessel of any kind whatever that comes into the harbor of Cleveland comes alongside the pier and gets the benefit of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly; it is a wharf of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. As a wharf it is of common benefit and use to the whole people of the United States, shared in by every person who participates in that commerce; and now because that costs $8,000 you will refuse to repair a pier which yields an average of $800,000, but will draw snags out of the Little Kanawha! It is preposterous. The Cleveland and Pittsburgh road it seems own the land; they own the buildings; but all the railroads have joint rights there. All the railroads are interested in that matter, as the report shows. It is a fact, as I know myself, that for nearly a mile east of that pier, the ground is occupied by a series of railroads; and the railroads concentrate there, and do an immense amount of business. Suppose the Cleveland and Pittsburgh was to pay its share, suppose the Lake Shore was to pay its share, and some other party, Tom Jones, who owns a schooner ought to pay a part, will we say how much Tom Jones shall pay, how much the Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company shall pay, and how much the Lake Shore Railroad Company shall pay? This matter was brought to the attention of Congress ten years ago. My friend from New York has been chairman of the Committee on Commerce two or three years; the former Senator from Michigan [Mr. Chandler] for many years before that time. Why have they not provided a remedy for this if it is wrong?

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to answer that?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator does me honor overmuch. I have only been chairman of the Committee on Commerce one session; but if my honorable friend will allow me I am quite sure, although I speak from recollection, because I do not think I can be mistaken about the thing, that with his assent we did pass a bill releasing to the city of Cleveland all title of the United States to this pier that she might deal with it. What became of that bill I do not know, but the Senator cannot have forgotten the discussion and the fact that a bill was passed in the Senate making what from my recollection I think would be a wholesome provision, such as I agree with him ought in some way to be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know about that. The Senator no doubt is correct in his recollection, but I do not remember about it. It does seem to me that for us to stand here on an appropriation of $8,000 for a work of such conceded importance, and then go by the millions almost upon works of unimportance, would be a strange spectacle. I am willing that the Secretary of War shall be authorized to impose terms and conditions upon these railroad companies so as to prevent any injury to this pier. It ought to be done, and the amendment I proposed in pursuance of the recommendation of the Engineer Department proposes to give that authority to the Secretary of War.

Now, Mr. President, I have no particular interest in this river and harbor bill, but I think we ought not to delay any longer a question of this kind. I do not think there is any constitutional question involved in it. It is simply a question whether on the whole the Government of the United States ought not to repair its own pier which it has held in its possession for now forty-six years, its title to which is unquestioned and unquestionable; or whether we shall wait to settle a petty controversy that has sprung up between the engineer in charge of the work and certain railroad companies as to how much each railroad company ought to pay to make up this $8,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator from Vermont will withdraw his motion to recommit, so that we can have a vote upon this question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will do it to oblige my friend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The motion to recommit is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, as modified.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot move to amend it now; I shall have to wait until we get into the Senate. It will never amount to anything as it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall be glad to hear the Senator's suggestion; perhaps I will accept it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no doubt, from what I have heard from both the Senators from Ohio, that this appropriation is needed to repair this pier. The difficulty in my mind is whether there is not a recognition of a right in the railroad company by proposing an arrangement or agreement with that company. If that is true, if the railroad company has any interest whatever in the improvement, then I do not feel at liberty to vote an appropriation of money for the benefit of a railroad corporation or to advance in any respect the property of a railroad corporation. If I am satisfied that that is absolutely the property of the Government, I am ready to vote for the appropriation; but that is just my difficulty. I do not want to vote money out of the public Treasury to improve a pier belonging to a railroad company; and unless I can be satisfied that the railroad company has no interest in the pier, I cannot vote any appropriation of that kind. It seems to me that the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, impliedly at least, admits, by proposing that an arrangement shall be made with the company, that there is some right of property in that pier belonging to the railroad company.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offered the amendment because the engineer-in-chief recommended it. I do not admit that the railroad company has any right whatever, because that is the property of the United States; but it is a great easement not only to this company but to the whole people of that region that this business should go on as it has been going on for years. To deprive them of it would be to almost paralyze the commerce of the region.

Mr. SAULSBURY. But does not the company set up some claim of right?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. They have built alongside of this pier and they have actually used it, and in that way have possession and practically have exclusive possession. The Senator will see from the amount of business done there and from the nature of the thing they would take possession.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Do they claim the right to control that pier?

Mr. SHERMAN. Never that I know of. They have a right to do business over it like other people.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no doubt from what I have heard that the appropriation is a wise and proper appropriation, provided there is no adverse claim by the railroad company, and that is just the difficulty in my mind. It seemed to me from the discussion that there must be some claim of use or occupancy set up by the railroad company.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not understand that the railroad company has ever set up the least right to that pier or the use or occupancy of that pier any more than any other corporation or individual, any more than the whole public have. The whole public use that pier when it is necessary. They run their trucks right over this part of the pier that is spoken of clear to the end of the pier. Everybody does it that sees fit. The only advantage the railroad company has is that it has built a platform which does belong to it and which adjoins the pier, and that gives it a local advantage perhaps, but an advantage that is worth millions of dollars to the general public.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] as modified, to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be reported.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 75, 76, and 77, as follows:

For the improvement of the harbor at New Haven, Connecticut, by constructing a breakwater, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 80 and 81, as follows:

For the improvement of the harbor at Milford, Connecticut, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 82 and 83, as follows:

For the improvement of the Housatonic River, Connecticut, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 84 and 85, as follows:

For the improvement of the harbor at Hyannis, Massachusetts, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 86 and 87, as follows:

For the improvement of Taunton River, Massachusetts, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 92 and 93, as follows:

For the improvement of Merrimac River, Massachusetts, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 94 and 95, as follows:

For the improvement of the entrance of Salem Harbor, Massachusetts, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 97, to strike out "twelve" and insert "ten;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "five" and insert "four;" so as to make the clause read:

For the improvement of Penobscot River, Maine, $10,000; $4,000 of which shall be expended at or near the "Narrows" in said river at Bucksport.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 100 and 101, as follows:

For the improvement at Richmond Island, Maine, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 103, to reduce the appropriation for the improvement of Cocheco River, New Hampshire, from $15,000 to $14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 107, to reduce the appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Swanton, Vermont, from $10,000 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 109, to reduce the appropriation for the construction of Ice Harbor at Chester, Pennsylvania, from $6,000 to $2,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 110 and 111, as follows:

For the improvement of Passaic River, New Jersey, $10,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I suppose if I say anything against striking out this item it will be considered that it is a local interest and that I have not regard to the general welfare of the United States. New Jersey has four hundred miles of sea-coast, and contributes toward the revenues of the country as much as, and I think more than, any State of its population. If you strike this out there is nothing at all in the bill for New Jersey.

Mr. CONKLING. Except the Hudson River improvement.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Hudson River my friend from New York would hardly say belonged to New Jersey, for New York is in the habit——

Mr. CONKLING. A part of it stood for New Jersey, and the Senator had them put together in one sum of $66,000, so as to apply to both.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Then I hope it will be understood that $25,000 of that sum goes to improve the Hudson on the Jersey side. But this is a matter of $10,000 on an improvement which it was estimated would cost $100,000. Ninety thousand dollars has been spent, and this $10,000 will complete it. I think that the item had better stand in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out the lines.

The question being put, it was declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN called for a division.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust my friend from New Jersey will not disturb the harmony of this bill. We have appropriated in the bill just $5,000,000. I appreciate the strength of his appeal, but I think that Passaic River can get along for another year. This work is all dredging, and I think we can manage the Passaic River for another year without increasing the appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey insist upon a division?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No, sir; I will trust to my friend to have it righted elsewhere.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 120, to reduce the appropriation for the improvement of the Des Moines Rapids, Mississippi River, from $275,000 to $230,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 122 and 123, as follows:

For the improvement of Elk River, Maryland, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 126 and 127, as follows:

For the improvement of the mouth of Occoquan River, Virginia, $2,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 128 and 129, as follows:

For the improvement of Aquia Creek, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 130 and 131, as follows:

For the improvement of Nomoni Creek, Virginia, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 132 and 133, as follows:

For the improvement of Accotink Creek, Virginia, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 139, to increase the appropriation for the improvement of Cape Fear River, North Carolina, from $100,000 to $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 142, to reduce the appropriation for the improvement of the French Broad River between Brevard and the Buncombe County line, North Carolina, from $15,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 143 and 144, as follows:

For the improvement of Pamlico River, North Carolina, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 145 and 146, as follows:

For the improvement of Clinch River, Tennessee, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 147 and 148, as follows:

For the improvement of the Hiawassee River, Tennessee, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 149 and 150, as follows:

For the improvement of the Powell River, Virginia and Tennessee, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 153, after the word "line," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifteen;" in line 154, after the words "Smith's Shoals," strike out "twenty" and to insert "ten;" in line 155, after the words "Smith's Shoals," strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-five;" and at the end of the clause to insert:

And from Smith's Shoals to the Falls of the Cumberland, $2,000.

So as to make the clause read:

For the improvement of Cumberland River above the city of Nashville, Tennessee, from Nashville to the Kentucky line, $15,000; and thence to the foot of Smith's Shoals, $10,000; and for Smith's Shoals, $25,000; and from Smith's Shoals to the Falls of the Cumberland, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 160, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the Great Kanawha River, West Virginia, including the purchase of sites for dams and locks, not exceeding $15,000," from $300,000 to $270,000.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the chairman to state where these "sites for dams and locks, not exceeding $15,000," are to be purchased or found?

Mr. DAVIS. I will answer.

Mr. CONKLING. Let me state the point of my question. We heard the other day, as we have heard on many bygone days, about the improvement of the Kanawha, for a certain distance, which my friend, I understand, once traversed. I want to know whether these dams and locks are with a view to the ultimate improvement, the estimate of which, I believe, was $35,000,000, or whether they concern only the part of the river which he knows is referred to, by what I have said.

Mr. DAVIS. It is near Charleston. This concerns the present locks, now in course of erection, and the purchase of sites for them, near Charleston. One is just below, and the other just above Charleston. There are two dams and locks now in course of construction.

Mr. CONKLING. How many new sites for dams and locks are to be bought? This appropriates for "the purchase of sites for dams and locks," not for those that are resident now or have been begun now, but for the purchase of new sites.

Mr. DAVIS. Two dams are already commenced where they approach the shore. The sites for those two dams, though they have been purchased and they have been at work on them, have not yet been paid for, because there was no appropriation applicable to that purpose. There is but $15,000 involved, or so much thereof as may be necessary. I understand there are but six or seven thousand dollars left for the present locks and future locks on this particular work that has been already commenced.

Mr. CONKLING. How many sites are to be purchased?

Mr. DAVIS. That I cannot answer. There are two now. There may be others after the work progresses. The limit is $15,000.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator will see as quickly as I do the point of my question. If $15,000 be appropriated for the purchase of sites unnumbered, for dams and locks unlocated, he knows that it commits to the discretion of those who manage the business to purchase as many sites as they please and pay down a sum, no matter how small, upon each one within the limit of $15,000. Now if we mean to appropriate $15,000 to pay for two sites, we ought to say so; and if it is to pay for six sites we ought to say that. But I submit that inasmuch as the sites are not even located by being kept within boundaries between termini, but on the face of this bill may be anywhere on the Great Kanawha River in West Virginia, we ought either by metes and bounds or by specifying the maximum number of sites to say in some sense what we mean, and not to commit to sheer discretion whether they shall purchase two sites or ten sites or twenty sites, whether they shall be located on the Kanawha below Charleston or whether they shall range on the Kanawha from the place where it departs from the State of West Virginia to the place where it enters that State. As this language stands now, it is "for the improvement of the Great Kanawha River, West Virginia," and I do not think a correct construction would confine it to West Virginia. That locates the river.

The Great Kanawha River, West Virginia, including the purchase of sites for dams and locks not exceeding $15,000, $270,000.

If $15,000 will enable a payment to be made down so as to bind the bargain for the purchase of fifteen sites, that may be done, and they may be located anywhere; and in the interest of this improvement, if the Senator knows where these sites are to be and the number of them, I submit it should be stated in the bill "for the purchase of three sites" or "four sites" or "six sites" or whatever the number "for locks and dams." If no survey has been made, if nobody knows where they are to be, certainly the appropriation is premature.

Mr. DAVIS. This wording, I understand, is in accordance with the recommendation of the Department. I understand that there are two already commenced, and it is presumed that the $15,000 probably will purchase six or seven, whichever it is finally determined to build between the falls of the Great Kanawha and the Ohio River.

Mr. CONKLING. Then should it not say "between the falls of the Great Kanawha and the Ohio River?"

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection to that. I think it would be very proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "locks" it is proposed to insert "between the great falls and the Ohio River."

Mr. DAVIS. Nobody objects to that.

Mr. WITHERS. Let it be done by general consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee will be so modified, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I propose to add another amendment, "and full payment therefor," after the words just inserted, so that whatever locks or dams we purchase the sites shall be paid for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee will be so modified, if there is no objection.

Mr. CONKLING. It should come in before the other amendment, so as to make the clause read:

For the improvement of the Great Kanawha River, West Virginia, including the purchase of sites for dams and locks and full payment therefor, between the great falls and the Ohio River, not exceeding $15,000, $270,000.

Mr. HARVEY. I suggest that the amendment would read a little better by saying "purchase of and full payment for," and letting the description of the sites and dams come in connection with the location.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection that change of phraseology will be made. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the amendment of the committee, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert as lines 162, 163, 164, and 165:

For removal of Beaver and Nailor Bend Rocks, and for cleaning out snags and fallen trees in the Little Kanawha, West Virginia, $7,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 170, 171, and 172, as follows:

For continuing the work of dredging and removing obstructions to navigation in Cypress Bayou, Texas, $30,000.

Mr. MAXEY. On a former occasion I explained the necessity of the work. The item passed the House of Representatives, and when it came here it was stricken out by the committee, just as it is stricken out now, and restored by the Senate. I fully explained then the reason for it, and I am of the same opinion still. I hope it will not be stricken out.

As to the next item, for the improvement of Sabine Pass, &c., immediately following, I explained that before, and the appropriation made by the House was retained by the Senate. I perceive that the committee propose to reduce it from $60,000 to $40,000.

I gave an explanation also as to the succeeding item for deepening the channel over the bar at the mouth of the Trinity River, draining some twenty-five or thirty counties engaged in the cotton trade. The appropriation is not for the improvement of the river, but removing the bar at the entrance of the bay. That was given before, but I see it stricken out again, though the appropriation is only $12,500.

The next item is for the improvement of Pass Cavallo Inlet, which is reduced from $40,000 to $20,000; and then there is $10,000 for the improvement of Aransas Pass, which is stricken out by the committee. I gave the reasons fully before. I hope the Senate will not agree to these amendments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 177, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of Sabine Pass, and for improvement of Blue Buck Bar and Sabine Bay, and for deepening the channel over the bar at the mouth of the Sabine River, and for deepening of the channel over the bar at the mouth of Neches River, where these rivers enter Sabine Bay," from $60,000 to $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 179, 180, and 181, as follows:

For deepening the channel over the bar at the mouth of the Trinity River where it enters Galveston Bay, $12,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 183, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of Paso Cavallo, inlet to Matagorda Bay, Texas," from $40,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 184, 185, and 186, as follows:

For the improvement of Aransas Pass, and approaches to Rockport and Corpus Christi Harbors, Texas, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 188, to reduce the appropriation for the improvement of the Coosa River, Georgia, from $40,000 to $30,000.

Mr. SPENCER. I move to amend after the word "Georgia" by inserting "and Alabama, between Rome and the Selma, Rome and Dalton Railroad bridge." The chairman of the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection.

Mr. GORDON. That was the clause in the original bill.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a mere clerical omission here and ought to be in the bill.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was after the word "Arkansas," in line 189, to insert the words "and Louisiana," and in line 190, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight" and insert "twelve;" so that the clause will read:

For the improvement of the Ouachita River, Arkansas and Louisiana, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 191 and 192, as follows:

For the improvement of the Tombigbee River, Alabama, $13,950.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. There is manifest unfairness in it. Right above this is "the Ouachita River, Arkansas and Louisiana," where the appropriation is increased from $8,000 to $12,000; and here is the Tombigbee River, one of the finest and most beautiful streams in the South, that floats perhaps more cotton than almost any other river in the country, the appropriation for which is stricken out. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the work to be done?

Mr. SPENCER. Cutting out snags and the general improvement of the river.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust that my good friend from Alabama will not press a division on this amendment.

Mr. SPENCER. I feel that I owe a duty to the constituency that I in part represent here to see some sort of justice done. I do not think the committee in this revised bill has been doing justice to the country generally.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not care to argue it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to strike out the clause.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 196, to increase the appropriation "for the improvement of the Lower Willamette and Columbia Rivers from Portland, Oregon, to the sea," from $15,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 199, to increase the appropriation "for the improvement of the Upper Willamette River, Oregon," from $15,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 202 and 203, as follows:

For breakwater at Wilmington, California, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 204 and 205, as follows:

For the improvement of Sacramento and Feather Rivers, California, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 209, after the word "River," to strike out the words "below Stockton;" and in line 210, after the word "California," to strike out "to be applied below Stockton;" so that the clause will read:

For the improvement of San Joaquin River, California, $20,000.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to inquire why it is that you strike out "below Stockton?" Where is it to be applied?

Mr. ALLISON. It is to be applied, in the discretion of the engineers, either above or below Stockton. There is a large commerce on the San Joaquin River above Stockton.

Mr. CONKLING. You do not mean by this that it shall not be applied below Stockton?

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all; we simply give them the whole river instead of a portion.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 212 and 213, as follows:

For the improvement of Monterey Harbor, California, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 215, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the Delaware River below Petty's Island," from $50,000 to $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 217, to reduce the appropriation "for removing raft in Red River and closing Tone's Bayou, Louisiana," from $40,000 to $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 221, to increase the appropriation "for the improvement of the Schuylkill River, Pennsylvania," from $18,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 222, 223, and 224, as follows:

For the improvement of the Delaware River between Trenton and White Hill, New Jersey, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 226, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Bridgeport, Connecticut," from $15,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 231 and 232, as follows:

For the improvement of the harbor at Saugatuck, Michigan, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 236, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Manitowoc, Wisconsin," from $10,000 to $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 238, to reduce the appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Sheboygan, Wisconsin, from $8,000 to $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 240, to reduce the appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Port Washington, Wisconsin, from $12,500 to $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 243, to increase the appropriation for the improvement of the harbor at Oswego, New York, from $70,000 to $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 244 and 245, as follows:

For the improvement of the harbor at Waddington, New York, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 246, 247, and 248, as follows:

For the improvement of Harlem River, New York, $15,000, to be expended between Ward's Island and Hudson River.

Mr. KERNAN. I am very reluctant to interfere with the harmony of the report; but this is an appropriation made with a view to improve the Harlem River between the point named and the Hudson, where the tide ebbs and flows, and everybody familiar with the locality can appreciate how important it is. The work has been commenced, and this is a very small appropriation to continue it, much less than what it requires. It will enable the commerce to pass from the East River into the Hudson, the tide ebbing and flowing throughout the whole space, and it will greatly facilitate commerce and cheapen it and render a great deal of it more safe. I hope it will not be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment striking out the clause.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in lines 249 and 250, after the words "Hudson River," to strike out "New York, twenty-five" and insert "sixty-six;" so as to make the clause read:

For the improvement of Hudson River, $66,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 251 and 252, as follows:

For the improvement of Elk River, West Virginia, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 259 and 260, as follows:

For the improvement of Mackey's Ferry, North Carolina, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 262, to reduce the appropriation for the improvement of the Yazoo River, Mississippi, from $22,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 263 and 264, as follows:

For the improvement of Pascagoula Bay, Mississippi, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 265, after the word "White," to strike out "and Saint Francis Rivers" and insert "River at Buffalo Shoals;" in line 266, after the word "Arkansas," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "ten;" and in line 267," after the word "dollars," to strike out "of which there shall be expended $10,000 upon White River and the remainder upon Saint Francis River;" so as to make the clause read:

For the improvement of White River at Buffalo Shoals, Arkansas, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 270 and 271, as follows:

For the improvement of the Perquimons River, North Carolina, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out from line 274 to line 278, as follows:

For the improvement of the Rock Castle River, Kentucky, $2,000; and, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, to be expended on Cumberland and Rock Castle Rivers above Nashville, Tennessee, $23,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 280, to reduce the appropriation "for the Etowah River, Georgia," from $15,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 282, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the Ocmulgee River, Georgia," from $25,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 283 and 284, as follows:

For the improvement of the port of Darien, Georgia, $5,000.

Mr. GORDON. I should rather have the sense of the Senate on that amendment after I have repeated the statement which I made the other day. From this port is shipped one-fourth of the entire lumber exported from the United States. It is a port that really requires some improvement; very small; as is seen, only $5,000 is asked. There are some snags, logs that have drifted down from the hills above several hundred miles and have lodged in that port, and ought to be removed. I have nothing more to ask than the privilege of making that statement and taking the sense of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 287, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of New River, from the lead-mines in Wythe County, Virginia, to the mouth of Greenbrier River, West Virginia," from $25,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 289 and 290, as follows:

For the improvement of the Mattapony River, Virginia, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 291 and 292, as follows:

For the improvement of the Pamunkey River, Virginia, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 294, to increase the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Norfolk, Virginia," from $13,000 to $39,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 298 and 299, as follows:

For the improvement of the Choctawhatchie River, Florida and Alabama, $5,000.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope this amendment will not be agreed to. I think this a great outrage to strike out a small appropriation of $5,000 for this important river. It drains a new lumber country just opened up, and there is nothing that will advantage commerce more than an appropriation for the improvement of the river. I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 300 and 301, as follows:

For the improvement of the Apalachicola River, Florida, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 302 and 303, as follows:

For removing obstructions and deepening channel at the pass of Brazos Santiago, Texas, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 305, to reduce the appropriation "for continuing the improvement on the outer bar at Galveston, Texas," from $200,000 to $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 307 and 308, as follows:

For the improvement of the French Broad River in Tennessee, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out from line 309 to line 312, as follows:

For the improvement of the Missouri River at the point where it is cutting into the Kansas shore above Saint Joseph, Missouri, for the protection of the city of Saint Joseph, $10,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do hope the Senate will not agree to this amendment recommended by the committee. That amount is not to be expended in Missouri, and the way the bill is now arranged there is not one solitary cent of this $5,000,000 to be expended in Missouri. This is a matter of great necessity at this place. The river there, in consequence of some improvements that have heretofore been made and not having sufficient money to perfect them, is cutting rapidly into the Kansas shore and threatens to cut through, leaving an island in front of the city of Saint Joe, and also to leave the railroad bridge there entirely useless, of no value. I think that this small sum of $10,000 should certainly be given. I have the report of the engineer in charge of the work recommending even a larger amount than this and saying that it is a matter of public necessity.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY. My attention was called away by the rapid reading, and I ask that lines 304, 305, and 306 be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote will be reconsidered by unanimous consent, and the question will be on the amendment striking out those lines.

Mr. MAXEY. This amendment covers the most important harbor that we have in the State of Texas. It is one of the most unquestionable importance not only to the State of Texas but to the State of Kansas, to the State of Nebraska, and to the Indian Territory. The House bill is:

For continuing the improvement on the outer bar at Galveston, Texas, $200,000.

The amendment is to cut it down to $150,000. The engineer recommended $350,000. Considerable work has been done there, and a very small appropriation was recommended for continuance. The recommendation of two years ago was $400,000, and out of that $150,000 were appropriated. He again recommends $350,000 for the present year and urges it. This appropriation is urged in a letter sent here in January last with the report of the engineer in charge, Major Howell; by the officer in charge of the work and by the board of engineers, composed of Generals Tower, Wright, and Newton. If there are any three better engineers in all America than these three I have no knowledge of them, and I know that the young officer in charge of the work is a competent and able man. I have personally visited and inspected these works, and I have some knowledge of them myself.

It may be said that the work going on is an experiment. By reference to a paper which I hold in my hand it will be found that by a small sum placed there prior to December, 1875, the gabions which had been put down to form the jetty were not yet filled by sand; a storm arose before they could be filled with sand. They stood there in the water, and the engineer in charge, Major Howell, reports that it was to his utter amazement, when the storm was over and he was able to look into the work there, that the gabions were precisely in the place where they had been laid. These engineers, General Tower, General Newton, and General Wright, say that, notwithstanding all the storms, the resistance of the jetties is remarkable. They use a stronger word than that; they say it is unquestionable; and yet since that time, since they made that report in regard to that storm, a cyclone swept over that coast subsequent to all these reports, and the work withstood the storm triumphantly.

Now they say that if this gabion system, which I could explain to the Senate because I have examined it particularly, succeeds, it will save the United States Government millions of dollars, because it is the cheapest plan that has ever been adopted for improvements. That it is believed to be an eminently successful system we have only to look at the fact that Captain Eads is risking all his fortune in carrying out a similar system at the mouth of the Mississippi River. I say to the Senator in charge of this bill that if that system is successful it will save the United States Government millions of dollars. I say to him, for I have not time in a five-minute speech to read all these things, that the chief engineer says it is important to go on and with a sufficient appropriation to continue the work without interruption.

In the face of all these things I think I have been very reasonable, considering that the committee have struck me down $177,000, and I do ask that in this case the appropriation for the mouth of Galveston Harbor be made; and I call on every Senator here who has been to Galveston, any one that knows anything about the importance of the commerce of that place, whether that appropriation should not be left as the House left it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. The action of the Senate on the amendment proposed by the committee in lines 304, 305, 306 having been reconsidered by unanimous consent, the question recurs, Will the Senate agree to the amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. We have appropriated in this bill $225,000 for the harbor at Galveston, $100,000 more than is given to any harbor in this bill, and a larger appropriation than is given in this bill to any improvement of harbors except the improvement of Hell Gate, New York. We were compelled under the instructions of the Senate to reduce this appropriation somewhat. The sum given here for this particular purpose is $150,000. It will go a long way toward building these jetties, and I trust the Senator from Texas will not press his opposition to the amendment.

Mr. MAXEY. I only desire to say in reply that I find $150,000 given to Cape Fear on a recommendation of $210,000, and I find $270,000 given to the Kanawha River, and $270,000 given to the Muscle Shoals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will remind the Senator that his time is exhausted on the pending amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert as lines 313 and 314 the following:

For the improvement of the Missouri River above the mouth of the Yellowstone, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 315, 316, and 317, as follows:

For the improvement of the Upper Monongahela River near Morgantown, West Virginia, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 320 and 321, as follows:

For the improvement of the Wicomico River, Maryland, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 322 and 323, as follows:

For the improvement of Big Sandy River, Kentucky and West Virginia, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 325, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Michigan City, Indiana," from $50,000 to $35,000.

Mr. MORTON. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. Fifty thousand dollars is barely sufficient for the purpose. It is the only lake harbor we have. I trust the committee will not insist on the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I must insist. We were obliged to make a little reduction in this appropriation in order to carry out the general purpose of the Senate.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to join with my colleague in insisting that the reduction ought not to take place. The original bill as it came from the House contained the amount of $50,000, and I regarded it as the very smallest sum that could properly be appropriated for the purpose. That was not changed when the bill was first reported to the Senate; it has only been changed in this report. I do trust it will be restored.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would carry the bill above $5,000,000.

Mr. McDONALD. There is a disposition, I see, on the part of the Senate to abide by the report of the committee, and I feel that inclination myself very strongly. It is late in the session, and it will be difficult for every Senator to get what he desires; but this is the first time that this appropriation has been touched since it has been brought forward, and I hope it will commend itself to the Senate either now or in some other form as it originally stood, so that we shall not lose the benefit of the amount first placed in the bill. This is the only harbor south of Chicago on Lake Michigan, and the only harbor we have in the State of Indiana; and it is becoming a very important place not only to our State but to all that northern country.

Mr. MORTON. I trust the Senator from Iowa will not require this matter to be discussed. I see that he has enlarged the appropriations in many cases, and put in some new ones. There are two new ones immediately following this item. Here is the single appropriation in the State of Indiana for a lake harbor, the only one we have. It is $50,000. It is a small allowance for the work. To cut it down to $35,000 virtually destroys it; and if we are to be cut down, so far as I am concerned I shall feel myself under the necessity of antagonizing appropriations that are proposed here in the form of amendments. The Senator has got two in his own State immediately following this item. This is not just. I understand the merits of this appropriation. Fifty thousand dollars is small enough. To cut it down to $35,000 will very nearly destroy it and leave the work unfinished. I therefore appeal to the Senator from Iowa to withdraw his objection.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Indiana calls attention to two amendments immediately following this, and gives me fair notice that he will antagonize those. If they are improper amendments of course the Senate will strike them out. Now, this harbor at Michigan City has been appropriated for a great many years, as the Senator is very well aware. The Engineer Bureau estimate only $60,000 for the completion of the work, and it is for the extension of the breakwater at this point, Michigan City, and for dredging. Of course $35,000 will not go as far toward building a breakwater as $60,000, the full estimate of the engineers, on a basis of $14,000,000. But I submit to my friends from Indiana that we have cut down this appropriation less than any estimate in the bill that I know of, and have given them $35,000. If it were proper for me to say so, I might say that this was done at the very last moment, we having struck it down originally to only $40,000. I trust the Senators from Indiana will not for the sake of $15,000 for this harbor, whereas estimate of only $60,000 was originally made, disturb and destroy the harmony of this bill.

Mr. MORTON. I do not think the harmony of this bill requires this little appropriation for our only harbor to be virtually destroyed. It is in a very imperfect condition. It has been estimated that with $60,000 the breakwater can be so extended as to make our harbor safe and make it serviceable. To make it $35,000 is virtually to delay it and make it useless almost for another year. This is not required. Here follow two new appropriations not in the original bill:

For the improvement of the Rush Chute and the harbor of Burlington, Iowa, $10,000.

For the improvement of the harbor at Fort Madison, Iowa, $10,000.

Mr. SPENCER. I will state to the Senator, if he will allow me, that there were no appropriations last year for those two objects.

Mr. MORTON. No, they are new works. They come in here as amendments. I could go over the bill and pick out enough introductions of that kind, I think. All we ask is that a State that has but one lake harbor, and it is a pet of ours, and we think a good deal of it, should not be crippled and cut down until it is almost worthless, while there are plenty of works in the bill that, so far as importance is concerned, do not compare with it. This is an important harbor, and especially important to the State of Indiana.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to state one fact to the Senate in reference to this harbor. As I have already stated, it is the only harbor on Lake Michigan south of Chicago, and has become of late years, since these improvements have made it of practical use and benefit, a harbor of refuge to a very great extent, as well as concentrating there a very large commerce from the upper lakes, and especially in the matter of timber. As I have already stated, this appropriation at $50,000 ran its length through the House and the Senate and the Senate committee in its first report, and this is the first time it has been touched. As we are not asking much, we should like very much indeed to have the item restored to that amount which would give it some efficiency in completing the harbor. There are some other reductions in this amended bill that touch our State which we do not propose to say anything about; but this is a matter that we are exceedingly anxious shall be restored to the original amount as fixed in the House bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, this harbor at Michigan City has had hitherto $526,000 for its improvement. We have fed it from year to year and day by day for a great many years; and now the engineer estimates only $60,000 for continuing this work. We have given $35,000, and yet we are told that this is a destruction to this harbor at Michigan City. It is a mistaken statement. I will say to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] that when we come to debate the two next amendments I shall be ready to meet him upon that subject, and to discuss whether they are new works or old works.

Let us take this bill as it stands on each particular amendment. If this is an unjust amendment, vote it down. If the committee have not exercised a proper and wise discretion in making a fair reduction here, vote this amendment down. When we come to the next amendments, if the Senator from Indiana wishes to assail them, I shall be ready to defend them, and the committee will be ready to defend them.

Mr. MORTON. One word. All we ask in this matter is justice. I have no objection to the Senator's amendments, though they are new works and they are not in the bill as it came from the House and were not in the former bill. They are not necessary, therefore, to the harmony of the bill. No appropriation was made for them last year. What my friend means in talking about the harmony of the bill and striking this appropriation down for that purpose and putting in these two new items, I do not very well comprehend. All we ask is to preserve this appropriation as it came from the House and as it passed the Senate before.

Mr. WEST. As a member of the committee that reported this bill and having voted to agree to this amendment, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to the report of the engineers, in which they state that they had in hand and available on the 1st of July, 1875, $85,000 of preceding appropriations, that they have a large amount of that money now available, and this $60,000 they cannot use during the short season that this bill now contemplates. They have enough money there, and I do not think if the Senator was entirely familiar with the amounts that have been appropriated and are now available he would suppose that this reduction would in any way interfere with the prosecution of what the wants of commerce demand there.

Mr. MORTON. If my friend understood the plan of that work and what was necessary and the condition of the harbor, he would at once see the force of what I say about it. This is a smaller amount than they believe they can get on with, and there is no economy in cutting the appropriation down to $35,000. You save $15,000 here and you cripple the work, and perhaps you will put $15,000 in for Pipe Creek or some other place not in the bill before.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment in line 325.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 33, noes 9.

Mr. MORTON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. CONKLING. The yeas and nays being called for on this amendment, I wish to relieve myself from the possible appearance of seeming to be invidious, and therefore I will assign briefly my reason in regard to it.

The first amendment in this bill is to strike out altogether the appropriation for continuing the work in the harbor of Dunkirk, and I might borrow what the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] has said touching the work he speaks of as descriptive of the work I speak of. Following that amendment are three or four others striking out altogether appropriations for harbors and important harbors on Lake Ontario, on the northern frontier of New York, a fact which I mention only as showing that I know something about them. I cannot support the committee in striking out works which I do know about and which happen to be located in the State from which I come and which I know to be important works, which I know to be partially complete, and then vote to overrule the committee when it has reduced this estimate about 40 per cent. in a bill in which it has reduced the estimates as large 66⅔ per cent. or thereabouts. The total estimates are $14,000,000. The committee brings them down to $5,000,000, and as 5 is to 14 so is the general reduction. Here is a reduction which is left above the average reduction, and we are asked to override the committee on a state of case which applies not only to other instances but which applies to others equally meritorious where the committee have stricken out altogether the appropriations.

The Senators from Indiana must see that it is very awkward for Senators coming from the locality in which such utter refusal to appropriate has been recommended by the committee and concurred in by the Senate, to turn around now and make this more than an exceptional case to the general rule. It is said that the committee has put in two appropriations next to this item for which no appropriation was made before. That gives rise to a question. It was one of the Plinys, I believe, who supplicating Jupiter, rested his prayer mainly on the fact that he had never prayed before. Whether when a work comes here for which nothing has been voted before, it is in a less meritorious attitude than it would be if half a million dollars had been previously appropriated, is a question which we must meet when we come to those amendments. Not meaning at all to dispute the merits of this case, I must vote with the committee both because no invidious distinction has been applied to it, but it seems to me to have been exceptionally favored, and because of other cases in the bill for which I am sure a stronger argument can be made than can be made for this.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to invoke the sympathy of the Senate for Massachusetts in this connection. My colleague and I have been obliged to sit here and see Plymouth Harbor sacrificed to the spirit which has animated the committee in bringing forth this bill, the first harbor in which a vessel ever entered freighted with anything valuable to this continent, and without which I do not see any prospect of any more pilgrims ever landing upon this shore; a harbor which needs the appropriation that was in the bill originally, and without which the commerce of Massachusetts will seriously suffer. My colleague and myself upon a consultation felt as if it were due to Massachusetts and due to the commerce of that State and of the country, as well as to the ever-precious memories connected with Plymouth, to resist this attempt on the part of this committee to cut off entirely that appropriation; but in consideration of the desire to cut down the total appropriations to the lowest point, $5,000,000, we did not think it worth while to destroy the harmony of this bill. But if, after having passed by Massachusetts, and Plymouth with all its claims upon the consideration of this country, the Senate shall depart from that spirit with which they set out upon this bill, I feel as if it would be the duty of my colleague and myself to rally and move a reconsideration of the vote of the Senate upon the amendment striking out every dollar of appropriation for that harbor.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Allow me to ask a question. I wish to know of the Senator from Massachusetts whether the appropriation stricken out was for the removal of Plymouth Rock?

Mr. DAWES. No; my friend and his people in the far West and from all parts of this country have visited Plymouth so often and carried away so many mementoes of that rock that it is reduced to such small proportions as to make no obstruction on that account. It is the winds and the waves which flow in there upon that harbor and wash away the breakwater that cause trouble. I may be permitted to say that it is a harbor of refuge for the commerce of the Atlantic coast all along that portion of it, and my friend from Michigan knows what a harbor of refuge is, and without it I think the commerce of the coast will materially suffer.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has spoken five minutes on the pending amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President——

Mr. LOGAN. What has Oregon to do with Plymouth Rock? [Laughter.]

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know that Oregon has anything to do with Plymouth Rock particularly, but it has something to do with this bill and with this amendment. It would give me very great pleasure to vote with the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] to increase his appropriation to what he deems that his State is entitled to, and under ordinary circumstances I should certainly do so with a great deal of pleasure; but I intend to sustain the committee for two reasons: First, out of sympathy for the committee. I think they have labored diligently and long in order to perfect a bill that might meet with the approbation of a majority of the Senate. I shall sustain the committee again, because it is my religious belief that unless this bill is agreed to by the Senate as reported by the committee we shall not be able to pass a river and harbor bill in the Senate at this session. It is my conviction, from all that has taken place in reference to this bill in the many days that it has been under consideration here—nearly two weeks, I believe, altogether—that if we now break in upon it in any essential particular, either increasing or decreasing the appropriations as contained in the bill reported by the honorable Senator from Iowa, we shall not be able to agree upon any bill.

Now, sir, I suppose there are no Senators upon this floor who have a greater right to complain of this bill when we come to look to local interests than the Senators from Oregon. At the same time I am constrained by the considerations I have referred to and by others to refrain from doing anything in the interest of our section that would tend to disrupt or break up this bill. Why, Mr. President, we have on our coast, in which our people are immediately interested, in which the commerce of the whole Pacific coast I might say, the North Pacific coast at least has a deep interest, a river that has at least three branches that are two or three times longer, each of them, and deeper and wider and of more importance than nine-tenths of the rivers for which appropriations are made in the bill now under consideration. The Columbia River and its three forks, the Willamette, the Lewis Fork, and Clarke's Fork, are all of them mighty rivers compared with streams for which appropriations are made here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What can you say of the Snake River?

Mr. MITCHELL. I refer to the Snake River also. It is a very important river, hundreds of miles in length, and navigable by large-sized steamboats. We enter one of the branches of the Columbia River over one hundred and ten miles from its mouth by ocean vessels drawing eighteen feet of water; and the mouth of the Mississippi, until you commenced putting your jetties there, did not have eight feet of water.

You talk about appropriation, and how much do we get? There are obstructions at certain points where by making a reasonable appropriation you can extend that navigation hundreds of miles farther into the interior. That is what we want appropriations for. The obstruction of the Cascades in the Columbia River is one mile and a half in length, for which an estimate has been made after a survey by the Engineer Department under the direction of Congress, and a recommendation has been made by the War Department in favor of the improvement; and that improvement, if made, would open up the navigation of this great river for hundreds of miles above; open up a country wider in extent than all of New England and two or three of the Middle States thrown in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And with a greater population?

Mr. MITCHELL. And with a greater population as it will have at no very distant day if this is done, I will say to the honorable Senator from Vermont.

Then I say if any Senators have a right to complain here, it is not the Senators from Indiana nor the Senators from Illinois, nor the Senators from Vermont, but it is the Senators from Oregon representing this new country, not representing Plymouth Rock that was finished years ago; but representing a new country where appropriations are demanded in order to develop the resources of that great country.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to have the Senator tell us whether there would have been any Oregon if it had not been for Plymouth Rock. [Laughter.]

Mr. MITCHELL. Probably not.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I should like to know why the Senators from Oregon have any right to complain of the committee of the Senate. They say that they are the Senators who have the right to complain. The committee of the Senate has increased the appropriations made by the House bill for the State of Oregon $45,000, and I think if they had increased the appropriations for the State of Mississippi and the rivers in it $45,000, I should be disposed to stand by them, too.

Mr. MORTON. Will my friend state what this bill does for the purpose of preserving harmony in regard to the appropriations in the State of New York?

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a very interesting question. The Senator from Indiana has the figures and can answer the distinguished Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has spoken five minutes on the pending amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will yield to him to answer the question he has asked me, out of my time.

Mr. SARGENT. That is not in order.

Mr. MORTON. Then I move to recommit the bill. I simply wish to show what has been done to preserve the harmony of this bill, which takes $15,000 out of this single harbor in Indiana. This bill, according to the statement put in my hands by the Senator from Missouri, increases the appropriation for New York, at Baffalo $10,000; at Oak Orchard, $3,000; at East River or Hell Gate, $90,000; at Oswego, $20,000; for the Hudson River, $41,000; making an increase over the former bill of $110,000 for the State of New York. I should suppose the Senator from New York would be satisfied with the bill. In order to preserve the harmony of the bill and enable New York to get this increase and Oregon to get her increase of $45,000, and I do not know what other States, Indiana must in her single port be cut down $15,000, and the appropriation rendered inefficient.

I simply refer to this to show the character of this bill and what is necessary to preserve its harmony, and how important it is, so that its harmony should not be disturbed, that certain States should be largely increased and other States, having very little in the beginning, should have still less left to them. All this is in order to preserve the harmony of this appropriation bill! I think this is wrong. I do not think there is any justice in it. I think there is no economy in it. I do not wish to disturb the harmony of this proceeding, or mar the happy proportions of this bill. This harmony has been determined, and therefore I withdraw the application for the yeas and nays, but still with the distinct understanding that this is not right and that what has been largely added to one State ought not to be taken from the little given to another State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We had better have the yeas and nays, as they have been ordered.

Mr. MORTON. I withdraw the motion to recommit.

Mr. LOGAN. I feel that this bill is of great importance, but at the same time I feel a good deal as the Senator from Indiana does in reference to one of the amendments made on an appropriation to the State of Illinois; but if the Senate determine to stand by the committee, I shall certainly be as agreeable as any other Senator on the subject.

The speech that was made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] really affected me very seriously. It was not only eloquent and able, but very feeling in reference to Plymouth Rock and the harbor at Plymouth Rock. We are, I suppose, to understand that on account of an appropriation for that harbor being stricken out no other Mayflower will ever land there and probably the population of Massachusetts will be decreased, and much injury done thereby to the great people of the United States of America; but there is an appropriation in the bill which I think would affect the people of Illinois about as seriously as the appropriation with reference to Plymouth Rock. I refer to the item following the item for the improvement of the harbor at Michigan City, Indiana:

For the improvement of the channel of the Mississippi River opposite the city of Saint Louis, Missouri, by the construction of a low dam accross the channel east of Arsenal Island, known as Cahokia Chute, and in the revetment of said island, $50,000.

I think that appropriation was a perfectly proper one and a very necessary one. I only rose for the purpose of saying that if the bill is not to be amended at all, I as a matter of course shall acquiesce in the report of the committee; but if the bill is amended I shall ask the Senate to re-instate this appropriation, believing that it is one of very great importance to that part of the country. I am very sorry to see that it was stricken out by the committee. I do not believe that there is an appropriation in this bill of a more worthy character than the appropriation which was made in the bill by the House, in reference to this particular item. I am very sorry the committee struck it out. If, however, the determination is to stand by the bill as reported, I most certainly shall acquiesce in the action of the committee, and submit to whatever the Senate shall agree to in this respect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana withdraw the call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir; I desire to preserve harmony.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the call being withdrawn? The Chair hears none. The amendment is agreed to. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out from line 326 to line 330, as follows:

For the improvement of the channel of the Mississippi River opposite the city of Saint Louis, Missouri, by the construction of a low dam across the channel east of Arsenal Island, known as Cahokia Chute, and in the revetment of said island, $50,000.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa what disposition is made of this $50,000 when it was stricken out of the bill, whether it was transferred to some other appropriation or whether it was stricken out absolutely and no benefits are to be received by any part of the country from it?

Mr. ALLISON. I think I comprehend very thoroughly the intimation of the honorable Senator from Illinois. I have no doubt that this improvement at Cahokia Chute is a very meritorious one. The engineer at Saint Louis in charge of that work was compelled to make a revised estimate of the work on the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Illinois to the mouth of the Ohio, having estimated for the improvements upon the river between those two points over $1,000,000. He was required by the Bureau of Engineers to reduce his estimates so as to come within a bill of four and a half or five million dollars. He did reduce the estimates and estimated for $355,000, leaving out in that estimate Cahokia Chute; in other words, that $355,000 ought to expended elsewhere on the Mississippi River before the work at Cahokia Chute should be commenced at all. The improvement at Cahokia Chute is simply the building of a stone wall across a chute in the Mississippi River on the Illinois shore, as the Senator from Illinois very well knows, the channel crossing the river from the Saint Louis side a little above that point, where a private improvement was made by the State of Missouri on the western bank of the Mississippi River, against the protest of the engineer in charge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who had the jurisdiction there, the United States or the State of Missouri?

Mr. ALLISON. That constitutional question I of course have not examined; but this improvement of Cahokia Chute is made necessary from the fact that an obstruction was put in the river on the western bank by the city authorities of the city of Saint Louis or some authorities in the State of Missouri. Of course in bringing this bill down to the sum of $5,000,000 we believed that the money could be better expended upon other portions of this river than at this point. It is more I think in the nature of a private enterprise, although I must say there seems to be a necessity for this improvement.

I wish to reply now to the intimation of the Senator from Illinois, because I know what his intimation is, that this $50,000 has been inserted elsewhere in this bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I wish to say to the Senator that I intended no intimation of that kind whatever as to the next two propositions, because I know what they are.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I beg pardon of the Senator. The Mississippi River extends, as we all know, for a distance of three thousand miles, and there are appropriations in the bill for every portion of it. It is not fair, nor is it just, to say because we appropriate $200,000 for this river between the mouth of the Illinois and the mouth of the Ohio, that that is an appropriation for the State of Missouri. I heard a Senator from the State of Missouri say that there was not a dollar in the bill for his State. Two hundred thousand dollars of this appropriation is for an improvement along the State of Missouri on the Mississippi river, to say nothing of other appropriations; yet it is not fair to say that it is in the State of Missouri. Whatever appropriations are expended on the Mississippi River for the benefit of that river affect not only the commerce of all the people who live on that river, but the commerce of the State of Indiana and of the State of Massachusetts as well. We deemed it of sufficient importance at the very last session of Congress, by an almost unanimous vote of this body, to appropriate $6,000,000, in round numbers, for the purpose of opening the channel at the mouth of the Mississippi River to twenty-two feet in depth. If it is important to make these immense appropriations, as we did last year, for the improvement of the mouth of the river, will it be said that we shall not expend a reasonable sum, and less than one-third of the amount estimated for by the Engineer Bureau, to improve their river as it threads its way from the Falls of Saint Anthony to the mouth, where we appropriated $6,000,000? It happens that some of these improvements are bordering upon the State of Iowa. They are not Iowa improvements for that reason. Some of them border upon the State of Missouri, notably $200,000 appropriated by this bill. They are not Missouri improvements for that reason. Therefore I protest against statements made to the effect that there are local benefits or local considerations entering into these several appropriations for the Mississippi River. I should be glad to retain this amount for the improvement opposite the city of Saint Louis, but I do think they can stand it another year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert after line 330 the following:

For the improvement of Rush Chute and the harbor of Burlington, Iowa, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 332 the following:

For the improvement of the harbor of Fort Madison, Iowa, $10,000.

Mr. SPENCER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa who has charge of this bill if the harbor at Fort Madison is a harbor of refuge?

Mr. ALLISON. It is a harbor of refuge. There is a penitentiary located at that place, the penitentiary of our State. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is enough. It is a good appropriation. The Senator need say no more.

Mr. MORTON. I understand the Senator from Iowa to say that there is a penitentiary at this place. Therefore I suppose that it is necessary to have a harbor there! I think I understand now the principle of this new bill; I did not comprehend it before. The other bill had gotten in it about $6,800,000, and it was referred back with the understanding that we should have a bill with about $5,000,000 in it. Of course there must be some leveling down; but it seems an advantage was taken to level up certain States to over $100,000 above what the appropriations were before. A little improvement in Indiana must be cut down, other little improvements must be cut down, and then appropriations for other States are enlarged so that the whole amount is diminished $1,800,000. I did not know that that was the purpose of it when the bill was recommitted. I thought the purpose was otherwise.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question upon the amendment and declared that the ayes prevailed.

Mr. MORTON. The amendment was not agreed to by the sound.

Mr. ALLISON. If it was not agreed to I desire to say one word.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair said it was agreed to, and nobody questions the decision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa call for a division?

Mr. ALLISON. No, I do not call for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 338, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of Saint Mary's River and Saint Mary's Falls Canal, Michigan," from $200,000 to $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 343, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of Au Sable River, Michigan," from $2,500 to $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 349, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Kenosha, Wisconsin," from $9,000 to $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 354 and 355, in the following words:

For the improvement of the harbor at Monroe, Michigan, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 359, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Thunder Bay, Michigan," from $15,000 to $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 361 and 362, in the following words:

For the improvement of the harbor at McCargoe's Cove, Michigan, $15,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is cruel, Mr. President, but I suppose we must submit to it for harmony!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont object?

Mr. EDMUNDS. O, no; I bear it with the rest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 363 and 364, in the following words:

For the improvement of the harbor at Ashtabula, Ohio, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 367 and 368, in the following words:

For the improvement of Fairport Harbor, Ohio, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 368, the following:

For repair of piers at mouth of Black River, Ohio, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 372, to increase the appropriation "for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers" from $190,000 to $270,000.

Mr. MORTON. Do I understand that this is an increase of $80,000 in this appropriation?

Mr. ALLISON. It is, absolutely.

Mr. MORTON. Here we can see where our little $15,000 appropriation went, and considerably more.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 374 and 375, in the following words:

For the improvement of the harbor at Norwalk, Connecticut, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 376 and 377, in the following words:

For the improvement of Shrewsbury River New Jersey, $5,000.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I do not want to disturb the harmony that exists, and I do not believe I could if I wanted to do so. I have seen enough during the last hour or two to convince me that the harmony of this bill is not to be disturbed, and especially since the Senator from Indiana made his valorous test I have given up the hope of breaking what the Senator in charge is pleased to consider and state as the "harmony" of this bill. But I want to say a word as to the appropriations for the State that I in part represent. I have been very much perplexed to know upon what principle this bill proceeds. I find, by way of illustration, that the State of West Virginia obtains within 10 per cent. of that which was originally asked for. I find that the State of New Jersey gets 90 per cent. taken off and 10 per cent. left. I should like to have some gentleman who is upon the committee explain to me upon what principle they proceeded in forming this bill? The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] suggests to me that there is higher water up in the mountains of West Virginia than there is in the State of New Jersey. Possibly that is so.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask the Senator if appropriations are designed to be restricted to tide-water, and if so, I should like to see the authority for it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have not stated that the appropriations were to be restricted to tide-water; but I asked some member of the committee to explain to me why there should be only 10 per cent. taken off the State of West Virginia and 90 per cent. taken off the State of New Jersey.

As to this particular amendment, I have to say that it is extremely desirable that the clause should be left in the bill. I venture to say that the tonnage which comes into Shrewsbury River is more than has gone over the Great Kanawha since the day the Great Kanawha was discovered. I am limited as to time, but I will state that of the $5,000,000 appropriated in the bill the State of New Jersey, with all its commerce, with all its contributions toward the revenues of the Federal Government, gets but $5,000, one-thousandth part. This is absurd. The bill is certainly the most incomplete that it has ever been my chance to legislate upon. It is quite incomplete, as far as New Jersey is concerned. I should like to have the Senator from Iowa, or some one who has investigated this matter thoroughly, give me a little explanation of it. I have no idea, however, that I am going to have the amendment rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. There seems to be an error running through all the debate on this bill. Senators seem to think that we have appropriated money here by States. My good friend from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] fell into that error.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I beg my friend's pardon, I do not say any such thing. You have not given New Jersey a cent.

Mr. ALLISON. That is precisely why we have not adopted the rule.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I should like to interrupt the Senator in order to say that so far as I am concerned I do not charge that the bill has proceeded upon the idea of equalizing the appropriations, allotting them to the several States and disbursing them equally.

Mr. ALLISON. I misunderstood the Senator. Of course we all know that Shrewsbury River is a short river. I suppose there is a great deal of local commerce upon that river, but in carefully examining the report of the engineer we could not find any specific statement as to what the intended improvement would be. We supposed it was dredging. I presume that was the object of the appropriation perhaps.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That was the object of it.

Mr. ALLISON. We followed the suggestion of Colonel Kurtz, the engineer in charge. In making his revised estimates he omitted this river entirely, and following his suggestion we of course struck out this sum. If there is any special reason why injustice has been done to New Jersey, I do not know it. Certainly no member of the committee had any intention of that sort.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There are some appropriations in this bill for the Hudson River and for the waters between Staten Island and New Jersey which are public thoroughfares, but if you strike this out there will not be anything in the bill which is properly for New Jersey. My friend from Indiana talks about a want of harmony in the bill. We would consider this bill musical if it said $35,000 to us; but it does not say anything. After all, I should like this little appropriation left in the bill. Nobody should be left to think that the Senate was under the impression that New Jersey was in fact out of the Union. We would like just a little recognition. The object of the appropriation is this: There is a sand-bar in that river; there are a great many steamers which carry produce daily to New York, plying up and down the river. It is really more on account of New York than New Jersey that I feel an interest in the appropriation, for I do not know what the inhabitants of that city would do if deprived of the nourishment which they receive from that fertile State.

Mr. CONKLING. Oysters?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The steamers get aground and they lose their cargoes, for our people are too honest to sell stale vegetables, and the articles are perishable. The people in that neighborhod are very desirous to have this little appropriation made.

Mr. MORTON. My friend from New Jersey seems to "understand how it is himself." A little while ago he voted, I observed, in favor of cutting Indiana down; he was anxious to preserve the harmony of the bill. He is not now so desirous upon that subject.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I believe there is considerable left in the bill for Indiana.

Mr. MORTON. I simply want to remark to my friend from Iowa, who says that the bill does not go by States, that of course it does not go by States. It only happens that by the merest chance in the world some States get their appropriations largely increased, while the little appropriations other States have are cut down to help make it up. Of course it is an accident; it does not go by States. The harmony of the bill requires this thing to be done.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 379, to increase the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Erie, Pennsylvania," from $40,000 to $50,000.

Mr. MORTON. I inquire whether there is a penitentiary there or not? [Laughter.]

Mr. WALLACE. There is not.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 381, to increase the appropriation "for the improvement of the breakwater at Block Island, Rhode Island," from $20,000 to $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 384 and 385, in the following words:

For the improvement of the harbor at Plymouth, Massachusetts, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 386 and 387, in the following words:

For the improvement of Providence River, Rhode Island, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert after line 387:

For the improvement of Little Narraganset Bay, Rhode Island and Connecticut, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 390 and 391, in the following words:

For the improvement of Otter Creek, Vermont, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 394 and 395, in the following words:

For the improvement of Belfast Harbor, Maine, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 398 and 399, in the following words:

For dredging Hudson River in front of Jersey City, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 405, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Provincetown, Massachusetts," from $5,000 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 406 and 407, in the following words:

For the improvement of Ipswich River, Massachusetts, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 412, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor of refuge, Lake Huron, Michigan," from $100,000 to $75,000.

Mr. FERRY. I do not rise to ask for an increased appropriation, but I desire to offer an amendment inserting after the word "Michigan," in line 412, the words "including removal of the wreck of The City of Buffalo." I want to call the attention of the Senate to this matter, and especially the attention of the Senator from Vermont who raised the question that perhaps that wreck was of sufficient value to make it the great object of parties who owned it, and by this means they were seeking the Government money for the purpose of removing it for their own special interest. I was not informed at the time whether it was a sailing-vessel or a steamer. The Senator, if my recollection serves me, said he thought perhaps it might be a steamer. I hold in my hand a dispatch from General Weitzel, in command there, which I should like to have read, and then I think there will be no objection to the amendment which I shall propose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be reported by the Clerk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DETROIT, MICHIGAN, August 1, 1876—1.36 P. M.

Hon. T. W. FERRY,
United States Senate, Washington:

The wreck of the sailing-vessel City of Buffalo is a worthless hulk lying in the way of work and use of the harbor of refuge at Sand Beach. Everything valuable has been removed from her by her owners. I intend to blow the whole thing to atoms if authorized by Congress to do so. Not the least job of any kind in it.

G. WEITZEL, Major Engineers.

Mr. FERRY. I now move after the word "Michigan," in line 412, to insert "including removal of the wreck of The City of Buffalo."

Mr. EDMUNDS. What I wish to ask is whether the intention of General Weitzel to blow up the whole thing includes the harbor of refuge. If it does, I am for it. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRY. Perhaps if the Senator had paid special attention to the dispatch he might have construed it to cover the harbor, and if so I should be very happy to join with him in such an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Seriously, I should like to ask my friend from Michigan how it happens, if this be an obstruction to a public harbor, that the general provision for improving it does not cover the destruction of this wreck, unless it would be unlawful to destroy the wreck without an act of Congress?

Mr. FERRY. I cannot say why this dispatch was sent any further than that this matter was discussed in Congress and probably observed by General Weitzel. I did not instigate it. I know nothing about it only as it came to me. From the fact as stated in the dispatch it would seem as though the officer in charge ought not to be prevented from removing an obstruction which is a serious one to the development of the harbor. I cannot answer the question.

Mr. WRIGHT. I will state that if the wreck is outside of the harbor it would not come within the law, and therefore General Weitzel might desire this clause to be inserted.

Mr. FERRY. I should judge, in answer to the Senator from Iowa, that inasmuch as the question has been raised here and the amendment rejected, the supposition being that this wreck was of value, General Weitzel may have had a little sensibility in regard to the matter and be unwilling to act with such an expression of the Senate. I know nothing of the facts any more than they are revealed by the dispatch. The Senator has all the information I have on the matter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We all know that telegraphic dispatches are always spontaneous; everybody has discovered that. They spring up, as they say monads do in the universe, without anything to start from.

Mr. FERRY. After what I have stated, does the Senator imply that I initiated this dispatch in any way, directly or indirectly?

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from Michigan must have a very critical disposition and a strange understanding of the English language. I have said in the most explicit terms that we all know telegraphic dispatches originate spontaneously. I am sure there cannot be any misunderstanding about that. I do not see how I can possibly state it any stronger than that. We have heard all over the country all summer, if it is summer, that fact; everybody knows it; but it is not very material. Certainly if my friend supposes that in the way I have stated, or in any other way, I doubt what he says, I beg him to believe that I do not, most decidedly. Still, whether General Weitzel was moved by some original impulse that came to him from the beginning of the world to plump that dispatch at us at this moment, might be open to a little question; but I certainly accept what the Senator says. It would not do any harm if he had telegraphed to General Weitzel, as he has not, for he says he has not. It is perfectly proper for anybody to do that; but the real point after all, and that is the only one spoken of the other day, relates to the merit of this thing. We certainly do not want to get into a controversy, if we can help it, with the owners of this wreck respecting any claim for damages that may be made if General Weitzel destroys it. I supposed that the general appropriation for improving this harbor was to be expended in removing obstructions to the entrance to it and that might be in it. I suppose that must be the general object. Nothing is enumerated except the general object of improvement. If there is any special reason why it is necessary to say that this wreck shall be included more than it is to say that the sand on the bar, or trees, or bowlders, or whatever may be there, shall also be removed, then, if it be stated, I shall agree at once. The only reason I could think of, and that led me to make the inquiry, was that possibly there was a question of private ownership. If it is absolutely an abandoned thing, and as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] suggests, it may be outside of the harbor, and not descriptively within the place to be improved, then I concede it would be proper to put in the clause. I do not care, after what the Senator from Michigan has stated, whether it is put in or not. I do not care to oppose it.

Mr. FERRY. I do not wish the Government to suffer. Perhaps the Senator will suggest an amendment to protect the Government. All I want is to meet the object of protecting the harbor. I suppose there will be no objection to the amendment which I have offered, but I am not tenacious about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chair had better put it to a vote, for I do not want to vote for it.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Vermont, as I was not present during the debate on this bill before, whether he speaks from some special information with reference to this particular wreck or upon the general question whether the United States would have the right to remove a wreck in the harbor and be liable therefor, in his opinion, for damages to the owners of the wreck?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not speak from any special information. I have not had a telegraphic dispatch from anybody.

Mr. SARGENT. I am not speaking about telegraphic dispatches.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Nor have I had any other special information. My inquiry the other day on this point arose from the fact that in the course of eight or ten years here I have seen one or two instances where we have exposed ourselves to a little difficulty in respect of enumerating what originally was private property in getting obstructions removed from harbors. Therefore the inquiry naturally suggested itself to my mind, why is it necessary, if this be an obstruction which it is lawful to remove, to enumerate it by name, and so I made the inquiry I did. I know nothing whatever about this subject except the general thing. Very likely it is as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] has suggested, that the doubt is whether this abandoned and utterly derelict wreck, as is now suggested, lies within what is called the harbor or a little outside of it. If that is the explanation, of course it is all right.

Mr. ALLISON. We had a map showing that Sand Beach is a little outside of the harbor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be.

Mr. SARGENT. I was going to say that there are a number of instances within my recollection of direct appropriations for removing wrecks from harbors, and I do not remember the condition ever coupled that it should not interfere with private rights.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not propose to couple such a condition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. If the Senator from Vermont insists on his opposition to it, then I have a word to say.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not make any opposition except to say that I for one do not wish to be responsible for it. I do not make any opposition.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. The Senator from Vermont has charged my colleague with being somewhat critical. With deference to him, I think I must say that the Senator from Vermont is a little hypercritical. The Senator from Vermont has all the information that either of the Senators from Michigan has upon this subject. Any one who knows General Weitzel, who is in charge of the lake-harbor improvements, would not be very apt to impute to him a design to get up some trick here by which some man is to make money out of the improvement of this harbor for the removal of this vessel. It seems to me the explanation suggested by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] and the map referred to by the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. ALLISON] show clearly enough that this is a very proper amendment, and that there is no cause for any suspicion whatever. I hope therefore that the amendment to the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from Michigan says that they have no more information than I have about this thing, and that I am hypercritical about it. What, then, is the attitude of the Senators who do not know any more than I do? What sort of "critical" is to be applied to them? Some other "critical" beginning with "h," or what sort?

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Supercritical.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, we will call it "supercritical." I wish to say that whether I am hypercritical or not, I shall do just what I think is fit, within the rules of the Senate, and will take all the responsibilities. The Senator has intimated that I had some suspicion of the honor and good faith of General Weitzel. He had no right to say that from anything I have said. All I have said is quite the reverse, and I will repeat it so that General Weitzel and everybody else whoever reads what I have said may know that I believe General Weitzel to be an absolutely upright, skillful, and brave public officer, and that neither the Senators from Michigan nor from Vermont nor anybody else would influence his action in the slightest degree when he has charge of public interests. While I say that, I do not think that anybody, if we are all equal here, and I believe we are since we have ceased to be a mob, has any more right than any one Senator has to speak upon this bill or any other. If any doubt or difficulty arises or may be suggested, I think it is my duty as well as my privilege to bring it to the attention of the Senate. If there is nothing in it, the Senate of course will not agree to it. If the point is good, I suppose they will, whether it is in one State or another. I stated that I intended to make no opposition after this last explanation to this amendment, and only asked the Chair to submit it to a vote of the Senate so that it would not be said to be by unanimous consent; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 414, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the Chippewa River, Wisconsin," from $15,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 415 and 416, in the foling words:

For the improvement of the Osage River, Missouri, $25,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if the restoration of this very small amount for this very large river would interfere with the harmony of the bill? I think we ought to have this amount, and in my opinion it would make the bill more symmetrical, and, if possible, more harmonious than it is now. I do hope that the Senator from Iowa will withdraw the amendment of the committee and let the appropriation remain.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We cannot do that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 418, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the Wabash River, Indiana," from $75,000 to $70,000.

Mr. MORTON. This takes another $5,000 off and puts it "where it will do the most good," I take it, either the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, or Hawkeye Chute, or some of the harbors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 420, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Calumet, Illinois," from $25,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 426, to increase the appropriation "for the improvement of the Upper Mississippi River" from $20,000 to $30,000, and to add after the word "dollars," in line 426, the words:

And $7,000 thereof may be applied in constructing the necessary machinery used in Captain Edward Bell's process for building wing-dams and applying said process in the improvement of said river—

So as to make the clause read:

For the improvement of the Upper Mississippi River, $30,000; and $7,000 thereof may be applied in constructing the necessary machinery used in Captain Edward Bell's process for building wing-dams and applying said process in the improvement of said river.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask to have the amendment divided so as to take the question on appropriating $30,000 first, because I do not think from the experience we have had that we ought to make special provision for any particular man's process under any circumstances. Nine times in ten that we have done it we have done a wrong to the Treasury and no good to the public service. Therefore I ask that the amendment may be divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division of the amendment being called for, the question is on the first branch of the amendment proposed by the committee in line 426, which is to strike out "$20,000" and substitute "$30,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs upon the second branch of the amendment of the committee, adding lines 426, 427, 428, 429, and 430.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Everybody I suppose understands, I submit to my friend from Iowa, that the Engineer Department may take up this process or any other for these wing-dams, if they choose, so that it is not necessary to give them that authority.

Mr. ALLISON. They are not required to do so by this provision.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know it, but in most of cases if they are not required to do it, if you name the particular thing, it is pressed upon them that Congress meant that they should do it, and they do it, and then we get into trouble.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I hope this amendment will be concurred in. The improvement referred to in this amendment is one that has been called to the attention of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Saint Paul and of the steamboat-men of the Mississippi River. The La Crosse Railroad Company, terminating at La Crosse, used this improvement, partially at least, in their work at the mouth of the river at La Crosse, and it has proved very beneficial. The Chamber of Commerce of Saint Paul sent to us a memorial requesting an appropriation for it, and I think the Legislature of Minnesota also did the same. I am very certain that the owners of the steamboats on the Upper Mississippi are very desirous that this process should be used. The clause is not imperative, as has been stated by the Senator in charge of the bill, but is left in the discretion of the engineers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But would they not have that discretion without such a provision in the bill?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am sure if they can overcome the objection of the corps to use an improvement by a person outside of that corps, it will be one of merit; but by the mere permission to introduce this improvement, I am informed and have reason to believe, a great saving will result to the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the object, may I ask my friend? If the Secretary of War has this authority now, as nobody disputes, what is the object of inserting these words?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Merely to give this permission in the body of the bill, that perhaps the prejudices of the Engineer Corps may be put at rest and overcome to some extent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question on the second branch of the amendment and declared that the ayes appeared to prevail.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for a division, and on that I wish to say a word. I merely ask it in order that I may move to amend the amendment, if it is to be adopted, as I see it is, and I presume the Senator will not object to the amendment I propose. After the word "applied," in line 427, I move to amend the amendment by inserting the words:

If the Secretary of War shall deem it for the public interest.

So as to read:

And $7,000 thereof may be applied, if the Secretary of War shall deem it for the public interest, in constructing the necessary machinery," &c.

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. MCMILLAN. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The second branch of the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 432, to increase the appropriation "for the improvement of Rock Island Rapids, Mississippi," from $20,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 434, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the Mississippi, Missouri, and Arkansas Rivers" from $125,000 to $100,000, and to add after the word "dollars," in line 435, the following proviso:

Provided, That $40,000 of the above sum shall be expended on the Missouri River; and $10,000 thereof shall be expended for removing the bar at Fort Smith, Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 443, after the word "expended," to strike out the words "to prevent erosion and destruction of its banks," and after "Ohio River," in line 445, to insert:

And $5,000 of which are to be expended between islands No. 14 and No. 15, near the town of Kaskaskia, Illinois—

So as to make the clause read:

For the improvement of the Mississippi River between the mouths of the Illinois and Ohio Rivers, ($15,000 of which are to be expended between the mouths of the Illinois and Missouri Rivers and $20,000 of which are to be expended between the foot of Dickey Island and the mouth of the Ohio River, and $5,000 of which are to be expended between islands No. 14 and No. 15, near the town of Kaskaskia, Illinois,) $200,000.

Mr. OGLESBY. Without desiring to interrupt the progress of the bill, for I have agreed with the committee in all that has been proposed by it and am indisposed to do anything that shall fail to support them by the action of the Senate, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill if there is any objection to putting a clause in the amendment so as to restore it as it was when it passed the Senate before? I ask if there is any objection to striking out the word "twenty" in the four hundred and forty-second line and inserting "thirty," so as to increase the amount to be expended between the foot of Dickey Island and the mouth of the Ohio River from $20,000 to $30,000. It would not increase the total amount appropriated by the clause. The city of Cairo at the southern extremity of the great and flourishing State of Illinois has been seriously threatened for two or three years by an inroad from the Mississippi River. The city has gone on and put up an extensive levee along the bank of the Mississippi River above the town and as far as it is concerned it is now sufficiently fenced in; but if the river should continue its erosions it will rush in and cut in behind the city of Cairo and go in by the Ohio River above where it does now. I read the other day the recommendation of the engineer who has this matter in charge. He thinks that seventy-five or one hundred thousand dollars will sufficiently protect the city and country there. As it will hurt nobody and be a source of incalculable consolation to the citizens of Cairo and make that certain which is now uncertain "to a certain intent in general," I hope the Senator from Iowa will not object to letting it be put at $30,000 instead of $20,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where does the amendment come in? Let it be reported.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 442.

Mr. OGLESBY. I move that "twenty" be stricken out and "thirty" inserted, so as to make it $30,000 instead of $20,000, without increasing or diminishing the total sum voted for the Mississippi River in the clause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 442 it is proposed to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$30,000;" so as to read:

For the improvement of the Mississippi River between the mouths of the Illinois and Ohio Rivers, $15,000 of which are to be expended between the mouths of the Illinois and Missouri Rivers, and $30,000 of which are to be expended between the foot of Dickey Island and the mouth of the Ohio River, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment reported by the committee, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to insert as lines 449 and 450 the following:

For removal of a bar in the Mississippi River opposite Dubuque, Iowa, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 452, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the Ohio River" from $270,000 to $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 453, 454, and 455, in the following words:

For examinations and surveys of rivers and harbors, and for incidental repairs of harbors, for which there is no special appropriation, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 461, after the words "Tennessee River," to strike out "$300,000" and insert "$270,000;" and in line 464, after the word "remaining," to strike out "$285,000" and insert "$255,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For the improvement of the Tennessee River, $270,000, $15,000 of which are to be expended above Chattanooga, and the remaining $255,000 are to be expended upon Muscle Shoals.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope this amendment will not be agreed to. This is a work of great national importance. I do not want to be uncharitable to the Senator from Iowa who has charge of this bill, but I cannot help noticing that I have failed to find any appropriation for the State of Iowa that has been cut down, while several have been increased and several new appropriations made. I think it very unfair that works of national importance like this should be decreased and new appropriations made for the State of Iowa for objects never heard of before. There is a harmony about that that does not suit me.

Mr. SARGENT. It seems to me it is only just to the Senator from Iowa to say that so far as the Committee on Appropriations are concerned he was but one of three of a subcommittee, and the whole matter was referred to the regular committee and carefully canvassed and each item agreed on there as the most judicious thing that could be done. There are several items struck from the State of Iowa, and it will be found that members of the Committee on Appropriations have suffered in this respect more than other Senators generally. I know in my own State two-fifths of all the appropriations were taken out of the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator point to any appropriations in the State of Iowa that have been cut down?

Mr. SARGENT. The Des Moines Rapids appropriation was cut down.

Mr. SPENCER. That is on the Mississippi River.

Mr. SARGENT. It is charged to Iowa, for Iowa is on the Mississippi River. In other words, I object to what I might say are captious objections to a single member of the Committee on Appropriations. Of course it was the duty allotted to the Senator from Iowa to report this bill. It might have been, however, any other member of the committee who, if assigned to the duty, would have done the same thing, and I presume then these remarks would have been applied to him. As far as the committee generally are concerned, they consented most willingly and cheerfully to reduce the bill; in my own case I know it was so, and I know it was so with reference to other members of the committee. We had iron-bound instructions; we were told to reduce the bill to $5,000,000; almost an impossible task, if you expected parties to be satisfied; but I think the committee might at least have the credit of having done the best they could conscientiously to carry out the instructions of the Senate. As far as the Senator from Iowa is concerned, I know he endeavored to exhibit that spirit in the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word in reference to the implications of the Senator from Alabama. As long as the Senator uses a jocular method I do not particularly object to his allusions to me; but the matter is becoming rather serious, and I wish to say now to the Senator from Alabama, without stating what occurred in the committee or elsewhere, that I followed his appropriation at $300,000 to the very last moment of time before it appeared in the Senate Chamber against what a good many other people thought was good judgment about this matter. That is all I will say in regard to this appropriation of his in which he claims that I have done him injustice.

Now let me turn to the State of Iowa. There is in this bill an appropriation coming from the House of $275,000 for an important national work in the State of Iowa. I consented, as every member of the committee knows, to the reduction of that work from time to time. When they wanted $45,000 off to bring the total within $5,000,000 I consented to take it off that appropriation rather than disturb members who seemed to have appropriations here that were necessary.

So far as the improvement at the Rock Island Rapids is concerned I am reminded by the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Alabama that there is an increase of $5,000. The engineer in charge, Colonel Macomb, wrote to the Bureau of Engineers, and I have his letter here, that $50,000 was the least sum that ought to be appropriated for this great national highway, and I consented for the cutting of that down time and time again until it came down to $25,000, although the House appropriated only $20,000 in the beginning.

Senators seem to take the position here that the House of Representatives is immaculate on this appropriation bill, and that whatever comes here from the House comes here as the laws of the Medes and the Persians, not to be changed by jot or tittle. I take it that this appropriation bill is still within the discretion of the committees of this Senate and within the discretion of Senators; and because it comes here with a particular amount from the House of Representatives, that is no reason why we should not exercise our own judgment and say that it should be increased or diminished; yet Senators claim that we have done them injustice because we have felt compelled to reduce appropriations in certain respects and also compelled to increase other appropriations. When Senators charge this committee seriously with having done injustice to them, I respectfully submit that they are doing injustice to the committee.

I desire to say one word now about the Fort Madison improvement. It is an improvement in reality, not affecting the city of Fort Madison. It is an improvement made necessary from the fact that we have expended large sums of money in making a canal around the Des Moines Rapids, which has changed the current of the Mississippi River, as I explained the other day, by which two-fifths of it ran through what is called Nicota Chute, and the Engineer Bureau recommends that this chute shall be closed in order that the great current of the Mississippi River may be again turned into this canal built by the Government of the United States at an expense of more than a million dollars. I have endeavored to keep from this appropriation bill everything personal, so far as I could, and therefore I reply once for all to these several statements with reference to local affairs.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to say this in justice to the Senator who has charge of this bill. Up to the last moment he and other Senators, he especially, tried to save the $300,000 as it came from the House for the Tennessee River, and it was with the greatest reluctance that any change was made in that item; but it had to be done to come within the $5,000,000 within which the Senate had instructed the committee to limit the bill. I presume hardly any Senator is suited with the bill. Certainly, with regard to the interests I have partly in charge, I labored as hard as any one to try and protect them. There are a number of improvements stricken out that I objected to striking out and voted against striking out in committee; but that could not be helped. The committee did their very best after many hours' labor to get a bill that would cover the whole ground as best they could. It is true many of us are disappointed, but I think as a whole we had better accept it. I hope the Senator from Alabama will not personally allude to the gentleman in charge of the bill, for I assure him that that Senator did his best to save his $300,000.

Mr. WITHERS. I desire also to enter my statement here of responsibility for my proper proportion of this bill. I am as responsible for it probably as the Senator from Iowa or any other Senator. The committee to which this bill was intrusted with instructions felt themselves compelled to obey those instructions. In considering the bill and adjusting the appropriations under it, they did not conceive that they were required to conform to the House bill; for they, not very unnaturally, concluded that if it had been the desire of the Senate to have the House bill reported back they would have so instructed them, instead of instructing them to report a bill limiting the appropriation to $5,000,000. The committee, therefore, felt themselves fully authorized to reduce the whole of this bill and to adjust it according to their conceptions of right and justice. That they may have erred in thus adjusting it I certainly am free to admit; but it has one element or indication of fairness to which I would ask the attention of the Senate, and that is that there is not a single Senator on this floor, so far as I know, who is not dissatisfied with the bill. If there be a man on this floor who is satisfied with the bill as it is reported, I will pay a premium if he will stand up in his place and so announce. I have always heard that when an adjustment was made by referees or by arbitration or otherwise, which offended all the parties, it was a fair adjustment. And, judged by that standard, I think this bill must be a pretty fair one.

Now, sir, it is evident that we had to cut down the appropriations in many instances. If, however, subject-matters were presented which may have been new, which carried with them such evidences of merit as in the opinion of the committee justified an appropriation to them, the committee did not hesitate to make such appropriation; and, with regard to the particular item now under consideration, I can fully corroborate the statement made by the other members of the committee, and especially as to the fact that the Senator from Iowa who reports the bill hung on to the very last before he would consent to the reduction of the appropriation for the Tennessee River. It was only after the Senate was in session that the committee were withdrawn, and it was demonstrated that it was necessary that a considerable reduction should be made in order to bring the bill within the procrustean limits to which we were restricted by the vote of the Senate, that that appropriation was stricken down in order to make it conform in amount to the other appropriations of similar character, to wit, the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers and the Kanawha River, all three standing on precisely the same ground so far as the general merits and purposes of the appropriation were concerned.

Mr. SPENCER. I am very glad that the Senator from Iowa stood by the appropriation for the Tennessee River. If he had followed the suggestion I made to him I would have been better satisfied, however; but I am very glad to know it, and am very much obliged to him. It is very singular that some Senators on this floor are not satisfied with this bill. Some Senators from some States have come off very well. I suggest that the two Senators from Oregon ought to be abundantly satisfied. Their appropriations are $100,000 more in this bill than as it went to the committee. I cannot see why they should not be satisfied. I could mention some other States whose Senators I think ought to be satisfied. I should be satisfied if my State had fared as well.

Mr. MITCHELL. While it is true, as stated by the Senator from West Virginia, that there is probably not a Senator on the floor who is satisfied with the bill, and certainly the Senators from Oregon, notwithstanding the remark of my friend from Alabama, have more right to complain of the bill as reported than any other Senators here, still inasmuch as the Senate all this afternoon has agreed with the committee, has not overruled the committee in one respect, I hope that not much more of the time will be taken up by members of the committee in explanation, and that we shall be permitted to go on and come to a vote.

Mr. ALLISON. Not a word more.

Mr. MITCHELL. Oregon does complain, I will say to my friend from Alabama; Oregon has a right to complain of this bill; and it is only because I believe that if we do not vote for the bill as reported by the Senator from Iowa we shall get no river and harbor bill at all that I am constrained to go for it. Speaking about Oregon, there is a report on file here now, a unanimous report from the Committee on Transportation, recommending an appropriation at the present session of Congress of $250,000 to commence the work at the Cascades, and what does the Committee on Appropriations give us? The insignificant sum of $90,000. But at the same time I am willing to forego any disposition that I have to secure what is due to Oregon in order to get the work started, and get some kind of a river and harbor bill through.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 479, to increase the appropriation "for the construction of a canal around the Cascades of the Columbia River, in the State of Oregon," from $50,000 to $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after the word "dollars," in line 480, to insert:

Of which amount the Secretary of War is authorized to expend so much as, in his judgment, may be necessary and proper to secure title and right of way for canal and locks, not exceeding the sum of $10,000; and whenever, in the prosecution of the said work, it shall have become necessary to obtain the right of way over any lands for the said canal and locks, the Secretary of War shall take possession of and use the said lands, after having purchased the same, or, in case the said lands cannot be purchased for a reasonable price, then after having paid for the same, or secured the value thereof, which value may be ascertained in the mode provided by the laws of Oregon for the condemnation of lands for public uses in that State. The Department of Justice shall represent the interests of the United States in any legal proceedings under this act to obtain the right of way for said canal.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend the amendment reported by the committee by inserting after the word "State," in line 493:

And jurisdiction to hear and determine such proceedings is hereby conferred on the circuit court of the United States for the district of Oregon, and no appeal shall operate to stay proceedings.

Mr. CONKLING. I understand this proposition to be, not to authorize proceedings known in all the States to condemn private property for public use, but to confer on the circuit court of the United States authority to do something. It occurs to me that there is no act of Congress under which the United States courts condemn private property for public use. We have talked about that sometimes, but

I believe there is no such thing. There is a proceeding known in every State by which for public buildings and for other purposes the United States proceeds to condemn and have assessed private property for public use.

Mr. SARGENT. Through the State courts.

Mr. CONKLING. And do it through the State courts, the Senator from California suggests. Now I want to know if merely by an amendment conferring on the circuit court power to do this thing, there being no such act of Congress——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Had the Senator from New York observed what precedes the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon—

Which value may be ascertained in the mode provided by the laws of Oregon for the condemnation of lands for public uses in that State—

I suppose the object of that was to give the power to condemn lands as to this particular improvement.

Mr. CONKLING. That sharpens my objection. I heard that read, and the fact that I seem to make myself so little understood is the only thing that leads me to doubt that I am right. Let me see if I can restate my position.

In the legislation of Congress there is no act that I know of conferring jurisdiction upon the national courts to proceed to condemn private property for public use in the States. Therefore there is no practice, there is no form of proceeding, there is no prescription of the mode in which such proceedings are to occur. On the other hand, until now since there were States and since there was a Government, private property has been taken, assessed, condemned, the title made over to the United States, under proceedings taken in the courts of the States and perfectly well known to the courts and to the jurisdiction. Now I inquire first, why it is proposed in this exceptional case to attempt to clothe the national jurisdiction with the right to do this thing; and second, if that is deemed necessary, why it is proposed in an amendment on the river and harbor bill by a mere suggestion prescribing nothing as to the number of jurors, or whether to be done by a jury or done by commissioners. It has been held, I believe, in the States that an act requiring commissioners to condemn property is constitutional, so that an appeal from the commissioners be given on which appeal a trial by jury may be had, because that preserves the theory of trial by jury. Here a court in which such proceedings are unknown, which has no practices, rules, forms, or statutes to govern it is in this case to entertain jurisdiction of this thing, after you say in this amendment that it is to be "ascertained in the mode prescribed by the laws of Oregon for the condemnation of lands for public uses in that State." That implies, and I suppose I may assume, that there are in Oregon statutes, and that there is there a court under which this may be done. If so, I inquire why it is that it is to be transferred to the Federal courts, and if transferred why by an amendment so naked as this the attempt is to be made?

Mr. MITCHELL. I must confess that I am very much surprised at the remarks of the honorable Senator from New York with reference to this amendment; but before I answer anything that is said I should like to inquire of him whether, in his judgment, the amendment as it stands as reported by the committee is ample in all respects to enable the Government of the United States to obtain control of this land and construct these locks?

Mr. CONKLING. I cannot answer yes or no to that question, but, to be brief, I will refer the Senator to a discussion held in this Chamber some time within two or three years in which I happen to remember as prominent the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] in which the Senate considered the propriety of framing a statute to enable private property to be condemned by a proceeding in the Federal courts, in the course of which discussion various queries, objections, and difficulties appeared. If the Senator from Oregon asks me whether we have power to confer on the national courts authority to condemn property, that is one thing. If he asks me whether this amendment on the river and harbor bill merely suggesting that they shall do it without any thing more, is a good or sufficient way of doing it, I answer him upon my impression no.

Mr. KERNAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon does he think that the Federal Government can by act of Congress take property in a State without the consent of the State?

Mr. CONKLING. That is one question for us.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is one question that arises, of course. So far as this amendment is concerned, I asked the Senator from New York whether, in his judgment, the amendment reported by the committee was sufficient to enable the United States to get control of this property so as to construct these canal locks?

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator mean the printed amendment?

Mr. MITCHELL. I mean the amendment printed, the one reported by the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. To be frank about it, I had not looked at that. I answered from what I heard read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thought from the remarks the Senator made he had not looked at this bill and did not know its precise phraseology.

Mr. CONKLING. I heard the Senator's amendment read and spoke to that.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish to ask the Senator from Oregon whether, by the laws of the State of Oregon, there is provision made for condemnation of land in that State by the United States for this purpose?

Mr. MITCHELL. Not by the United States, but there is a provision made in the general incorporation law of the State of Oregon for the condemnation of private property for public use where that property is claimed by a private corporation. That is the law of Oregon, and the reason I offered this amendment at this time was because I had some doubt myself, and some other Senators had suggested the same doubts——

Mr. BAYARD. The public use is for the public use of the State?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly. As I was about to say in order to finish my sentence, I had some doubt whether under that law property could be condemned in that State for the use of the United States.

Mr. BAYARD. I trust the Senate will pause long before they give their consent to the doctrine of this amendment. We have had the question raised in this body several times, and I am not aware that any decision can be found for it. I am not aware of any judicial decision of the courts of the United States, and certainly there has been no legislative precedent for any such claim of power on the part of the Government of the United States. If you can assume such a right to condemn lands in invitum, what becomes of the right of eminent domain which in all periods of the history of this Government has been supposed to be vested in the States themselves? This question, grave as it is, and none can be much graver, ought not to be disposed of in this way by a chance amendment in an appropriation bill. If the Senator will get from his State a condemnation of land under the State power and State laws for the purposes of the United States Government, the cession may be made, and if it is then right and proper for the interests of the Government to take the property so condemned at the price awarded, it will be proper to do it; and then the Senator will have proceeded in the usual and ordinary way for the purpose of acquiring title in the Government of the United States to land within State jurisdiction.

The proceeding is very familiar. We have constantly obtained sites for custom-houses, for post-offices, for forts, in which either the cession is made by the private owner as a matter of voluntary contract between the owner and the United States, which has quite as much right to buy as any other party, and after that is done there is usually a cession of jurisdiction to the United States over the land so purchased. But there are other cases. I remember very well a case in my own State where there was a necessity for light-house sites. An act of assembly was passed upon the suggestion of the Government officials by which the Government could come in there and by regular notice cause lands to be condemned for its use; but that was a statute limited, expressive of the subjects over which the jurisdiction was to extend, and providing for the proper cession of the land to the Government after the condemnation should have been fairly made and the compensation awarded. That has been the regular course heretofore.

I submit to the honorable Senator from Oregon that this is a new case without precedent. I think no act of Congress can be pointed to in which such a proceeding as this has been warranted. I feel friendly to the improvement, but I submit to him that a proper condemnation of this property under the laws of Oregon should precede the application to the United States to take jurisdiction or pay for the land.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I had some conversation with my learned friend from Oregon on this subject, and I understand from him, and of course he knows, that by the laws of Oregon private property can only be taken for public use designated under the authority of the State, such public use as the State has authorized to be made. Therefore, inasmuch as this public use has not been authorized by the State, this taking of private property, this provision to ascertain the value in the mode provided by the laws of Oregon, standing alone without any tribunal to carry it out, would have to be left to the State tribunals.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not understand that the State of Oregon has authorized the taking of land for public purposes of the United States but simply for the State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly what I am saying; and therefore under the laws of Oregon an application to the State court must necessarily be rejected because the State court, even if we undertook to confer jurisdiction of that kind, could not get jurisdiction against private rights in my opinion under the laws of the United States and without the authority of their own laws. It would be just like a court of the State of New York or the State of Vermont undertaking to execute the law of a foreign country.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish the Senator would let me understand the Senator from Oregon. Does he say that there is no statute of Oregon under which the United States may take property for a public building or anything else?

Mr. MITCHELL. I know of no such statute in Oregon. There is a general incorporation law providing for the condemnation of private property for public use.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest that Oregon had better prepare herself to receive appropriations for improvements.

Mr. MITCHELL. When I say public use, I mean that use to which a private corporation may desire to put property authorized by the law of the State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That being the state of the law in Oregon, I think it must be perfectly manifest to everybody that under this amendment as it stands no land could be got against the consent of the owner, if he did not choose to sell it at his own price. He could stop this improvement, if it be one, and I assume that is. Therefore it seems to be necessary, if we are going to legislate with any effect, to take some additional step. Now what is the additional step?

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon confers by statute on the circuit court of the United States for that district jurisdiction to proceed for this condemnation. Then, as the Senator from New York very well inquired, how? We do not point out a code; but by reference to the existing code of Oregon applied to its own condemnation we authorize the circuit court of the United States, in conformity with that mode, and by just such methods as the State does it, to appropriate the land. Then the question is whether that is right. I do not see any ground to object to it, because it would not be fair or just, for it is exactly the way that other people do in the State. Then is it constitutional? It has been discussed so much that I will not discuss it any more. I believe it is myself; and I am informed, although I have not seen the decision, that the Supreme Court at its last session here has decided that the authority does exist. Assuming that to be so, as I believed it to be before, it appears to me that the amendment of the Senator from Oregon is essential to take any step under this provision in the bill.

Mr. MORTON. The Constitution provides:

Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

That certainly carries with it the implication that it may be taken for public use with just compensation. But in the absence of that provision, is there or can there be any doubt about it? Is not this taking of private property for public use the necessary adjunct of sovereignty? How can you carry on government without it? If we have a right to have a post-office and we cannot rent one, we have a right to build one, and we cannot build one without buying the land, and if we cannot buy the land voluntarily, we have the right to take it. So with regard to a custom-house; so with regard to a fort; so with regard to any public building or public work whatever. If the Government has the right to make this improvement and the State of Oregon does not furnish the land and the people will not voluntarily sell it, the Government has a right to condemn it for that purpose. That right follows upon the first right, that is, the right and power to make the improvement.

One word further. Suppose the State of Oregon has no law by which private property can be condemned for public use; suppose it will make no law; suppose the people will not give up the land voluntarily; then the Government is powerless and can make no improvement, because the Government cannot of its own right condemn this property. Can that be so? What right has the State of Oregon to condemn the private property of the people of Oregon for the use of the United States or for the use of the State of California, or any other power, or government, or corporation? Oregon may provide for the seizure of private property for State uses, authorized by a State law, but not for the use of the United States or for the use of some other State. It comes right back to the point that if the Government has the right to make this improvement and cannot get this property voluntarily, it has a right to condemn it, and we have the power to confer on the courts of the United States the jurisdiction necessary for the condemnation of this property.

Mr. ANTHONY. We have got upon a question now that may be called the lawyer's delight. I can see the Revised Statutes going all over the Chamber, and there are over thirty lawyers here, and each will take his five minutes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to say to the Senator from Rhode Island, as the discussion may come up again, that I wish to call attention to a decision of the Supreme Court at the October term, 1875, that settles this whole question in favor of the right of the Government to condemn.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the Senator from Iowa will assent I will move to adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I think we can finish the bill in fifteen minutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot finish it in fifteen minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. We cannot to-night pass this bill, evidently, with this question. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 26, noes 20; and (at four o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 2, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. On yesterday at the time my colleague [Mr. BEEBE] submitted a report from the majority of the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, I submitted a report on behalf of that committee. The Journal as read makes no mention of the minority report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Journal will be corrected in that regard.

The Journal, as corrected, was then approved.

SAILORS' HOME, SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. PIPER. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2692) to relinquish the title of the United States to certain property in the city and county of San Francisco, California, and that the bill be now brought before the House for consideration.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to state that when this bill was reached in Committee of the Whole I objected to its consideration. Since that time I have looked into it and have become satisfied that the bill is a proper one and should pass.

Mr. BLAND. I do not wish to crowd out any bills for which there is unanimous consent. But if this bill should give rise to debate I shall have to object to it.

Mr. BANKS. I reserve my right to object to the bill until it is read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair always reserves that right for every member, deeming it but fair that the House should have an opportunity to know what a bill is before the right to object is waived.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all the right and title of the United States to the following-described property is hereby relinquished to the city and county of San Francisco, the same being the two fifty vara lots on which the old marine-hospital building now stands, fronting two hundred and seventy-five feet on the north side of Harrison street, between Spear and Main streets, with a uniform depth of one hundred and thirty-seven feet and six inches, as laid down on the official map of said city, to be used by the city and county of San Francisco solely for the purposes of a sailors' home: Provided, That if the same shall at any time be used for any other than the purpose aforesaid, or if said home shall not be opened within one year from the passage of this act, in each such case all right and title hereby relinquished shall revert back to, and again vest in, the United States.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Is this bill recommended by any committee?

Mr. DUNNELL. It is reported from the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to discharging the Committee of the Whole, and considering this bill in the House at this time?

There was no objection.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from California to one fact. This bill proposes to convey the title of this property to the city and county of San Francisco, which are two different corporations, I suppose. I think this mode of conveying the title is altogether imperfect.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me it would be better to strike out the words "and county," so as to leave it "city of San Francisco."

Mr. PAGE. They are all one.

Mr. LUTTRELL. It is a consolidated government.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it one corporation?

Mr. PAGE. It is one corporation, known as "the city and county of San Francisco."

Mr. RANDALL. This is really giving to the city of San Francisco public property, so far as I can understand.

Mr. FORT. No, it is not.

Mr. RANDALL. Is not this bill subject to the point of order that requires it to receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill has been taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. It is still subject to the point of order.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I hope the gentleman will make no objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. This bill was sent to the Committee of the Whole and there considered; and it is now taken out of the Committee of the Whole by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Upon examination of the Journal the Chair finds that this bill has already been considered in Committee of the Whole. Having been taken from the Committee of the Whole by unanimous consent of the House, without objection at the time, the Chair holds that it is not again subject to that point of order.

Mr. CONGER. This marine hospital was built with money derived from sailors.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Yes; from sailors.

Mr. CONGER. On account of its peculiarity of construction it is unfit for a hospital in that sense, and now it is asked that it be turned over to the Sailors' Friends' Society and others interested in sailors, it being no longer useful as a hospital.

Mr. RANDALL. If erected for a hospital, then the greater wrong to devote it to any other purpose.

Mr. CONGER. It is asked that it may be used as a sailors' home, equally beneficial and desirable to the sailor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask a single question so that the real point may be understood. Do I understand from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that this hospital building was erected by the Government out of funds given by the sailors?

Mr. CONGER. I do not mean that it was erected out of that fund. I mean to say that the sailors being taxed, formerly twenty cents a month, and now for the last few years forty cents a month upon all their wages, there has been accumulated in the Treasury a large fund not used directly for the erection of these buildings; but there is a surplus in the Treasury above what is required for the expenses of these seamen's hospitals. Therefore the money from the sailors goes into the Treasury as a revenue, and as an offset for money appropriated by the Government to erect these hospitals.

Mr. FORT. The ladies of San Francisco propose to erect a building on these grounds as a home for the sailors.

Mr. CONGER. There is a building there now.

Mr. FORT. It is an old building, and not exactly fitted for this purpose.

Mr. PIPER. I now call the previous question.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I desire to say one word. Unless this bill is passed now this property will be a loss to the Government and to the seamen also.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; there being, ayes 82, noes not counted.

The bill was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PIPER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GOLD AND SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being called for, the morning hour begins at half past twelve o'clock. The pending business in the morning hour is the consideration of a bill reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining, being the bill (H. R. No. 3635) to utilize the product of gold and silver mines, and for other purposes, on which the previous question has been demanded by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND.]

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow me to make a proposition, accompanied with a statement of the reasons for it, not exceeding five minutes. I will make it as brief as I can?

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman wants to make a proposition I will hear it; but I object to debate.

Mr. KASSON. I desire simply to state my reasons for making the proposition; if I cannot do that I must decline to submit the proposition.

Mr. BANKS. I hope the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] will let us know what the proposition is; then we can tell whether we will hear his reasons or not.

Mr. KASSON. I desire at least three minutes to state my reasons.

Mr. BLAND. Very well; and I yield to the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, the practical difficulty with those members of this House who oppose this bill is the want of sufficient information to enable them to vote upon the numerous propositions embodied in the bill. They have desired such opportunity for examination as has been given by other parliamentary bodies of other countries that have examined such questions, namely, inquiries by a commission, with careful examination and a written report.

The present proposition is not merely to signify the right of payment of the public debt in silver nor for the reminting of the silver dollar. These are at this time comparatively minor questions in view of the number of silver dollars to be coined, but the propositions of this bill affect the wages of labor throughout the country; they affect the payment of all debts made since 1873; they affect——

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman is making an argument against the bill.

Mr. KASSON. This will, of course, not come out of my three minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa is entitled to the floor for three minutes, and will proceed.

Mr. KASSON. These propositions affect the payment of over $1,000,000,000 of the savings of labor deposited in savings and other banks, for the measure apparently authorizes banks and bankers to pay such indebtedness in money depreciated by 10 per cent. below the paper deposited and 20 per cent. below gold. They affect all contracts touching the commerce of this country; they affect the payment of the farmers of the West for their surplus products sent to Europe; they reach every interest, every liability, every enterprise in the United States, and may precipitate a crisis in the money market by its effects upon the public credit.

Now, under these circumstances, those who are opposed to acting on this bill now, reserving their opinions as to the coinage and remonetization of the silver dollar, demand a commission of inquiry upon this subject; and the Committee on Banking and Currency has under consideration such a measure, which I suppose they will report to-morrow morning. For this reason we desire delay. Now my proposition is that in view of this one of two courses should be taken by the gentleman having charge of the bill: either to allow debate to run on to-day, no vote to be taken, and the bill resuming its place in the morning hour to-morrow; or to allow debate to go on, no vote to be taken, and the bill to stand over till the next session, in order to afford opportunity for the making of these very important inquiries, a day certain being fixed for the consideration of the subject next session.

The adoption of one of these two propositions the gentlemen opposed to this bill deem of vast importance to enable us to act properly and safely upon a question of this magnitude, affecting all the business interests of the country. I hope I have made these objections understood, though I should have been glad to give more specifically and at large the reasons arising upon the bill itself.

Mr. CASWELL. I ask that the amendments proposed to the bill yesterday be read.

Mr. BLAND. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman certainly has the right to ask for the reading of the bill or amendments.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to reply to the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KASSON.]

The amendments offered yesterday were read.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I think this House will bear me out in the statement that I have not interposed any objection to debate on this bill; that I have not sought to clog legislation on this bill or any other. Only yesterday I offered that the bill should be debated till four o'clock; but that was objected to by the opponents of the bill.

The bill that demonetized silver in this country and perpetrated an injustice and fraud upon the people was passed through this House without even being read, in spite of the call of the honorable gentleman at present serving as Speaker of the House [Mr. KERR] for the reading of that bill. It was passed surreptitiously and without discussion, and was one of the grossest measures of injustice ever inflicted upon any people. Now, this bill simply aims to restore the currency of this country which existed at that time; yet we hear objections on this floor, sometimes in the form of demands for debate, sometimes in the form of opposition to debate.

Now, sir, I am willing to accept the proposition of the gentlemen from Iowa, that this bill shall be debated all day and that it shall take its place in the morning hour to-morrow, provided gentlemen opposing the bill will not filibuster away that morning hour to prevent the ordering of the previous question. If the gentleman will assure the House that in the morning hour to-morrow he and those who are acting with him will allow a vote upon the previous question and let the House determine without filibustering motions whether it is in favor of this bill or not, I agree to the proposition. All that I desire is an honest discussion and honest action; not obstruction to legislation on the one hand nor on the other forcing it through the House without proper consideration.

Mr. KASSON and Mr. GARFIELD rose.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to know whether they intend to filibuster.

Mr. KASSON. My proposition was——

Mr. BLAND. I understand the proposition, but I ask the gentleman from Iowa the question whether, if debate goes on to-day, the opponents of the bill will allow the previous question to be seconded to-morrow without filibustering? Will they let us have a vote on the question to-morrow?

Mr. KASSON. The only proposition I am authorized to make is that which I have made, that debate go on upon the bill to-day, and it shall then take its place to-morrow in the morning hour without prejudice to either side. I am not authorized to pledge either side of the House further than that.

Mr. HOLMAN. That will not do.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman shows he is not honest in his proposition, but is ready to go on filibustering to prevent a vote on this bill. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I move the House do now adjourn, and on that motion demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope both sides will agree to go on with the debate to-day.

Mr. BLAND. I have no objection to go on with the debate to-day if it is agreed we shall have a vote to-morrow.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio indicate the time when he wishes the debate to close?

Mr. ODELL. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next; and on that demand the yeas and nays.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, notified the House that the President pro tempore had appointed Mr. MORTON, Mr. SARGENT, and Mr. COOPER members on its part on the Joint Committee on Chinese Immigration, authorized by resolution of July 18, 1876.

It further announced that the President pro tempore had appointed Mr. WEST and Mr. COCKRELL members on its part of the commission to which was referred the subject of reform and re-organization of the Army by the fourth section of the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

It further announced the passage of a bill (H. R. No. 3184) granting a pension to Emerick W. Hansell, with amendments; in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced the passage of a bill (S. No. 1014) regulating the disbursement of certain moneys therein named; in which concurrence was requested.

GOLD AND SILVER COINAGE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the demand for the previous question the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT) moved the House adjourn, and pending that the gentleman from New York [Mr. ODELL] moved that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next, and on that demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 85.

So (more than one-fifth of those present voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 3, nays 190, not voting 92; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abram S. Hewitt, Odell, and Page—3.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Adams, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Blair, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Cannon, Caswell, Cate, Caulfield, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Conger, Cook, Crounse, Culberson, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davis, Davy, Dibrell, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Evans, Felton, Finley, Forney, Fort, Foster, Franklin, Frye, Garfield, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Haymond, Hays, Henderson, Henkle, Hereford, Hoar, Holman, Hopkins, House, Hubbell, Hunton, Hurlbut, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kimball, Lamar, Franklin Landers, Lane, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lewis, Lord, Luttrell, Lynch, Mackey, Maish, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, McFarland, Meade, Metcalfe, Miller, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, O'Neill, Packer, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, Pierce, Piper, Poppleton, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Scales, Sheakley, Singleton, Sinnickson, Slemons, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Southard, Spencer, Strait, Stenger, Stevenson, Stone, Stowell, Teese, Terry, Thompson, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Turney, Van Vorhes, Waddell, Wait, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Walsh, Ward, Erastus Wells, White, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Woodburn, Yeates, and Young—190.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Bliss, Blount, Bradley, Burleigh, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Chapin, Cowan, Cox, Crapo, De Bolt, Denison, Douglas, Durand, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Freeman, Fuller, Gause, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hendee, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoge, Hooker, Hoskins, Hunter, Hurd, Hyman, Frank Jones, Kelley, King, Knott, George M. Landers, Levy, Lynde, Magoon, McMahon, Money, O'Brien, Oliver, William A. Phillips, Plaisted, Platt, Purman, Rainey, James B. Reilly, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Sparks, Springer, Swann, Tarbox, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Warren, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, and Woodworth—92.

So the House refused to adjourn over.

Mr. BLAND. Inasmuch as there is a disposition to filibuster during the morning hour, and knowing that it can be done to the end of the session, I am willing to agree to the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa, that debate go on to-day, and will take my chance of getting the previous question seconded in the morning hour to-morrow. Let them take the responsibility of filibustering to-morrow if they choose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that this debate be allowed to run on until two o'clock to-morrow, and that then by common consent the vote shall be taken.

Mr. KASSON. I object to that in advance of debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the debate go on first; we can tell better after matters have been discussed what should be done.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the arrangement be for debate during to-day only, for we cannot tell what to-morrow will bring forth.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well; let the debate run to-day only.

Mr. RANDALL. I would prefer that to-day only be agreed upon, because to-morrow there may be other business requiring action.

Mr. HOAR. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. LORD,] the senior manager of the impeachment proceedings on the part of the House, desires to make a very brief report to the House by and by, which will take only a few minutes. I desire to have his right to make that report reserved.

Mr. RANDALL. That may be reserved.

Mr. HALE. It is understood that no arrangement of this kind to-day is to disturb the status of this bill as being confined to the morning hour hereafter? That should be fully understood.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Whenever an arrangement is agreed upon by the gentlemen on the floor the Chair will state what it is.

Mr. RANDALL. The practical effect of the arrangement is to allow the debate to run to-day without reference to the expiration of the morning hour; and the bill comes up again in the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. It does not disturb the position of the bill there? That should be fully understood.

Mr. BLAND. That is not exactly my proposition. It was that I should also have a morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. RANDALL. That nobody can deprive you of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri will have the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that this proposition be agreed to: That debate shall proceed to-day and till one o'clock to-morrow, and that then the previous question be called and voted on, without the interposition of any dilatory motions.

Mr. GARFIELD. We cannot agree to that until we have had debate on the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I will make another proposition. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] will agree that we shall take a vote to-morrow, I am willing that his proposition for a commission shall be admitted to be pending as a substitute to the bill, so that the House may decide between the two.

Mr. KASSON. I understood the gentleman from Missouri to say that in view of the circumstances he accepted the proposition I made, which was this: That by unanimous consent the debate shall go on to-day on this bill, no vote to be taken, and the gentleman not withdrawing his call for the previous question; and that to-morrow the bill resumes its place in the morning hour.

Mr. BLAND. And that the House gives its consent for a morning hour to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House does not need to give such consent. The morning hour will stand independently of any consent of the House.

Mr. BLAND. I want it understood that I have submitted to the gentlemen who have shown a disposition to filibuster on this bill because I declined to admit the amendment for the appointment of a commission, that I am willing that the gentleman from Iowa should offer that proposition, and that it be admitted as a pending amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I think a proposition of that nature will be preferred by the Committee on Banking and Currency, but I have no authority to state it now.

Mr. TUCKER. Is there anything in this arrangement that would exclude any amendment that may be offered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No amendment can be offered to the bill pending the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BLAND. I have said that I am willing to withdraw the call for the previous question for the purpose of allowing amendments to be offered.

Mr. TUCKER. Generally?

Mr. BLAND. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. That the gentleman can do if this arrangement is made.

Mr. BLAND. I make the proposition that we have debate on this bill during the whole of to-day, and that we have the morning hour to-morrow, when I will call the previous question on the bill and the amendments which may be offered to it. If gentlemen want to amend it I am willing they should have an opportunity of doing so, provided the House will consent to giving me the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. KASSON. To-morrow will take care of itself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the proposition as to the length of time to be given to the debate to-day?

Mr. GARFIELD. That it shall run through to-day except so far as interrupted by a statement of the managers of the impeachment or anything else by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the proposition to the House. The proposition of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is that the pending bill shall be discussed during this day——

Mr. KASSON. The bill being kept in its present position.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill retaining its present position, and coming up as it otherwise would as the pending business in the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The motion for the previous question being withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion for the previous question to be regarded as pending in the hands of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND.]

Mr. HOAR. No, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair certainly understands that it is part of the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri that the motion for the previous question shall not pass out of his control.

Mr. BLAND. Unless the House consents to the morning hour to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand what the gentleman means by the House consenting to a morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. BLAND. I mean this, that conference committees may take me off the floor and occupy the whole time to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. I think there is no danger of that.

Mr. BLAND. But if the House consents to have a morning hour I will agree to that proposition.

Mr. HOAR. According to my understanding it is not in the power of the House to take from the conference committees the power to report at any time. That depends on the joint rule; and the House cannot take from them that power.

Mr. BLAND. If that consent is given it will mean that the conference committees agree to it, and I am willing to run the risk of their violating that agreement.

Mr. BANKS. It is necessary some reservation should be made in regard to the morning hour in order to secure it; because otherwise any question of privilege may deprive the House of the morning hour to-morrow, on which this arrangement depends.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is waiting until some gentleman states what the exact proposition is. The Chair cannot understand what proposition is pending before the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the lateness of the hour in the session and the importance of disposing of such reports of committees of conference as are yet undisposed of, I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] that he modify his proposition so that four hours shall be allowed for debate, subject to a call for the previous question to day or during the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. KASSON. I object to the introduction of a new element to the prejudice of either party. The proposition to which the gentleman from Missouri makes no objection is that the debate shall proceed now under the present condition of the question, no vote to be taken to-day, and that to-morrow the bill shall resume its place in the morning hour under the call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that proposition. Is it assented to by the House?

Mr. BLAND. I assent to it because I cannot do anything better.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I understand then that the motion for the previous question is pending, but that by unanimous consent the debate is to be allowed to continue to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state the proposition. The proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is that by unanimous consent this bill shall pend for debate during this day and that it shall resume its place, as it naturally would, in the morning hour to-morrow, and that it shall then be under the pending call for the previous question of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] which will exclude all amendments but those which the gentleman from Missouri yields for.

Mr. NEAL. I object to that.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to propose that the morning hour shall continue during the entire day without any other arrangement.

Mr. KASSON. O, no! that will not do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is upon the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] that the House do now adjourn; upon which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and on a division there were yeas 45, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 2, nays 174, not voting 109; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Odell and Smalls—2.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Blair, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Cannon, Cason, Caswell, Cate, Caulfield, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Clymer, Cochrane, Conger, Cook, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Davis, Davy, Dibrell, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Evans, Felton, Finley, Forney, Fort, Foster, Franklin, Frye, Garfield, Gibson, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Haymond, Henderson, Henkle, Hereford, Holman, Hopkins, House, Hubbell, Hunton, Hurlbut, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Kasson, Kehr, Kimball, Lamar, Franklin Landers, Lane, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynch, Lynde, Mackey, Magoon, McDill, McFarland, McMahon, Meade, Metcalfe, Miller, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Morgan, Morrison, Mutchler, Nash, Neal, New, Norton, O'Neill, Packer, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Piper, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Robinson, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Scales, Singleton, Sinnickson, Slemons, A. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Southard, Strait, Stevenson, Stone, Teese, Terry, Thompson, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Turney, Van Vorhes, Waddell, Gilbert C. Walker, Walsh, Warren, Erastus Wells, White, Whiting, Wigginton, Wike, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Yeates, and Young—174.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Ashe, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Bliss, Blount, Bradley, William R. Brown, Burleigh, Campbell, Candler, Chapin, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Collins, Cowan, Cox, Crapo, Culberson, Darrall, De Bolt, Denison, Douglas, Durand, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Freeman, Fuller, Gause, Glover, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Hooker, Hoskins, Hunter, Hurd, Hyman, Frank Jones, Joyce, Kelley, King, Knott, George M. Landers, Levy, Lord, Maish, MacDougall, McCrary, Money, O'Brien, Oliver, Page, Plaisted, Platt, Poppleton, Purman, James B. Reilly, Roberts, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Sheakley, Sparks, Spencer, Springer, Stenger, Stowell, Swann, Tarbox, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Andrew Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, and Woodworth—109.

So the House refused to adjourn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JENKS. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has expired.

Mr. JENKS. I move, then, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. No. 2803) to provide for arrears of pensions on account of death or wounds received or disease contracted in the service of the United States since the 4th day of March, 1861, and for the payment of the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman cannot make that motion.

Mr. JENKS. Then I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken on Mr. JENKS's motion; and on a division there were—ayes 54, noes 44; no quorum voting.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. JENKS and Mr. HALE were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 84, noes 67.

So the motion was agreed to.

IMPEACHMENT OF WILLIAM W. BELKNAP.

Mr. LORD. I ask unanimous consent before the House goes into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to submit a report of the managers of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

The managers on the part of the House to conduct the impeachment against William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, respectfully report:

That the defendant, William W. Belknap, has been acquitted on all the articles presented against him, less than two-thirds of the Senators present voting "guilty." The final vote was 61; thirty-seven of the Senators voted "guilty," twenty-three "not guilty" for want of jurisdiction, one "not guilty," and one criticised a portion of the articles of impeachment, and stated that the offenses charged in other of the articles were not proven beyond a reasonable doubt. A change of five votes would have resulted in the conviction of the defendant by the two-thirds vote required by the Constitution.

The question of jurisdiction, raised by the plea of the defendant, was the first point presented to the court of impeachment. After a protracted and exhaustive argument, the court held that it had jurisdiction, notwithstanding the resignation of the defendant; and the managers proceeded to prove the offenses charged in the articles of impeachment, and after proving them so conclusively that only two Senators in any manner questioned the guilt of the defendant, the minority of the Senate refused to be governed by the deliberate judgment of the majority, that it had jurisdiction, and, in the form and mode before referred to, prevented the conviction of the defendant.

While exercising the power to vote "not guilty," it was practically asserted that there was no converse to the proposition and therefore that Senators had no legal right to vote "guilty," however satisfied of the guilt of the accused.

Notwithstanding this result, the managers believe that great good will accrue from the impeachment and trial of the defendant. It has been settled thereby that persons who have held civil office in the United States are impeachable, and that the Senate has jurisdiction to try them, although years may elapse before the discovery of the offense or offenses subjecting them to impeachment. To such as are or may hereafter be among the civil officers of the United States, who have no higher plane of integrity than the rule that "honesty is the best policy," and it is conceded they are comparatively few, this decision will be a constant warning that impeachable offenses, though not discovered for years, may result in impeachment, conviction, and public disgrace. To settle this principle, so vitally important in securing the rectitude of the class of officers referred to, is worth infinitely more than all the time, labor, and expense of the protracted trial closed by the verdict of yesterday.

The trial and its discussions have presented also to the public mind clearer views of official accountability, and developed higher requirements of the advancing public sentiment.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Mr. LORD. I move that this report be printed and laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LORD. I desire that by unanimous consent the managers be granted a few minutes to express their views in regard to this report. And I will now yield to Mr. Manager HOAR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a question entirely for the House to determine. Is there unanimous consent for a discussion of this report at this time?

Mr. CONGER. If there is to be further apology from the managers, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has already ordered that it shall be resolved into Committee of the Whole, and the Chair only detained the House a few moments to receive the report of the managers.

Mr. HOAR. I merely desire to utter one or two sentences, which I would like to have accompany this report, and I ask leave of the House for that purpose.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the very grave public importance of the matter, a determination of which has just been officially reported to the House, and the very great importance and delicacy of the duty which has been imposed upon the managers by the House, justify me in asking permission to say one or two words in reference to what, in my judgment, has actually been accomplished.

An investigation into the parliamentary history of impeachment will satisfy everybody that the lovers of liberty and of good government, both in this country and in England, who took part in the formation of our Constitution, or in the defense in England of the great principles upon which our Constitution rests, regard the right to impeach every executive officer for abuses of public trust, as long as that person lives, whether in or out of office, to be one of the great safeguards of your constitutional popular government.

The language which was current at that day would seem extravagant if uttered upon this floor to-day by any member of this House. Mr. Burke, in his "Thoughts on the Cause of the Present Discontent," volume 1, page 397, objecting to the sharing by the House of Lords in the executive powers of the government, just as some persons object to-day to the usurpation by the Senate of an undue share in the power of appointment of executive officers, says:

> The control of Parliament in this way upon the executory power is lost, because Parliament is made to partake in every considerable act of government.

And he adds:

> Impeachment, that great guardian of purity of the Constitution, is in danger of being lost.

The wisdom and accuracy alike of that prediction is shown by the events of this winter. Mr. Monroe, the very embodiment of common sense, of caution, of moderation, a man who in public service had been largely in the executive branch of the Government, in a work upon government, which he left to be published after his death as containing his maturest counsels to his fellow-citizens, says:

> The right of impeachment and of trial by the Legislature is the mainspring of the great machine of government. It is the pivot on which it turns. If preserved in full vigor and exercised with perfect integrity every branch will perform its duty.

Now, Mr. Speaker, whatever may be the result of this trial to the individual who has been impeached at the bar of the Senate, whatever may be the value to him of preserving the right to be a candidate for public office before his fellow-citizens hereafter, this great constitutional power of this House has in my judgment been vindicated and preserved by the decision of the great constitutional court before which the charge was made and by the more powerful, more permanent, more august decision in the opinion of the American people.

I have been in a position to know by very extensive personal correspondence and conversation the opinion of large numbers of the jurists of the country who are not at present engaged in political life or animated by any feelings of partisanship in regard to either political party; and I believe I have the right to affirm that, almost without any considerable exception—there are some exceptions—the judgment of the profession of the law, of the bench, and the bar corresponds with the judgment of this House and the judgment of the Senate that the right to judge in cases of impeachment for abuses of public trust is vested in the Senate on proper charges presented by the House, at whatever time in the life of the offender the offense may be discovered or the evidence of it be put in the power of the public prosecuting authorities.

That is the only question which is of importance here; and I believe the effect of this decision will be that for a century to come there will not be in the history of this country a repetition by a Cabinet officer or other high executive official of such offenses as have been disclosed and prosecuted in this trial. This House without distinction of party and this country without distinction of party may be grateful to the persons who have set in motion the mechanism for punishing this offense, and to the House of Representatives who, whether the particular sentence has received the support of two-thirds of the other branch or not, have made it impossible almost that these offenses should be repeated.

Mr. LORD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAPHAM] may be heard on behalf of the management for a few minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. LAPHAM. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to detain the House for but a moment. It is very far from my desire or purpose to question the integrity or sincerity of the action of any Senator in voting upon the final question of "guilty" or "not guilty" in the case of the late Secretary of War, Mr. Belknap. But in view of the extraordinary position taken by the Senators who voted "not guilty," as adverted to in the report which the chairman of the board of managers has just made, I desire for a moment to call attention to a striking fact presented by the record in this case.

On the 7th of June last the Senate, after hearing discussion on the part of the counsel, retired in secret for the purpose of consultation, and unanimously, so far as I can learn, (for there is no dissent apparent upon the record,) agreed upon this order:

Ordered, That upon the 6th of July, 1876, at one o'clock p. m., the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment will proceed to hear the evidence on the merits of the trial in this case.

On the 6th of July, in pursuance of such order, the Senate entered upon the trial. The Senators who have at last voted "not guilty" were present most of them—at times, I may say, all of them—and participated in the conduct of the trial. They voted upon questions of the reception of evidence; they took part in the entire proceedings and heard the argument of counsel both on behalf of the managers and on behalf of the accused. Now, at last when the final vote is taken, they occupy to me the anamolous position of saying "All this has been coram non judice and void; we had no right to act; we had no jurisdiction to take evidence; and therefore we vote 'not guilty.'" To my mind that is a non sequitur.

I think the position taken by the Senator from Florida, that because he believed the Senate had no jurisdiction he could not vote at all on the question of guilt or innocence, is much the more consistent position for Senators to have taken.

And with calling the attention of the House and through the House of the country to this position assumed by the minority who have voted to acquit, I have, Mr. Speaker, performed the only duty which it seems to me incumbent for me to discharge in the case.

HON. CHARLES HAYS.

Mr. LORD. On behalf of the Judiciary Committee I ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee in regard to CHARLES HAYS may be printed in the RECORD and laid on the table.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. FRYE. On behalf of certain members of the Judiciary Committee, I ask to present their views and have them printed in the RECORD in the same connection.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The majority and minority reports are as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom it was referred to investigate certain charges made against CHARLES HAYS, a member of this House from the fourth congressional district of Alabama, relating to the appointment of Guy R. Beardslee as a cadet at the United States Military Academy, respectfully report:

The resolution suggests two subjects of inquiry.

First. Did the said CHARLES HAYS "falsely certify to the Secretary of War that the said Beardslee had been an actual bona fide resident of the said district for over two years previous to the nomination" of said Beardslee by said HAYS?

Second. Did the mother of said Beardslee pay to said HAYS the sum of $3,000 to obtain said nomination?

As to the first inquiry the committee report the following facts:

Mr. HAYS had made several nominations from his district for the United States Military Academy which for various reasons had failed.

On the 4th of March, A. D. 1874, (page 18,) and as the evidence tends to show after the adjournment of the Congress, the said HAYS nominated by writing the said Beardslee for an appointment as a cadet at said Military Academy from the said congressional district, and certified that said Beardslee resided in "Choctaw," in the "county of Choctaw, State of Alabama," and that he had "been an actual bona fide resident of the district for over two years.

At the time such certificate was made said Beardslee had never been in the State of Alabama, but then was in the city and State of New York, in which State he had always resided. The said HAYS delivered said certificate to one William Lilley, an attorney of the city of Washington, whose advertisements as to appointments to West Point had attracted the attention of Mrs. Beardslee, (pages 23, 31,) who took it to the city of New York and delivered it to one Professor Charlier, who paid him $3,000 therefor, and was afterward re-imbursed by Mrs. Beardslee, the mother of the said cadet.

On the back of said nomination is written, in the handwriting of said Lilley, (pages 42, 45, 46,) "Residence Blayden Springs, Choctaw, Alabama." (Page 62.)

Mr. Lilley testified that he told Mr. HAYS that Mr. Beardslee "was a bona fide resident of some spring (I forget the name) in Choctaw County, Alabama, and then he signed the certificate." (Page 14.)

Mr. John G. Stokes, who during the Forty-third Congress was the clerk of Mr. HAYS's committee, testified (page 57) that he heard said Lilley tell HAYS that the boy resided in Blayden Springs, Choctaw County; also that he, Lilley, told the witness so, and that the witness told HAYS so.

Immediately after such certificate was given, said Beardslee went to the State of Alabama for the purpose of obtaining a residence.

On his way, as advised by Professor Charlier, he stopped at Washington to see said Lilley. (Page 27.) He was asked to sign a certificate in blank and to procure his mother's signature also in blank, which was afterward falsely filled up by said Lilley by inserting that said Beardslee had actually resided in the fourth congressional district of Alabama for six years and eight months. Said Lilley also wrote a letter for said Beardslee to copy and sign, directed to the Secretary of War, under date of March 5, 1874, in which he makes said Beardslee state "my residence is Blayden Springs, Choctaw County, Alabama." (Page 63.)

In the written statement prepared and signed by Mr. HAYS, and verified by him under oath, he states three times that Lilley told him that Beardslee lived in Choctaw County, Alabama. His last statement relating to it in such previously prepared statement is, "I remember distinctly asking him where the boy lived and he replied, 'In Choctaw County,' Alabama." (Page 46.)

In his oral statement (page 47) he states that Lilley told him that Beardslee lived in Choctaw, Choctaw County, Alabama.

On page 48, after stating that he did not know that Lilley wrote on said nomination, "Residence, Blayden Springs, Choctaw, Alabama," he is asked:

"Question. Do you mean to testify that he made any other memorandum?

"Answer. None that I remember of.

"Q. I mean any other memorandum than the one on the back of the paper.

"A. No, sir; not that I remember."

The nomination, it will be borne in mind, reads as to residence, Choctaw, in the county of Choctaw. Mr. HAYS, so far from saying this was an inadvertence, in contradiction of all the evidence, affirms that Lilley wrote it on a piece of paper and handed it to him.

At page 49 Mr. HAYS is asked:

"Q. What led you to write in this certificate Choctaw, in the county of Choctaw?

"A. I got it from the paper that Lilley handed me; that is the way I came to write it. I should not have written it there if I had not believed that there was such a place."

The evidence discloses that there is no such place as Choctaw, in Choctaw County.

Mr. HAYS is asked, (page 48:)

"Q. Is there such a place as Choctaw in Choctaw County, Alabama?

"A. No, sir. I understand that there is not. I did not know it, however, at that time."

THE INTRODUCTION OF MR. HAYS AND YOUNG BEARDSLEE BY LILLEY.

Mr. Lilley affirms the entire innocence of Mr. HAYS; that he (Lilley) deceived him as to the residence of Beardslee, and that Mr. HAYS believed the boy was an actual, bona fide resident of his district. (Page 13.)

The evidence of young Beardslee has satisfied the committee that he was entirely sincere in the belief that it was sufficient to obtain admission to West Point that he should go from the State of New York after his nomination and reside in the State of Alabama sixty days. Assuming equal integrity on the part of Mr. HAYS, it is evident that should they be introduced so as to know each other and the relations in which they stood, an inquiry which one or the other would almost unavoidably make would expose the gross deception which Mr. Lilley, on his theory, was practicing upon them.

It would not be expected, therefore, that Mr. Lilley would voluntarily take the risk of introducing them to each other; not only because of such risk of exposure, but also because it would probably result in his being compelled to return the $3,000 which he had received for concocting and carrying on, as he claims, this double falsehood; and yet the evidence discloses that while young Beardslee was at his house in Washington, at the time before stated, he told him he expected Mr. HAYS on some business that morning, and that if he came he would introduce them. Mr. HAYS came, and he did introduce them.

This, of course, was entirely safe if Mr. HAYS understood the transaction and knew that Beardslee was on his way to Alabama to obtain, as he thought, a residence in that State. On the other hand, if Mr. HAYS believed that Beardslee lived in Alabama and thought, as he alleges, that he was then on his way from Alabama to New York, (page 49,) it would be expected that he would make some inquiry as to the time he left Alabama, or about his friends, or some other inquiry indicating that he felt at least some remote degree of interest in his protégé. But if he (HAYS) knew the real facts and that his protégé did not, his only safety was in the absolute silence which he maintained, except that he said, "I hope you will pass, as several others have failed." (Pages 25, 27, and 48.)

Mr. HAYS (page 48) gives as a reason for asking no question that he expected to see the young man again here in town, but admits that he made no inquiry as to where he was stopping or how long he would remain or any thing on the subject.

In regard to the testimony of Mr. Stokes that he told Mr. HAYS that Beardslee lived in Choctaw County, it appears from his own statement not only that he knew nothing except what he heard Mr. Lilley say, (pages 56, 57,) but Mr. HAYS admits (page 47) that Stokes had no knowledge excepting through Lilley.

Mr. HAYS is asked—

"Question. Did Mr. Stokes profess to know anything about it beside what Mr. Lilley told him?

"Answer. He only said that Lilley said that the boy was a resident of Choctaw County, Alabama, and that he was satisfied that he was.

"Q. Did Stokes claim to know anything about it of his own knowledge?

"A. No, sir; nothing that I know of except through Lilley."

The necessity which Mr. HAYS now feels for other representations than those made by Mr. Lilley is evidenced by that part of his prepared statement in which he alleges:

"About this time I made the recommendation and certified to his actual residence in the fourth congressional district of Alabama, because from the representations of Lilley and Stokes I believed it true."

And yet his cross-examination just above stated shows that he had no information except from Lilley.

In regard to the second inquiry, the committee report that there is not sufficient evidence to show that Mr. HAYS shared in the $3,000 taken from Mrs. Beardslee for the appointment of her son. So far as Mrs Beardslee is concerned, she evidently had no knowledge that she was violating the law, and the same may be said of Professor Charlier. (See pages 8, 9.)

As to young Beardslee, there is no evidence but that he has acted in perfect good faith.

As regards Mr. Lilley, who claims to have practiced as an attorney here in Washington for many years, and who advertised that he could procure appointments, such a suggestion can hardly be made; on the contrary, from his own statements it is evident that he saw no way to get the $3,000 except through a system of gross deception, by procuring blank signatures and then filling the blanks with statements utterly false.

In regard to Mr. HAYS, the committee report that while the evidence may not be sufficient to find that he willfully made a fraudulent certificate, it still excites grave suspicions, and shows in any possible view a carelessness which ought not to be tolerated.

Giving Mr. HAYS the benefit of his own statement, the most that can be said in his favor is that with the fullest opportunity to ascertain the truth, he chose to rely upon the statement of Lilley, who he knew had no acquaintance or interests in his State and had every reason to suppose was acting for a consideration. If Mr. HAYS did not know the certificate was entirely false, he is certainly censurable for signing it on evidence so barren and so suspicious. But taking the testimony all together, this committee recommend that no further action be taken in the case.

VIEWS OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

The undersigned entirely concur in the conclusion of the committee that no further action be taken in this case, but dissent from what purports to be the report of the majority in so far as it in any way reflects upon the honor or integrity of Mr. HAYS.

The investigation of the case has been of the most thorough and searching character. Every witness who could by possibility know anything of the facts of the case has been examined, cross-examined, re-examined; some of them recalled and again subjected to the most rigid examination; every trail that might lead to a disclosure of some improper conduct on the part of Mr. HAYS has been followed to the end. No pains has been spared by the committee to get the truth. After this thorough sifting of the case we desire to place it upon record that in our judgment there is no evidence that Mr. HAYS knew or had reason to believe that Young Beardslee was not a bona fide resident of his district at the time he nominated him. Nor is there any evidence whatever that he received or was to receive directly or indirectly any consideration whatever for this appointment. On the contrary the evidence is clear, explicit, direct, and emphatic that he never received anything whatever, directly or indirectly, nor was he directly or indirectly promised anything.

Mr. HAYS had made nominations before this one of cadets to West Point. Some had failed in the examination; one had declined. There was a vacancy to be filled from his district and one Lilley, with whom he had been acquainted for some years, requested him to appoint young Mr. Beardslee, representing the latter to be a bona fide resident of Choctaw County, in Mr. HAYS's district, and the son of a widow. John G. Stokes, who was clerk of the committee of which Mr. HAYS was chairman, also made the same representation. Mr. HAYS knew nothing of young Beardslee, and acted solely upon representations as to his residence, and it is nothing to his discredit that he did so. He represents a large district composed of fourteen counties. Choctaw is a remote county in that district—remote from railroad communication—in which Mr. HAYS had never been but twice in his life and then only very briefly, and he had scarcely a personal acquaintance in it. It is not therefore surprising that he should have acted upon the statements made by others as to the residence of young Beardslee. In making this nomination Mr. HAYS described Beardslee as of Choctaw, of the county of Choctaw, in the State of Alabama, and as having been a bona fide resident of the district for over two years. In doing so he acted upon the representations made to him as he might properly do, and the fact that he was unacquainted in the county and lived remote from it is ample excuse for his action in that behalf.

Lilley received $3,000 for procuring this appointment, but there is not only no reason to suspect that Mr. HAYS received any part of that money but there is also no reason to suspect that he had the slightest knowledge that Lilley was being paid for what he was doing.

In looking over this whole case we feel it to be due to Mr. HAYS, as a matter of justice, to say that there is no evidence to sustain the charges affecting his honor or integrity.

WM. P. FRYE.
WM. LAWRENCE.
GEO. F. HOAR.
FRANK H. HURD.
GEO. W. McCRARY.

By request of the above I annex a copy of the records of the committee, showing that only four of its members sustain what purports to be the report of the majority.

WM. P. FRYE.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 19, 1876.

In the Committee on the Judiciary Mr. LORD called up his report in the matter of Hon. CHARLES HAYS. After lengthy discussion the report was adopted by the following vote:

AYES—Messrs. Knott, Ashe, Lord, and Caulfield—4.
NOES—Messrs. Hurd and Lawrence—2.
EXCUSED—Mr. Lynde—1.
ABSENT—Messrs. Hunton, McCrary, Frye, and Hoar—4.

I certify the above to be a true copy of the proceedings of the Judiciary Committee on July 19, 1876, in the case of CHARLES HAYS.

CHARLES WICKLIFFE BECKHAM,
Clerk Judiciary Committee House of Representatives.

GOVERNMENT HOSPITAL FOR INSANE—SURVEYS OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I ask unanimous consent to present at this time the report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department in regard to the management of the Government Hospital for the Insane; also the report of the same committee, together with the testimony, relative to surveys of public lands. The minority report on the latter subject will be presented in a day or two, when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WOODWORTH] shall return. I ask that these reports may be printed and recommitted.

Mr. CONGER. I object until both reports are ready.

Mr. MUTCHLER. They are both ready to be made, I understand; but owing to the absence of Mr. WOODWORTH the minority report has not been signed.

Mr. CONGER. If both reports are ready, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, both these reports will be ordered to be printed and recommitted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be understood; and if there be no objection the order requested will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JENKS. I now call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House has agreed to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JENKS. I ask, then, for the execution of the order of the House.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CLYMER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 53) to amend the third section of the act of Congress approved March 12, 1863, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of moving the committee proceed to the execution of the order of the House making the bill (H. R. No. 2803) to provide for arrears of pensions on account of death or wounds received or disease contracted in the service of the United States since the 4th day of March, 1861, and for the payment of the same, the special order in Committee of the Whole.

There was some discussion had yesterday as to how the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union proceeded to the consideration and disposition of matters referred to it. Rule 114, which I had read, points out very clearly how the committee shall proceed to dispose of such matters. But, sir, on the 22d of March the House suspended the rules and made the special order the bill to provide for arrears of pensions on account of death or wounds received or disease contracted in the service of the United States since the 4th day of March, 1861, and for the payment of the same. It was made the special order for the 5th of April and from day to day until disposed of. Now I cannot imagine what benefit that bill would derive from the suspension of the rules in that case unless it should be entitled to be first taken up when the House went into committee. Several other special orders were made, but they are all for a later day, and the common practice always has been when two orders are made in the same day to take up the one first made, and then the other special orders are pushed ahead and disposed of when the first one and others preceding them are out of the way.

If it is not a good point that the rules have been suspended to make this bill a special order and it takes precedence in Committee of the Whole, then it can be of no benefit to any bill to make it a special order in Committee of the Whole.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I make the point that the order of the House is this Committee of the Whole shall proceed to take up special orders in preference to bills regularly referred in the morning hour.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not know what the practice of the House has been on this subject, but I understand the ruling of the Chair yesterday, or rather of the Speaker before the House went into Committee of the Whole, to be that all bills which were upon the Calendar should be taken up in the order in which they came, and therefore there could be no favoritism to any special bill which had been made the subject of consideration for any specified period, unless the majority of the committee should by vote so decide. And on that point made yesterday on the proposition made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] I asked the Chair whether or not the bill which was first on the Calendar would be the subject of consideration by the action of a majority of the committee, and I understood the Chair to rule such would be the case. I cannot understand any reason why, when the House has resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, it should not take up the bills in the order in which they stand upon the general Calendar; and the fact that the House has made a rule or order giving preference to a particular matter cannot supersede the general subject-matters of legislation which are under consideration when the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole. And the Chair, I understand, ruled in accordance with this opinion, that it required the action of a majority of the committee to postpone any bill which superseded the particular bill it was desired by my friend from Ohio [Mr. RICE] to take up. I think the ruling was a correct one, because, if it is not a proper ruling, we would have every other bill on any other subject laid aside without the action of the majority of the committee for the consideration of the special order to which my friend from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] has referred. I think the ruling was properly made yesterday, that whatever action was taken on this subject should be action by a majority of the Committee of the Whole; that they had the right to say whether any measure made the subject of a special order should be considered in preference to a bill properly on the Calendar.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi referring to the ruling yesterday are correct. The point then raised was how bills were considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Rule 114, which I had read, clearly shows how they are to be considered, and this bill to which I have called attention was made a special order under a suspension of the rules, of all the rules, including Rule 114, giving it preference over all other bills referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The Chair did not rule yesterday on the point I now suggest at all. He ruled yesterday in reference to the general rules, and especially in reference to Rule 114. This bill in reference to arrears of pensions, however, has the privilege and dignity of having been made under a suspension of all the rules, and particularly of Rule 114 now, as regards the consideration of bills the special order, and it is the right of any gentleman to have that special order first taken up for consideration. When it is taken up, the majority of the House can postpone its consideration, because it is a common principle of parliamentary law that the majority at no time shall be compelled to consider anything they do not want to consider. The only difference between my friend and myself is this, that he wants the call to begin at the top of the Calendar under Rule 114, and I wish to begin with the special order made under the suspending of Rule 114.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. In addition to what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] suggests, will the Chair allow me to say that the position of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] would lead to this conclusion, it seems to me, that the Committee of the Whole could do in regard to the postponement of a bill what the House would under his view have no power to do. Now, I think it has been the practice of the House when from time to time it makes special orders that those special orders are called up and have the preference under the order of the House; but if no order is made—no special order—then bills are to be considered under that rule in the order in which they stand on the Calendar.

Mr. BANKS. If the Chair will allow me, I desire to say that the effect of a special order is to give any member of the House the right on a particular day or any day thereafter to call that special order up for consideration; but if no member calls it up, it cannot be acted upon. The special order not being called, if the House votes to go into Committee of the Whole on the Calendar, the committee cannot make that a special order which the House has not made a special order to be called up. If the Chair understands me, my point is that where a special order is made and nobody calls for it, it cannot be acted upon. And if in the mean time the House goes into Committee of the Whole on the General Calendar and that special order is on the Calendar, it must be considered only when it is reached on the Calendar.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. My friend from Massachusetts must see that there is one difficulty here. This was made a special order in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and consequently could not be called up in the House, nor until the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BANKS. The gentleman is mistaken. The effect of the special order is to give the member the right to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the day for which the special order is fixed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That cannot be the effect of a special order, because any member has a right to make that motion to suspend the rules that the House may resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House upon the Calendar at any time without making it a special order. And if the effect of making this bill a special order is not to give it precedence in Committee of the Whole, then I cannot imagine what the use of making it a special order is.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the practice—what the rule may be I am not prepared to say—the practice has been where the House goes into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union generally, without going into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering any specific bill which has been made a special order, that then the bills must be taken up in the order in which they stand on the Calendar; and the uniform practice when the object was to reach a specific bill has been to postpone the bills preceding it one after the other until the bill sought to be acted on is reached. Such has been the general practice, though I have not examined the rules on the subject.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to say in answer to what has fallen from the gentleman from Iowa, and the suggestion made by the gentleman immediately in front of me, [Mr. RUSK,] that the proposition was made yesterday by my friend from Ohio [Mr. RICE] to go into Committee of the Whole on a specific bill, the bill now referred to by the gentleman from Iowa, and the Speaker decided that that could not be done. Subsequently my friend from Ohio modified his motion and moved to go into Committee of the Whole generally on the state of the Union without reference to the consideration of any specific measure of whatever character. And therefore the position, as I understand it, assumed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] is the correct one; that it may have been in the power of the gentleman from Ohio or of any other member to move to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of a specific measure which had been made the special order for consideration for that day or any previous day; but after the ruling of the Chair my friend from Ohio moved to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Calendar generally. And therefore I think the position of the gentleman from Massachusetts is impregnable; that when you do that you must take up the bills in the order in which they stand upon the general Calendar; but you may pass that by, as the gentleman from Iowa has suggested, by the consent of a majority of the committee. That is to say, the House having gone into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union may say by the action of a majority, "we will consider this or that or the other measure; we will lay aside this or that bill;" but you must primarily consider the bill which stands first upon the Calendar.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to make a remark, Mr. Chairman, on just one point. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. RICE] in making his motion yesterday, that the House should resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering a certain bill did not assert its precedence as being a special order. If he had asserted that that was a special order of the House and moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering that special order, the Chair would have been compelled to rule that the gentleman was entitled to make that motion.

Mr. HOOKER. But the Chair did not rule that way.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Chair did not enforce the rule. He was not required to rule upon the question of a special order, because the point was not made that this was a special order. Now, I cannot see what benefit will accrue from making a special order, or what force the special order of the House will have unless you enforce it when you go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that the consideration of our practice here settles this question, and that the Calendar itself shows what the practice of the House is. It is very clear that the committee cannot in any way change the order of the House, but that you must obey any special order of the House. Therefore, when the House orders in sending a bill to the Committee of the Whole that it shall be a special order for a particular day, the committee has no authority to do anything else on that day but to consider that bill. A little reflection will show the Chair how we always followed that practice out. Appropriation bills can be reported at any time, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has the authority to move at any time, even during the morning hour, to suspend the rules and go into Committee of the Whole upon an appropriation bill; but he always gets before doing that, when he sends the bill to the committee, the order of the House that the appropriation bill shall be the order of the day for a certain day and from day to day until disposed of; otherwise his bill would take its place upon the Calendar, and you would have to lay aside all the other bills on the Calendar until you reached that bill. When bills are made special orders it is usual to waive the right of the Committee on Appropriations to except its bills from the special order; but if the Chair will look on the Calendar he will find that on the 3d of May a bill was made the special order for May 18, after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed—a bill to apply the proceeds of sales of public lands to the education of the people.

He will also find that this bill relating to invalid pensions was upon the 3d of May made the special order for May 16 after the morning hour and from day to day thereafter until disposed of: A bill granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican, Florida, and Black Hawk wars, and certain widows of deceased soldiers and sailors of the same.

It is the duty of the Committee of the Whole, it seems to me, to take up first the education bill made the special order for May 18 after the morning hour until disposed of.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman will see that these orders were not made for the same day.

Mr. HOAR. The last order made for a special day takes precedence over the first. If the House orders that a bill shall be a special order for a particular day and then upon the next day orders that another bill shall be the special order for that day, the last order revokes the first.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I beg to read to the gentleman from Iowa from page 219 of the Manual:

> Where two special orders are made for the same time, the one first made takes precedence.

Mr. HOAR. Then the gentleman from Iowa is right if there is an express rule on that question. But it comes to the same thing, because undoubtedly the committee can lay aside any bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I desire to refer the Chair to page 99 of Jefferson's Manual in Barclay's Digest, in which I think the rule is stated as to orders made in the House, and it seems to me that the same rule ought to apply to orders made for consideration in the Committee of the Whole. But the same reason applies to special orders made for consideration in the Committee of the Whole, namely, that the question which is made which is subject to the order is made privileged in a manner which repeals any general rule as to a special case; hence it gives it preference on the Calendar for consideration. I will read the extract:

> When any member moves, therefore, for the order of the day to be read, no further debate is permitted on the question which was before the House; for if the debate might proceed, it might continue through the day and defeat the order. This motion, to entitle it to precedence, must be for the orders generally, and not for any particular one; and if it be carried on the question "Whether the House will now proceed to the orders of the day?" they must be read and proceeded on in the course in which they stand; for priority of order gives priority of right, which cannot be taken away but by another special order.
>
> After these there are other privileged questions, which will require considerable explanation.

Mr. HOOKER. I will ask the gentleman a question. If you go into Committee of the Whole you must take up the special orders in the order in which they stand upon the Calendar.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I understand the point made by the gentleman from Mississippi, but the order of the House has fixed the order for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BANKS. But the effect of a special order is to give a member of the House the right on a particular day to move to go into Committee of the Whole on that order. If they do not do it, then the House does not go into Committee of the Whole, and if another member moves to go into Committee of the Whole upon the general Calendar, then the special order does not come up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would say that the Committee of the Whole being a mere creature of the House, it is bound under all circumstances to obey any special and specific order of the House. The Chair refers the House to Rule 114, which covers the general practice in committee, and it is upon that alone that the Chair understands that the Speaker of the House decided yesterday. He was alluding, as he said, to the mere general orders on the Calendar, the question of special orders not having been raised, and therefore he did not decide the case as it now stands before the chairman of this committee. Now the order of the House being that on a certain day, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, the bill should be considered, the Chair is clearly of the opinion that the committee should consider such order; that it is the duty of the committee to obey the order of the House and to so consider the bills in reference to their precedence in order. But it being a question that is important in view of the character of the bill, the Chairman will gladly submit the determination of the case to the action of the committee. Those who are of the opinion that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] is well taken will rise and stand to be counted.

Mr. KASSON. What is the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is that the House, instead of the consideration of the first bill on the Calendar, must proceed to consider the special orders made by the House in the order of their dates.

Mr. RANDALL. In order of date?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; in order of date.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Has the question of reconsideration been raised upon this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. That question may arise after the vote has been taken on the point of order.

The question was put upon sustaining the point of order made by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa; and on a division there were—ayes 71, noes 33; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOOKER. I raise the question of order that no quorum voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked twice whether a further count was desired, and he certainly did not hear any gentleman ask for it. If the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] says that he called for a further count——

Mr. HOOKER. I rose before the Chair asked the question and raised the point that there was no quorum voting, and supposed that the Chair was about to appoint tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon that statement the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. JENKS. I make the further point that this is merely for the instruction of the Chair, and is not in any way binding upon the Committee of the Whole.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOOKER and Mr. JENKS were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 98, noes 32.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, it is the duty of the Chair under the rule to direct the roll of members to be called.

The roll was called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Ashe, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Banning, Bass, Beebe, Blackburn, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Bradley, Bright, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, John H. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cannon, Caulfield, Chapin, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Conger, Cowan, Cox, Crapo, De Bolt, Denison, Dobbins, Douglas, Dunnell, Egbert, Ellis, Ely, Faulkner, Freeman, Fuller, Gibson, Glover, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoge, Hoskins, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Frank Jones, Joyce, King, Knott, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Lane, Lapham, Le Moyne, Levy, Luttrell, Magoon, McCrary, Miller, Money, Morrison, New, O'Brien, Oliver, Page, Phelps, Plaisted, Platt, Powell, Purman, Randall, James B. Reilly, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Scales, Schumaker, Seelye, Sheakley, Slemons, Sparks, Spencer, Springer, Stowell, Swann, Tarbox, Thomas, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Andrew Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, and Woodworth—122.

The SPEAKER pro tempore having resumed the Chair, Mr. CLYMER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having found itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll of members to be called and now reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If required, the Clerk will read the list of absentees.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will those who were absent at the time the roll was called be now permitted to answer to their names?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly not.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. How many members answered to their names on the call?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the tally-clerk that one hundred and sixty-three answered to their names. That being more than a quorum, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] will now resume the chair as chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is in order.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONGER. My point of order is that the rule must be observed and the names of the absentees read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman insists upon it, it certainly shall be done. Pending that, however, the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] that the House now adjourn is first in order.

Mr. JENKS. Can the House now adjourn, a quorum having answered to their names in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly; the House can adjourn whenever it pleases. Before submitting the motion to adjourn, if there be no objection, the Chair will submit to the House certain requests.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. JAMES B. REILLY asked and obtained unanimous consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Henry Parry, late assistant surgeon, United States Army.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. JAMES B. REILLY was granted leave of absence for one week.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The question was then taken upon the motion to adjourn, and it was not agreed to—ayes 57, noes 91.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] rises as to what is the regular order. The Committee of the Whole having found itself without a quorum, its chairman directed the roll to be called and reported to the House the names of the absentees. The gentleman from Michigan demands that those names shall be reported by the House.

Mr. CONGER. There has not yet been called the names of the absentees under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no rule by which they can be called in Committee of the Whole; all that the Committee of the Whole can do is to report the list of the absentees to the House. If the gentleman desires those names to be read he has a right to have them read. Otherwise, as a quorum answered to their names, the House will at once resume its session in Committee of the Whole. Had no quorum answered to their names at the time the roll was called in Committee of the Whole, the only motion now in order would have been a motion to adjourn, or a motion for a call of the House. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] desire the names of the absentees to be reported to the House?

Mr. CONGER. My idea of the rule was that the names of the absentees must be called after the roll has been called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is upon a call of the roll in the House.

Mr. CONGER. We are in the House now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is true.

Mr. CONGER. And I ask that the names of the absentees be called for their answers.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The uniform practice has been for the Speaker, when he finds that a quorum answered upon a call of the roll in Committee of the Whole, to immediately call the chairman of the Committee of the Whole to the chair, and the House resumes its session in Committee of the Whole without further order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That has not only been the uniform practice, but it is the plain and explicit rule of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I was of opinion that there was a different rule and a different custom. If the Chair, however, rules that that is the practice I will withdraw my call for the reading of the list of absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Michigan will look at the rule he will find that it is as the Chair has stated. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] will again take the chair, and the Committee of the Whole will resume its session.

TRANSFER OF INDIAN BUREAU.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr CLYMER in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 2592) to transfer the conduct of Indian affairs from the Interior Department to the War Department.

The bill was read.

Mr. COOK. I yield the time to which I would be entitled to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR.]

Mr. JENKS. I raise the point that this bill has already been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that such is not the fact. A similar bill has been passed by the House, but this particular bill has never before been acted upon.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to a privileged question under the rules. I move to postpone the special order. This can be done by a majority vote.

Mr. EDEN. But the gentleman has not the floor to make the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COOK] has yielded the floor to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR.]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But before the House begins the consideration of this bill the motion to postpone the special order is in order as a privileged question.

Mr. EDEN. But the gentleman has not the floor.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The right to raise this question is one of which I cannot be deprived.

Mr. COOK. This bill is a special order in Committee of the Whole, and it has now been reached. I yield my time to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If it is to be settled by unanimous consent that a certain gentleman is to speak, I have not a word to say; but I want to have it distinctly understood that the motion I have made is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the gentleman raises the question of consideration.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object to the consideration of this bill; and Rule 114 says that in this case a majority shall decide whether the bill shall be considered or not. If there is any gentleman who desires to speak, I have no objection to his speaking.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the consideration of this bill be postponed?

The question being taken, it was decided in the negative; there being ayes 40, noes not counted.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. Chairman, I listened early in the session with great pleasure to an interesting and suggestive speech delivered by the gentleman from Massachusetts upon the proposition to amend the Constitution so as to make the President of the United States ineligible to a second term of service. I was struck with the views which he presented upon the subject of the relation of this proposed amendment "to the corrupt and debasing practices which have crept into the public service of the country." I do not propose to discuss that subject fully now; it is too large; but I may say as to the whole subject of civil-service reform that no cure can be successfully applied which does not secure that removal from office shall be made only for cause, and that the tribunal which decides that cause shall by its freedom from all interest or feeling as to the result guarantee the good faith and impartiality of its decision; and my object on this occasion is to discuss in this connection certain great agencies which through this service affect the public interests.

Mr. Chairman, it cannot be asserted that the practices and peculiar system of measures adopted by the present Administration for several years past command the approbation of a majority of the people of this country. On the contrary, the assertion may be ventured, with entire confidence in its accuracy, that the sentiment with which the greater portion of the American people regard the conduct of our public affairs is one of decided dissatisfaction and despondency. This sentiment is irrespective of the hostilities of party. Inside of the dominant party itself, among those in entire sympathy with the political principles which brought it into power—that is to say, among republicans of earnest purpose, self-abnegating patriotism, and unbiased intelligence—there is an anxious protest against the methods of administration, the tone and character of the public service, and the principles of legislation which have marked the action of the Government for many years past. It must also be admitted that this sentiment, so pronounced and so pervading, has not produced its legitimate effect upon the action of the Government, has wrought no change in the administration either as to character or policy.

This is a noteworthy fact in American politics.

In every country enjoying the privilege of representative government such a condition of public sentiment would have found its active political expression. In England, whence we have derived our parliamentary instincts and habits, in spite of the checks upon the popular will to be found in a hereditary peerage and monarchy, such a condition of public sentiment would produce a change in the administration in twenty-four hours. How then is it that in our Government, the completest representative of the popular will in theory that has ever existed, with no check or hinderance upon the prompt and free expression and application of public opinion to its machinery, depending for its vitality upon its ready and sensitive sympathy with the public conscience, such a condition of public sentiment fails to impress itself upon the administration? What is this mysterious and invisible influence which, paralyzing the free activities of the American people, prevents them from bringing the action of the Government into conformity with their will. We must believe that the moral character of our people is sound, that they enter upon the second century of their nationality with increased moral earnestness, with higher standards of public virtue and official rectitude, and with a more solemn sense of the needs of restoring their Government to the tone and purity of the earlier days of the Republic. The question then grows in urgency, what is it that prevents the sentiments of a free people from finding realization in the character and policy of its government? I desire to give a single example, which is typical of the general condition that I am trying to illustrate.

But a short time since a convention of the republican party of Massachusetts was called in Boston. The president of that convention, upon taking the chair, uttered the following significant remarks. After referring with eloquence to the proud achievements with which the party named was identified, he warned the convention "against the mistake of fighting the battles of the future upon the issues of the past."

> In the year when a glad and patriotic people swells the chorus of a nation's jubilee, it is not by lighting again the camp-fires of conflicts that are ended, it is not by kindling anew passions that ought to subside, it is not by postponing the final hour of peace and reconciliation that victories deserve to be won.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Speaking as a republican to fellow-republicans, I shall offer no apology for plain and honest words. No one who has watched the current of recent political events has failed to see a deep, wide-spread, and growing dissatisfaction with the management of national affairs.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Have you any longer a doubt as to the causes which have wrought this change in our fortunes? Surely we have not abjured our creed. Our distinctive policy and aims were never more clearly affirmed, our traditions and the names of our great leaders never more reverently held.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> No, gentlemen, the protest is not against the record or the creed, but against the methods of administration; against dominant influences and tendencies that have debased the character and tone of the public service; against a leadership that has wielded power and patronage for its own ends and not for the public good; against a partisanship narrow, intense, and violent, that has usurped the place of a broad and enlightened statesmanship and repelled accessions of recognized character and ability as an element too repugnant to be tolerated; against a code of financial morality that has corrupted the standards of official honesty and turned places of public trust into opportunities of private gain or public plunder.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> Observe with me for a moment, gentlemen, some of the forces of opinion and sentiment that indicate the drift and demand of the hour. Note first the anxious looking for relief from the long-continued depression that rests upon the material interests of the country and the feeling that some change, some new dispensation, is essential to such relief.

It will be perceived that this gentleman here arraigns the vices and practices of the national administration, its lawless usurpations, the corruption which revels in its high places, the trifling with the important interests of finance and currency, the prostitution of public office to personal gain, in language which, if uttered upon this floor by a democrat, would be regarded as the exaggerations of partisan animosity. Yet, singular as it may seem, that convention was held in the interest, exclusively, of the great political organization under which these evils, thus characterized and thus held up to the reprobation of the American people, have been fastened on our Government. And these gentlemen, the members of the convention and the president of it, and perhaps large portions of their constituents, with all their talents and moral influence, are in active co-operation with the administration so denounced in the support of a political party which has indorsed that Administration and has in return been indorsed by it.

Now what is the influence which thus sweeps vast masses of a free and virtuous people into a course of conduct in direct contravention of their most solemn convictions and their most earnest purposes.

More than a quarter of a century ago one of the greatest of the great statesmen of America, Daniel Webster, declared that the power of the Executive of our National Government had increased until it had become dangerous to liberty, and he predicted that if ever the President, who was the head of the nation, should become the mere head of a party, such party could and would, by the sheer force of the political power and patronage which it grasped, maintain that power, from term to term, and continue any policy which it devised in direct resistance to the will of a majority of the people, unless that majority became overwhelming in numbers and rose to simultaneous action by some great excitement only short of civil revolution.

Another great statesman, from another extreme of the Union, belonging to a different school of politics, and yet his peer in intellect and patriotism, Mr. Calhoun declared that the patronage of this Government at that time—and it was nearly half a century ago—in the hands of the President was too great a power for the Chief Magistrate of a free people; that it was imperial in its character, giving him absolutely to the extent of that power more control than the autocrat of Russia; and he predicted when the corps of office-holders under this Government should reach one hundred thousand the people might almost as well surrender their liberty, the contest would be too unequal; for the party thus intrenched in power could show a vast superiority over the two-thirds of a popular majority scattered over the country unorganized and acting upon different grounds of opposition.

In the predictions of these two great statesmen we see developed the powerful agency which now nullifies the sentiment of a free people and prevents the application to the machinery of this Government of that great social force in all free governments, public opinion.

An intermediate and irresponsible body known as the party has interposed itself between the people and their Government; a body unknown to the Constitution, having no part in the civil apparatus of society, yet tyrannizing with selfish and relentless energy over both people and Government, converting the agents of the one, ay its highest officers, Cabinet officers, into the willing and active instruments in the advancement of its ambitious designs and employing the passions of the other as the servants of its partisan and mischievous purposes. This centralized party organization, forming as I said no part of the Government, yet fastened upon it, intrenched in its interior departments, extending and ramifying its net-work of selfish power and dishonest influence to the remotest points and the obscurest neighborhoods of the Union, garrisoning with an army of 100,000 office-holders and a reserve of another 100,000 expectants every Department, every post-office, and every custom-house in the land, tempting men from honest industry into the dependence and servility of office-holding and office-seeking, wielded by a single will into unity of purpose and concert of action—this monstrous perversion of popular liberty is the great and insuperable obstacle to the reforms which the people demand—and which threatens to make this Government in all its departments the instrument of an irresponsible and despotic power.

But, sir, this, while it is the chief obstacle in the way of the harmonious co-operation of all the elements in favor of reform, is not the only one. There are thousands of voters too honest to flatter power, too independent not to speak their condemnation of its abuses, and brave enough to unite in the effort to overthrow their own party for the good of the country, who yet hesitate, in view of the uncertainty and responsibility attaching to the next step. They are reluctant to accept and co-operate with the democratic party as the instrument for inaugurating the system of measures which good government demands. Their objection to such a course is based on the apprehension that an improvement in the public service and reform in the methods of administration cannot be guaranteed by a mere change of party relations, by bringing the democratic party into the administration from which the other party has been expelled, with the same system at work, with the same amount of patronage, subject to the same tendencies, with the same control over its vast machinery, and addicted, as they charge, in the past periods of its power, to the same use of the patronage in its hands.

Sir, whether this apprehension be well-founded or not, there is one consideration touching this subject which should not be overlooked. It practically gives up the demand of the people for a reform in their Government. It is a virtual abandonment of the struggle. For though it may be possible or probable that the change of party may not insure this reform, it is unquestionably certain that no change at all will end all hope of reform. Sir, it is utterly impossible that the reforms desired can be effected by continuing in power the party whose debasement of the civil service of the country and corruption of its administration is the thing to be reformed. And the reason is obvious. This result arises from the fact that such vicious tendency is the predominating influence, the strongest principle of the political organization which controls the Government, while the counteracting element of purity and reform is weak and subordinate.

If this be so, if the controlling spirits of a party organization be those who represent its worst tendency, if they are the men of action and resolution, aggressive and dominant; while those who represent the other element are passive and inactive, acquiescent and submissive, it is utterly impossible that such an organization should reform itself by its own inherent and self-evolving energy; as impossible as it is for an insane mind to restore its own reason by its own will. In addition to this, the success of this party at the polls will of itself give immunity to the corrupt practices which are the subject of such universal condemnation. If the people of this country, at the ballot-box, in view of the great evils complained of, in view of the issue made against the present Administration and the bold acceptance of that issue by the Cincinnati convention, decide or indicate their feeling that they have other objects paramount to that of reform, such action is equivalent to a ratification of the existing system in all its enormity and closes all opportunity for overthrowing it. To say, then, that by a change we have no assurance of a better state of things, is the policy of despair, of abnegation. It is the surrender of liberty to power which Webster and Calhoun contemplated with such pungent apprehension.

On the other hand, if this great republican party with its imposing achievements of the past is hurled from power by the American people on account of the abuses of its civil service, on account of the practice of using the patronage of the Government for the purpose of consolidating party strength and controlling elections, such a defeat for such a cause will of itself inflict an incurable, if not a mortal, wound upon this pernicious system. It will of itself give to the successors in power a practical warning of a like fate if they pursue a like policy. These will come in holding their newly acquired power under a tenure of office, which tenure is an abstinence from the courses of their predecessors.

I do not overlook or undervalue the declarations of the republican candidate for the Presidency. I believe they are sincere. I applaud the sentiments and honor the author. But their significance must be measured, not by what he is willing to promise as a candidate, but by what he will be permitted to perform as a President. Sir, rarely in history have we seen the man who has the courage and resolution to put down the exacting tyranny of his own party, to impose upon it the impress of his own will, to infuse into it a higher life and say to the selfish and ambitious politicians who had chosen him as their tool, "Behold your master."

The character and fixed policy of the party of which he has consented to be the representative, the influences which are now combined in his support, are in direct opposition to those declarations. While these promises of the candidate are held out to the ear, the Administration which supports him itself is in every moment of its existence breaking them to the hope. While the republican candidate declares that there shall be no appointment as a reward for party service and no removals for party disservice, the Administration is eliminating from its own organization every element of reform that has by the mutations of appointment found its way there.

But there is an avenue of reform, available and effective, which a change of parties will open. One of the greatest sources of the abuse of patronage and the corruption of administration is to be found in the enormous revenues and expenditures of Government, making necessary this extravagant number of officers and agents to collect this revenue and dispense these expenditures. A system of retrenchment and reform, cutting down the revenues and expenditures to the most economical needs of the Government, would at once deprive the Executive of a large percentage of this patronage. To that policy the democratic party is not only pledged, but it has signalized its past administrations by a faithful adherence thereto, as a comparison of democratic administrations with that of the party now in power will abundantly demonstrate.

Sir, the objections which the people of this country have hitherto had to the re-ascendency of the democratic party have never grown out of its administration of the fiscal concerns of this Government. They are based upon its use of the powers of this Government for what was supposed to be the maintenance of the interests of the slave-holding sections of the country. All the lawless usurpations and misuse of powers of government charged against the democratic party have reference to those subjects and to those alone. Upon all other subjects, and in all other interests, when the democratic party surrendered the Government into the hands of their opponents, it was, in the language of one of its most eminent men, without a stain upon its honor, matchless in its splendor, incalculable in its strength, the wonder and admiration of the world. The power which the nation showed in the great civil conflict, its resources of men and material, its vast appliances, manufacturing, mechanical, and commercial, were but the rich harvesting of a period of sixty years under democratic rule out of seventy of the country's existence.

But, sir, there are other influences still more controlling which obstruct the tendencies of the people to change their administration of government. One of them is the apprehension of a large class of voters that the presidential election involves not merely questions of administrative reform but political principles of vital importance to the country. They believe that the great social and political transformations in the South which have resulted from the war of secession should be guaranteed a successful and peaceful working undisturbed by adverse influences. And they fear in the advent of the democratic party to power an influence unfavorable and dangerous to their stability and permanence. These misgivings, based upon their estimate of the past career and purposes of the democratic party, are strengthened by the fact to which they point, that the people of the South are united against the party which established the new order of things and in support of the party which opposed it, thus threatening the re-establishment of that southern sectional domination so repugnant to the sentiment and the purposes of the northern people. They therefore are not prepared, for the sake of correcting the disorders of administration, to peril the newly established condition of things by placing it in the hands of those who were originally inimical to its institution.

Without questioning the sincere acquiescence of the democratic party in the changes wrought by the constitutional amendments, they do not regard that party as sufficiently identified in its views and purposes with the objects of those amendments to guard them against the dangers of reactionary movements. They consider the supervision and intervention of the Federal authority as necessary to the exercise and protection of the rights which these amendments guarantee to the newly enfranchised race at the South, and that should the democratic party succeed, this necessary supervision will be withdrawn.

I have attempted, Mr. Chairman, to state these views fully in order that the southern people, the people whom I in part represent here, shall be fully apprised of the precise character and force of the public opinion which bears upon their present condition and their future destiny. I shall endeavor as a representative of the South to appreciate the value of these grave apprehensions. In doing so I shall speak as one who feels that he represents in part a people who even in their desolation are no unimportant element in the national life; who have accepted with manly sincerity the changes which the war has brought; who know that they have the confidence of the country to regain, but who are assured that, with a fuller and truer knowledge of their condition, their motives, and their purposes, to which it is our duty here to contribute they can claim and will receive, that restored trust and affection which can alone bind the great sections of this Republic in the unity of the spirit and in the bonds of peace—that peace which in these days of miserable discord almost passeth the understanding.

I believe the apprehension growing out of the united southern support of the democratic party is wholly unfounded and should not stand in the way of the aspirations of a great people for progress and reform in their Government. The idea that the South under any combination of parties will ever again obtain the control of this giant Republic and wield its destinies against the will of its mighty people is of all ideas the most visionary and baseless.

Sir, if such an idea has any effect whatever with the North, no such hallucination inflames the imagination of the South. The southern people are a prostrate people. They have been defeated in war, and they have been made to know and feel that the sacrifices, the humiliation, and helplessness of defeat are theirs; while the North have reaped the rich results of a victorious war, and have interfused them into the very elements of the national life and constitution. Their institutions, political and social, have been destroyed as completely as if an earthquake had overwhelmed them; their agricultural industries are disorganized; their fertile soil sterilized by an all-devouring taxation; their educational institutions languishing; their population impoverished and so inferior in numbers as to place them in every department of the Government in such a hopeless minority that, so far from ruling the interests of other sections, they are impotent to protect a single interest or right of their own.

Sir, even if such a dream were in their mind, the occasion for it is gone. The conflicts in the past grew out of questions connected with slavery, its area, and the maintenance of its constitutional right, its political privileges, and its property interests. These questions have been eliminated from the problem of American politics, and with them have gone all the passions and antagonisms to which they gave rise. Nor is there any influence or incident connected with their present condition which makes them not fully homogeneous with the whole American people; nor anything, except harsh and ungracious administration, to prevent their sympathy and identity with the interest and destiny of the American nation. She feels that she must be either part of the nation or its province; must be part of the Government or held in duress under it. With her people national patriotism is a philosophy, a moral and political necessity. To obey the laws of their country and to recognize its authority over themselves and their society as a mere matter of force and compulsion and fear, would be, as they well know, degrading to their character. As southern men, they know that to keep up the high moral standard of a high-spirited people obedience must emanate from patriotic love and not from ignoble fear. Their very sectionalism, which has hitherto tended to insulation, now identifies them with the national life and makes them cultivate that wider and broader patriotism which is coextensive with the Union. They have no aspirations not bounded by the horizon of that Union, no purpose adverse to the national instincts, no scheme that looks to the disturbance of the elective franchise as it exists in the Constitution.

In acting unitedly with the democratic party they are simply obeying the imperative law of self-preservation. It is not that they desire to reverse the policy of this Government as fixed and fortified in the fundamental law by the victorious forces of the Union, but simply because they desire to escape from the practical grievances and sufferings which the hostile and oppressive policy of the republican party brings upon them.

No, sir; the great constituency of a democratic administration, as must be seen by consulting the statistics of population, will be national, and not sectional. The President will be a citizen of the State of New York. The Vice-President will come from the mighty West. The public sentiment which will be brought to bear upon its conduct of public affairs will come from that quarter in which the physical and political power of the country so overwhelmingly preponderates, that which is the seat of population, commerce, the mechanic arts, and all scientific and material development. All the South can hope for is such an influence as moral and intellectual elevation will give her Representatives and a representative share of the benefits and responsibilities of the common Government, according to the measure of her resources and population.

Equally unfounded, I think, sir, is the apprehension that the results of the war as embodied in the Constitution are unsafe in the hands of the democratic party. Whatever may be the future administration of this country, freedom, citizenship, and suffrage are established institutions, embodied in the fundamental law, recognized in all statutes, Federal and State, enforced by courts, accepted and acted on by the people. To say that these conditions will be periled by trusting them to the party which opposed their original establishment, is to contradict the philosophy of history; and if acted upon would in every free government keep the administration of its affairs always in the hands of one single party. There has not been a single great measure in the constitutional history of England, not a single great reform which after its establishment by one party was not in the course of time, and a very short period, placed in the hands of the party originally opposed to it. Repeated instances might be given; indeed no instance to the contrary can be found. The repeal of the corn laws, the great measures for law reform, the more recent measures of parliamentary reform which brought England to the verge of revolution and came near sweeping from the English constitution the House of Lords, where the tory party had its greatest strength, have by the suffrages of the English people over and over again been placed in the hands of that tory party with perfect confidence of security. Indeed it is considered the very highest policy, after securing reforms adopted and pushed by the party of progress, to mature and consolidate them by placing them in the hands of the party of conservation and opposition. The democratic party, when these measures were proposed, stood by the inviolability of the Constitution and opposed them on that account. But this very principle of devotion to the Constitution, which forced that party into opposition, makes them now the safest custodians of those very innovations which by the vote of the people have become established parts of the Constitution itself.

Now, sir, is there anything in the relation of the democratic party, to this subject, or its creed, or its past conduct which would justify any such apprehension? Its reluctance to adopt the measure referred to has simply been a little later than that of the republican party. Its advocacy of slavery and all its incidents, its pledges to the exercise of the powers of government for its protection where it existed, was simply maintained for a short period after its republican opponents changed their policy.

Events have galloped upon this subject and both parties have been more or less the subjects of prodigious revolutions of sentiment. It was but a short time since, in 1861, that a republican House of Representatives by a large majority adopted resolutions in favor of the enforcement of the fugitive-slave provision of the Constitution and called upon the States to enact laws for remanding all fugitive slaves to their condition of servitude. It was but a few days prior to the publication of the proclamation of emancipation that the illustrious author of that historical document declared in a public letter that he would be in favor of establishing slavery if the doing so would save the Union. It was but a short time previous to the incorporation of these great amendments into our Constitution that State after State in the North by overwhelming popular majorities recorded what seemed to be an inflexible hostility to granting to this newly emancipated race any of the rights of citizenship. As late as 1865 the most distinguished war governors of the North were unequivocally opposed to the policy of incorporating the four millions of emancipated slaves into the political system of the country and investing them with citizenship and the right of voting.

I will next address myself to the objection that the accession to power of the democratic party will suspend the habitual surpervision by national authority over the conduct of affairs in the Southern States, and that such a suspension of that supervision and intervention will involve great peril to the enjoyment of the newly acquired rights of the race recently enfranchised in the South; and that the republican party, with all its misconduct and misgovernment, is still an evil necessary to be endured for another presidential term in order to secure these rights and the conditions upon which they are based.

Sir, I ask a patient, charitable consideration of the reply which it is my duty as a southern Representative to make on this subject. I think, sir, if gentlemen will accompany me into an examination of the causes which produced the present condition of things in the South, they will find that it does not grow out of any natural or necessary conflict of race or any desire to abridge the rights, political or personal, of any class of American citizens.

The first to which I would call attention is the sudden incorporation into the political system of the South of an element, not only incongruous with the political habitudes of our people and to the established conditions of their old society, but impossible except through time and education to be raised to that level of ordinary citizenship to which a century's training of freedom has elevated the white citizen of the country. The magnitude alone of this new element, 4,000,000 of people made citizens, 800,000 of them voters, made such in the twinkling of an eye, was of itself sufficient to shock and shatter the political order of any community on earth.

Mr. Chairman, but a short time since when it was proposed to admit the distant and sparsely settled Territory of New Mexico into our Federal community of States, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] who addressed the House to-day so impressively and so earnestly, objected strenuously to the measure upon the ground that that feeble population of 120,000 inhabitants, largely composed of Mexicans and Indians, because they could not read or speak the English language, was disqualified to exercise the privileges of citizenship, and should not therefore be admitted into the community of American States.

Mr. HOAR. My point was that a community made up of such people ought not to be admitted as a State; not that the individual should not be allowed to exercise the rights of citizenship.

Mr. LAMAR. Did the gentleman understand me as saying that?

Mr. HOAR. The gentleman used the phrase that such persons were disfranchised or should be disfranchised from exercising the rights of citizenship.

Mr. LAMAR. No, sir; the gentleman puts into my mouth a word which I did not use.

Mr. HOAR. I so understood the gentleman.

Mr. LAMAR. I repeat my proposition. The gentleman's ground, as I understood, was that a body of that sort composed of people speaking the Spanish language (not because they spoke that language, but because they could not read or write the English) was as a body unfit and disqualified, or rather unqualified, to discharge the duties of American citizenship, and therefore as a community should not be admitted into our Federal system.

Sir, but the other day a distinguished Senator from the Pacific coast made a most striking protest against the further immigration of Chinese into the community there, and still more recently both parties seemed to be vying with each other as to which should go furthest in preventing this admixture of the Mongolian race with ours. To illustrate the disturbing force of this measure, let us suppose that in the six New England States and the States of New York and New Jersey, whose population corresponds most nearly to that of our Southern States, in one night 4,000,000 of unaccustomed, incongruous population, such as Mexicans and Chinese, should be incorporated into the political system of those Commonwealths, and by some paramount power outside of those States should be so compacted together as to gain control of all the departments of their government, of all the offices, all the institutions, State and municipal—in a word, invested with the entire sovereignty of their body-politic, I ask you would not the repose of society be disturbed; would not all assurance of law, of healthful industry, of business arrangements and investments—would not all confidence give way to dismay and perplexity, to restless fears, wild passions, and bloody scenes? Why, sir, the more splendid their political civilization, the more complex their system of laws, and the more perfectly adjusted their social and economic forces, and the higher the moral tone of their society, the more hideous would be the ruin and the more refined the agony of the people subjected to such a catastrophe.

But the case as supposed is not as strong as the case which actually occurred in the Southern States. The 4,000,000 of people who by a scratch of the pen were made citizens and crushed into our political system, the 800,000 voters and office-holders and legislators and magistrates, had just emerged from the immemorial condition of slaves.

This fearful experiment was regarded by thinking men all over the world with the profoundest concern and misgiving. It was viewed with disfavor by a large majority even of the republican party. Its most able and its most extreme leaders looked upon it as committing society to the sway of ignorance, servility, corruption, and tyranny; and such was their sentiment until the conflict of the republican party with President Johnson and one other cause, which I shall notice before I close, seemed to sweep away every consideration of reason and justice. In 1865, the year in which there was in the South certain legislation which has been the subject of much denunciation of the South and the occasion and excuse for the oppressive and humiliating methods which have been applied to her people—I say in that year Mr. O. P. MORTON in a message to the Legislature of Indiana used the following language:

It is a fact so manifest that it should not be called in question by any that a people who are just emerging from the barbarism of slavery are not qualified to become a part of our political system and take part not only in the government of themselves and their neighbors, but of the whole United States.

So far from believing that negro suffrage is a remedy for all of our national ills, I doubt whether it is a remedy for any, and rather believe that its enforcement by Congress would be more likely to subject the negro to a merciless persecution than to confer upon him any substantial benefit.

By some it is thought that suffrage is already cheap enough in this country; and the immediate transfer of more than half a million men from the bonds of slavery, with all the ignorance and the degradation upon them which the slavery of generations upon southern fields has produced, would be a declaration to the world that the exercise of American suffrage involves no intellectual or moral qualifications, and that there is no difference between an American freeman and an American slave which may not be removed by a mere act of Congress.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask that the gentleman's time may be extended, hoping that the same courtesy may be granted when the other side shall ask to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the gentleman's time will be extended.

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMAR. Now, sir, in a speech which this gentleman made in Indiana before these people became invested with any political rights here is his language:

I believe that in the case of four million slaves just freed from bondage there should be a period of probation and preparation before they are brought to the exercise of political power. * * * What is their condition? Perhaps not one in five hundred—I might say one in a thousand—can read, and perhaps not one in five hundred is worth $5 in property of any kind.

Now, sir, notice the language of Mr. MORTON in the following sentences:

Can you conceive that a body of men, white or black, who have been in this condition, and their ancestors before them, are qualified to be immediately lifted from their present state into the full exercise of power, not only to govern themselves and their neighbors, but to take part in the government of the United States? Can they be regarded as intelligent and independent voters? The mere state of facts furnishes the answer to the question. * * * To say that such men—and it is no fault of theirs; it is simply a misfortune and a crime of this nation—to say that such men just emerged from slavery are qualified for the exercise of political power is to make the strongest pro-slavery argument I ever heard. It is to pay the highest compliment to the institution of slavery.

Then he goes on with his objections to clothing these people with the rights of citizenship and suffrage. Says he:

The right to vote carries with it the right to hold office. You cannot say that the negro has a natural right to vote, but that he must vote only for white men for office.

Then, after demonstrating that point, he makes this conclusion:

If you enfranchise all the negroes in these States you will have at least twenty negro votes to one white vote, and in the work of reconstructing the States of South Carolina, Alabama, and Florida you will have a larger proportion—perhaps thirty colored votes to one white. Now, I ask you, what is to be the effect of that? The first effect will be, you will have colored State governments.

After going into a long argument to prove this fact he reaches this conclusion:

They will have colored governors and colored members of Congress and Senators and judges of the Supreme Court, &c. Very well; and suppose they do send colored Senators and Representatives to Congress; I have no doubt you will find men in the North who will be willing to sit beside them and will not think themselves degraded by so doing. I have nothing to say to this. I am simply discussing the political effect of it. In every State where there is a colored State government, a negro for governor and a negro for supreme judge, white emigration will cease; there will be no more white emigration to any such State. You cannot find the most ardent anti-slavery man in Wayne County who will go and locate in a State that has a colored State government.

Now, sir, why ascribe to the conduct of the people of the South this exclusion of emigration when here is predicted beforehand the result of the state of things which have occurred? Here is his conclusion:

I submit, then, however clearly and strongly we may admit the natural right of the negro—I submit it to the intelligence of the people that colored State governments are not desirable; that they will bring about results that are not to be hoped for; that finally they would threaten to bring about, and I believe would result in, a war of races.

Those are his predictions in 1865. Now what is his remedy? Here it is:

If I had the power I would arrange it in this way: I would give these men a probation and preparation; I would give them time to acquire a little property and get a little education; time to learn something about the simplest forms of business and prepare themselves for the exercise of political power.

Well, sir, that looks amiable and friendly toward these men. But why put them under this system of probation? For the benefit of the race? In order to elevate them? That is not the motive which upon that occasion he declared. Here is what he says:

At the end of ten, fifteen, or twenty years—

Sir, that time has not elapsed. What would he do at the end of ten, fifteen, or twenty years?

At the end of ten, fifteen, or twenty years let them come into the enjoyment of their political rights.

Why then?

By that time these States will have been so completely filled up by emigration from the North and from Europe that the negroes will be in a permanent minority.

There is his devotion to the colored race! Keep them ten, fifteen, or twenty years out of the enjoyment of their political rights, until under the influence of immigration the negroes shall be in a permanent minority!

Mr. GARFIELD. At what time of the year was that speech delivered?

Mr. LAMAR. September 29, 1865.

Why would they be in a permanent minority?

Because the negroes have no emigration, nothing but the natural increase; while we—

He actually identifies himself with the whites of the South.

A MEMBER. He was a white-liner then.

Mr. LAMAR. He goes here further than the white-liners—

While we have emigration from all the world and natural increase besides.

He would put them under probation and keep them out of their rights, as he calls them, ten or fifteen or twenty years; by which time they will be in a permanent minority, and there will be no danger of a war of races, because they cannot elect their own people.

Thus by postponing the thing—

Said he—only to such times as the negroes are qualified to enjoy political rights, the dangers I have been considering would have fully passed away. Their influence would no longer be dangerous in the manner I have indicated, and a conflict of races would not be more likely to happen than it now is in Massachusetts. In Massachusetts the negroes have exercised political rights for twenty-five years, and yet there has been no disturbance there, no conflict of races? Why? Because the negroes have been in the minority.

I ask, sir, to append the continuous extract to my remarks and one also from Governor Andrew, of Massachusetts.

Now, sir, if this terrible prospect struck this distinguished statesman in Indiana with such alarming effect, what must have been the shock to the people of the South upon whom the thunderbolt fell? If he foresaw this terrible avalanche and warned the people of Indiana who were beyond its destructive sweep, what must have been the appalled feeling, sir, of the southern society upon whom it was to be let loose? Such was his advice in Indiana. Now suppose him to be in the South; take Mr. MORTON from his gubernatorial chair in Indiana and put him in 1865 among the people of the South, and what would have been his advice? What in point of fact was his advice to the people of the South? What was the thing the people of the South were called upon to do at that time by this distinguished gentleman from the North as well as by a distinguished governor of Massachusetts whose views I ask permission to print with my remarks? His advice was: "You must not admit these people into the political system of this Government; they are not qualified to vote; they must not take part in the government of themselves or the government of their neighbors or any participation in the Federal Government of this country; and to keep it from them you must fix upon them a system of probation which will hold them down and keep them out of your political system until they are in a permanent minority."

That being his advice, is it strange, I repeat, that the people of the South just returned from the war, all their society in ruins, full of wretchedness and disappointment, this race emancipated lying upon their plantations, neither slave nor citizen and without any indication of the national sentiment that they were to become citizens; in disorder, without law—for the slave laws were abolished and they were at that time not within the provisions of the civil code which applied to the white race—is it strange, sir, that in improvising legislation which under this terrible pressure, this appalling calamity, these bewildering changes, which have followed one upon the other with such rapidity—is it strange that that system should have some of the incidents of the old system?

Sir, is it to be arrayed against them until the end of time as an evidence on their part of a purpose to remand that people to the servitude of slavery? Measure these people by what the sentiment was at that time, and not by standards you have erected at this time. It was not a system which was well advised or well executed, for, sir, it was repealed by the Legislatures which passed it the very moment the public sentiment of the South could reach those who did pass it.

It is worthy of special attention that Governor MORTON predicts the results of this policy which have actually followed its adoption. If, sir, that policy furnishes an adequate and inevitable cause of these disorders which he beforehand said it would do, why now seek to attribute them, when they come, to a different cause? Why send investigating committees to the South to charge them upon the murderous and rebellious purposes of the whites?

This policy, so repugnant to Mr. MORTON'S sentiment and view of public interest, so suggestive of the alarming results which have actually ensued, could not possibly have been less unacceptable to the southern people. With no prejudice against the negro, they regarded this clothing of him with the awful powers of government as exposing their society to the wildest disorder. But when the policy was fastened upon them they knew that they had a more tremendous stake in its well-working than any other people; they knew that the attempt to reverse or obstruct it would be ruinous; and they set to work with an earnestness for which I know they do not get credit to adjust their ruptured relations to the new order of things, and give it a free, fair, and successful development. It might have had such a development. There were agencies at the South of which Mr. MORTON took no note and which it is difficult from his stand-point to appreciate. Underneath the ruins of our political and social order we had uninjured the old civil institutions of Anglican and American liberty, the principles of the old common law, the mother of freedom and popular government and that Anglo-Saxon race of which we hear so much, so indestructible and invincible, accustomed to the handling of these institutions and trained in the discharge of the high duties of representative government.

True, we had those 4,000,000 blacks, just emerged, as Mr. MORTON would say, from the barbarism of slavery, now free and invested with citizenship, suffrage, and eligibility to political power. But though a distinct it was not an antagonistic element. Harmony, friendship, and confidence existed between these two races. Indescribable sympathies, old memories, kindly services mutually rendered, ties of childhood, of youth, of manhood, days of labor, days of battle, nights of watching, nights of anguish, had so intertwined the lives of that generation of southern men and women, white and black, that at the close of the war there was scarce a black man, woman, or child who did not have some endearing relation with a white man, woman, or child and was not also the object of a reciprocal attachment.

Under the operation of these benign influences, these friendly relations, and the workings of local self-government, there was a well-founded hope that society at the South might be reconstituted, even though it would have to be done with the disjecta membra of the old broken-up system. There was one difficulty in the way. The conflict between the republican party and Mr. Johnson began. I do not wish to say anything against his memory; but his championship, or seeming championship, of the South seemed to me more damaging than his hostility had been.

The result of that conflict was that the Federal Government assumed, as a political necessity, the exclusive prerogative of reconstructing government in the South. The policy of reconstruction excluded the white race (on account of its suspected disloyalty) as the basis of the new order. But as the black race was considered as incompetent to manage the new structures built for them, military power, for the first time in the history of the American Government, was employed as the force to put and keep in operation the machinery of civil government. I do not propose to discuss this policy, but simply to call special attention to one feature of it. All the measures in the furtherance of that policy, the Freedman's Bureau, which cut all connection of the two races sheer asunder, whose agents and officers were made judges to try and punish offenses by the whites against the rights of freedmen, without jury or the right of judicial appeal; the act dividing the South without reference to State lines into military districts, and vesting the power of appointing all civil officers in a commanding general; the acts for restoring civil governments, were all based upon this one idea of protecting the enfranchised black race against the wrongs anticipated from the disfranchised white race; and, as a matter of fact, therefore, this reconstruction legislation as conceived and enforced actually arrayed the two races into distinct and opposing classes, and drew the color-line as distinctly and perfectly as if such race distinction had been enjoined in the Constitution. The very first principle of government your new-made citizens saw in operation was the principle of race discrimination. The very first lesson in civil government which they learned was the proscription of the white race as an object of political distrust and resentment.

The strange spectacle of these two races locally intermingled, bound together by the strongest ties of interest and affection, yet as completely separated politically as if a deep gulf had sunk between them: the passions incident to party contests in which the contestants differ not in conviction, but in race, and now charged as one of the heavy items against the South, find their authorship and origin in the legislation of the Government and the action of its agents. One moment's consideration will convince any fair mind of this. The measures devised for the sole benefit, protection, and ascendency of one race will surely command the support of that race; and if the same policy disfranchises the other race, hurls it from its proud tradition into a condition rife with all the elements of humiliation, and deprives it even of its ancient guarantees against the oppression of arbitrary power, the inevitable effect is perforce to drive that race into opposition to those measures. Thus, I repeat by a policy which drew one race to its support and drove the other into opposition, the separation of the two was produced without the voluntary agency of either and against the natural tendencies of both.

The report of every investigating committee sent to the South confirms this; for, sir, the South has been subjected to an ordeal that no other community in the world has ever been subjected to. It has been uncovered and subjected to a microscopic investigation into all the details of its society. I hold in my hand a report made by Messrs. HOAR, FRYE, and WHEELER, in which, speaking of the state of things in Louisiana, one of the causes there mentioned is the fact that the Administration party is made up by massing together almost entirely the black vote with a few whites, largely from other States. These few whites largely from other States are a class of men who came as agents of the Freedman's Bureau, thence transferred to the military department, from which they were carried over by the bayonet to the reconstructed civil government. And there they have been maintained by the power of the Federal Government ever since, gorging themselves with the spoils of that plundered people until recently their grasp upon our throats has been broken by the protecting force of an enlightened public sentiment at the North and West. It is not my purpose to describe the character of the governments which resulted from this policy. I call attention simply to two principles they embodied. Gibbon, in his history of Rome, speaking of Egypt, says that the most absurd and oppressive system of government that can be conceived of is that which subjects the natives of a country to the domination of its own slaves. John Stuart Mill, in his work on representative government, says that a government administered by rulers responsible to the governed may be a good government according to the character of the constituency which it represents; but that a government administered by rulers who are not responsible to the people of the government, but to some other community or power, is one of the worst conceivable systems of government; and, sir, these hideous structures in the South were a composite of those two vicious systems. The people there were subjected to the domination of our former slaves; we were ruled over by men not responsible to the people governed, but to the Federal Government. Governor Chamberlain and Governor Kellogg come here to make their reports, and to get their instructions, and they neither think nor care for the people of Louisiana or South Carolina. No man has ever had the temerity, since I have been here, to defend or apologize for these governments. I shall cite only republican testimonies as to their character.

Now, sir, but a short time ago a great cry was raised that the elections of Louisiana were carried by intimidation and fraud and violence and by organized murder, and a subcommittee was sent to Louisiana for the purpose of investigating and bringing before this body what had occurred in that State. Well, the committee went, and they came back with a report. It was composed of two republicans and one democrat. I see attached to the report the name of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER,] who addressed the House on the other day. His name was the first in the order of signatures to the report, and I presume he presented it. Here are his statements in relation to the condition of things in Louisiana. After speaking of one of the parishes that were taken as samples of these intimidations, taken by republicans, and selected as the worst cases that could be brought before the committee, Mr. FOSTER says:

> It so happens that that parish was taken as a sample parish of intimidation. Many witnesses from both parties were examined in reference to it; they show beyond question that there was a free, full, fair, and peaceable election and registration there. There was no evidence of any intimidation of voters practiced on the day of election, although it was asserted that intimidation of colored men before election had been effected by threats of refusal to employ them, or discharge them, if they voted the republican ticket. No evidence, either of discharge or of refusal to employ, was produced. Certain witnesses, themselves every one office-holders, testified generally to such action; but hardly any one was able to specify a single instance in which he heard of any employer so threatening or discharging any voter, or knew of any employé being so threatened or discharged. Not one single colored man throughout the entire parish was produced to testify, either to such a threat or to the execution of such a purpose, whether before or after the election.

"Upon the general subject of the state of affairs in the South, and as to whether the alleged wrongs to colored citizens for political offenses are real or were asserted without due foundation," he says:

> As a whole, they are constrained to say that the intention charged is not borne out by the facts before us. No general intimidation of republican voters was established; no colored man was produced who had been threatened or assaulted by any conservative because of political opinion, or discharged from employment, or refused employment. Of all those who testified to intimidation there was hardly any one who of his own knowledge could specify a reliable instance of such acts, and of the white men who were produced to testify generally upon such subjects, very nearly all, if not every single one, was the holder of an office. Throughout the rural districts of the State the number of white republicans is very few; it hardly extends beyond those holding office and those connected with them. No witness, we believe, succeeded in naming, in any parish, five republicans who supported the Kellogg government who were not themselves office-holders or related to office-holders or those having official employment.

But that is not all. He testifies in this report that there was intimidation, that there was fraud, that there was murder committed for the purpose of carrying the elections; not that it was practiced by democrats on republicans, but by republicans upon democrats; that the black men who wished to vote the democratic ticket were the subjects of intimidation. I read further:

On the other hand, it was in evidence that blacks who sought to act with the conservative party were on their part sometimes exposed to enmity and abuse. In the interior, one colored man was shot for making a conservative speech; and in New Orleans, it appeared from the testimony that colored men who sought to cooperate with the conservatives were subject to so much abuse from the police, and otherwise, that an association of lawyers volunteered to protect them, but with little effect.

That was not the only kind of intimidation, but that was an intimidation which of all others does more to keep down the public spirit of a people and to strike down the spirit of liberty, the spirit of independence in which our institutions were founded. I call special attention to it, for it is well for the country to know the appliances that have been, and may be again, used to bring about a foredetermined result.

I read again:

On the other hand, applications to the United States commissioners in the various parishes, not only for alleged crimes, but because of alleged threats of discharge, non-employment, or other interference with political preference, were frequent. Upon these affidavits warrants were often issued, and white citizens arrested and bound over for trial. In many localities the Federal troops were detained for service under the marshals and assistant marshals, and not only made large arrests immediately before the election, but the reports that they were coming to particular neighborhoods about the election time for the purpose of such arrests served, as the conservatives claimed, to intimidate, and sometimes even to produce a stampede among the white voters.

I want the House to recollect that this is the testimony and report of a committee of whom a majority were republicans.

"That served to intimidate and produce a stampede among the white voters." Sir, I have seen two hundred good, plain men mount their horses and ride out of town without depositing their votes for fear of just such persecution.

But that is not all; he goes on to tell that there was a perfect despotism over that people, eating up all their substance by exorbitant taxation, taxing their real estate in the city of New Orleans up to a point beyond the rents and in some of the rural districts 8 per cent., and he quotes approvingly as an indication of the government there that the political power vested in the governor of the State was such as is scarcely exercised by any sovereign in the world. But the gentleman from Ohio in his last speech said that in this report he told some truths that bore heavily upon his own party. I was astounded at that declaration.

What! Does it bear heavily upon his party to report that a people charged with fraud, intimidation, and murder are not guilty? Does it bear hardly upon the republican party to prove that there is no such state of lawlessness and intimidation among a people who are writhing under all the oppression which corruption can invent and tyranny inflict? Is it a condition of republican success that the country should be told that there is murder and intimidation, and that if they are not there the truth which states the opposite bears hardly upon his party? Mighty God! Is it true that that is the nutriment upon which the party must live?

Sir, it did strike his party with amazement at the time, and another subcommittee, a thing which I never knew of before, went down to revise and review his action. They came back and reported some things which the gentleman did not report, some things which did not bear so heavily upon the party. It is due to them to say that upon the searching investigation which they made they came back and said that there was an organized system of violence and murder there for the purpose of intimidating voters and carrying elections and for the purpose of remanding these blacks into a condition something akin to their former servitude.

But the gentleman from Ohio would not yield to that; that would not suit him. He made another counter-report, and said:

We cannot agree to the report made to the committee by Messrs. HOAR, FRYE, and WHEELER. All laws inimical to the colored people of Louisiana, referred to in their report, have been repealed for years.

And he goes on to state that—

In the absence of any direct evidence that the late election was not free and fair, the assumption by the minority that enough colored voters were therefore prevented from voting to change the result of the election throughout the State is an assumption so violent as not to be received.

But even this report of Messrs. HOAR, FRYE, and WHEELER contains admissions almost as startling as the statements of Mr. FOSTER, and shows a state of things which, without resorting to any theory of bloody conspiracies, would produce disorders and violence among the most virtuous people on earth.

In the State of Louisiana there is a governor in office who owes his seat to the interference of the national power, which has recognized his title to his office, not by reason of any legal ascertainment of the fact by legal process, but has based its interference upon the illegal order of a judge.

Here is what Mr. HOAR says about it. He says, in the State of Louisiana there is a governor in office. Remember that this is the governor who has the power of a monarch, according to the testimony of a Federal judge now there.

How did it recognize it? If the governor owes his place to the interference of the national authority and that authority has not ascertained it by legal process, how did the national authority ascertain it and upon what did it base its interference? Mr. HOAR says it based its action "solely on the illegal order of a judge." The judge who issued that illegal order, upon which the national authority based its action and interference, was driven to resignation by the fear of impending impeachment. But there sits that governor, who was put there by the national authority upon that illegal order, ruling that people with a scepter mightier than that of a monarch.

So much for the executive. How about the Legislature? Says Mr. HOAR:

In the same State there is a Legislature, one branch of which derives its authority partly from the same order.

What! The Legislature gets its authority from the same illegal order? Yes, sir; one branch of it does from the same illegal order. How about the other branch. Let Mr. HOAR answer:

The other being organized by a majority who have been established in power by another interference of the national Government, and which majority derives its title, not from any legal ascertainment of the fact, but from the certificate of a returning board which has misconceived and exceeded its legal authority.

Therefore, at the time that report was made every branch of that government exhibited to the American people the spectacle of an executive officer put there by national authority based upon an illegal order, one branch of the Legislature owing its authority to the same illegal order and the other branch having a majority based upon another illegal order. Illegality imbedded in illegality, and upon the whole a colossal despotism crushing down the rights and interests of that people.

Mr. HOAR. Will the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] allow me to ask him if he thinks he has fairly stated the conclusions of my report upon the point to which he has referred?

Mr. LAMAR. Upon that particular point?

Mr. HOAR. Yes.

Mr. LAMAR. I think I have.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think so.

Mr. LAMAR. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOAR. The report which the gentleman does me the honor to quote from states that, in the opinion of those who signed it, Governor Kellogg had a majority of the legal votes of the people of Louisiana; but that any ascertainment of the legal result by legal evidence was prevented by the frauds of his political opponents, who had so manipulated and treated the registrations and the returns—had finally carried them off, I think—as to deprive them of any legal authority whatever. Thereupon the judge of the United States court, misconceiving or usurping his power—I do not undertake to say which—ordered Mr. Kellogg to be put in office, and on that order the United States executive officer based his interference.

Now, the committee found, first, that Governor Kellogg was the lawfully-chosen governor of the State of Louisiana by all the evidence they could get at; second, that his political opponents had by fraud destroyed the returns or their legal value—that they had done wrong to that extent; third, that the judge was unjustified in his order and the executive was without justification in relying on that order as authority for interfering. That is the statement of the report. I agree that the gentleman from Mississippi has the right to cite my report as evidence of gross misconduct on the part of republican officials in the State of Louisiana. I do not agree that he ought to cite my remarks as admissions against my own party unless he quotes the conclusions with which they were necessarily connected.

Mr. LAMAR. I think I can appeal to the recollection of all present that I said the gentleman in his report did say that there was intimidation and fraud and murder, and that the elections were carried by those appliances.

Mr. HOAR. I also said that in my judgment Governor Kellogg was lawfully elected.

Mr. LAMAR. I have not time to wrestle with the gentleman on that point; but I think if he will examine the report he will find its statement to be that the result could not be ascertained, but that in his opinion Mr. Kellogg received the majority of votes. Now I think I have the right to receive the gentleman's admissions and reject his conclusions, especially when I give him the opportunity, which I am always glad to do, to interpolate into my remarks any explanation he may please.

Mr. HOAR. The gentleman is perfectly at liberty to receive my admissions and reject my conclusions. I think, however, that he should not state the admissions without the other.

Mr. LAMAR. I will allow the gentleman always to state for himself his own propositions and conclusions, and I have yielded the floor to him for that purpose in order that they might not be unfairly stated in passing through the medium of my brain.

Mr. HOAR. I thank the gentleman for the very great courtesy with which he has allowed me to do so; and I say to him that I made this interruption of his eloquent and interesting speech with very great reluctance.

Mr. LAMAR. Now, sir, as to the character of the government there we have the gentleman's acknowledgment; and I reiterate that it is not I, but the gentleman, who calls upon the American people to note the fact.

The American people are now brought face to face with this condition of things.

Then he goes on to show that the governor there owes his authority to the interference of the national power, not by the ascertainment of legal process, but by an illegal order of a judge, and that both the other departments of the government rest upon the same illegal basis. As to his opinion that the election was carried one way or the other, that is a mere matter of opinion; but when he himself proclaims voluntarily that the whole superstructure of executive and legislative power in that State is based upon the interference of the national authority, and that interference resting upon illegal orders, I think it is doing no injustice to him, nor to his conclusions, to hold that statement up before an astonished people.

The gentleman's report presents the state of things in Louisiana very graphically, and with telling effect against that people I admit. I do not think he rightly conceived their condition. He staid but a short time, and failed to note some of the most important elements of society there. He has concentrated his attention upon two classes: One the slaveholders, who are not the largest part of the white population, and the other the blacks. He overlooks that teeming population of non-slaveholders, the super-best race of men in the world. There is no order of men superior to those who were the non-slaveholders of the South. They were freemen and freeholders; free-soilers in the true sense of the term; for they worked their own land and reared families economical, independent, and virtuous; and they constitute one of the strongest forces of southern society at this time; yet the gentleman takes no note of them in his analysis of southern society.

What does the gentleman say about the character of this government that thus rests upon illegal intervention?

One fact is that there has been great maladministration by republican officials; there has been much dishonesty, much corruption in State and local administration in Louisiana. For this the republican party, especially under Warmoth's rule, are largely responsible, although in numerous instances their opponents have been equally to blame.

Again he says:

We do not overlook the causes which tend to excite deep feelings of discontent in the white native population of Louisiana. There has been great maladministration; public funds have been wasted, public credit impaired, and taxation is heavy.

What are these admissions? Illegal governments based upon interference of the national authority; maladministration, dishonesty, corruption, waste of public funds—which means embezzlement and the misappropriation of public money—loss of public credit. This is the despotism under which everything that is precious and beautiful and lovely in that State is withering and dying.

I have other testimony. The President of the United States in his last annual message said not a word upon the subject of the disorders of the South; for, sir, this cry of disorder, intimidation, and violence always comes up in this Hall and in this Federal metropolis just before an election when it is to be carried or just after an election when it is to be set aside. In the interim everything is quiet and orderly. But the President in his annual message before the last, speaking of these people in the South where these disorders occur, uses the following language:

I sympathize with their prostrate condition and would do all in my power to relieve them, acknowledging that in some instances they have had most trying governments to live under and very oppressive ones in the way of taxation for nominal improvements, not giving benefits equal to the hardships imposed.

Sir, take the features of that statement. What are they? Oppressive governments, burdens of taxation, and prostrate people. What greater woe can there be than this? What more accursed fate can befall a people than such a government as Mr. HOAR describes, illegal in its every department, marked by maladministration, and reeking with dishonesty and corruption; or, as Mr. FOSTER describes it, an infamous despotism, consuming all the resources of a people? Where, I repeat, on earth or in what age of the world have you not had violence and turbulence where a people are prostrated by the burdens of oppressive government, and tortured and impoverished by taxation? Where have you ever seen orderly, quiet, and peaceable citizens whose governors are lawless felons, whose ministerial officers are forgers and thieves, and their magistrates scoundrels?

And, sir, when this prostrate people writhing in their agony turn over and jostle these rickety establishments that would fall down of their own rot if let alone, when, as is almost inevitable, disorders occur, the national authority is called upon, the Federal Executive is invoked—for what? To protect the prostrate people against these illegal, dishonest, corrupt, and oppressive governments? No; but to protect and maintain these governments and to hold the people down in quiet submission to them! What a policy! This great Federal Government powerless for the protection of the people against oppressions of local government, but omnipotent to maintain those governments and enforce their oppressions.

Now, sir, I have read all this testimony with reluctanec. My purpose has been to show that ample cause exists for these troubles in the South without attributing them to a spirit of cruel vindictiveness, or wild, restless, unlawful ambition on the part of southern whites. I have appealed to this evidence of earnest, leading republicans that the sudden enfranchisement of 800,000 slaves threatened the very evils which have come upon us. I do not arraign your policy. Its attempted reversal now would lead to a shock and ruin even worse than that which has resulted from its establishment. All we ask in common justice to the South is that you will reflect and act upon the fact that the governments you contrived have by your own testimony proved to you and to the world their utter incompetence to solve peaceably and prosperously a problem the difficulty of which we do not deny. When you point me to acts of violence I acknowledge and deplore them. But I ask you, who has governed the States where this violence occurs for the last ten years? Have we? Who have taxed us, controlled our Legislatures, filled our courts, received the patronage of the Federal Government, ruled over us at home and represented us here?

Sir, you cannot by Federal and military intervention preserve those governments without trampling out the liberties of whole Commonwealths, because those governments are in defiance of that highest and most sacred of all constitutions, the law of nature. God had so identified the interests of these two races by the necessities of climate and labor and old associations that time would soon have re-adjusted their new relations. It is not yet too late for such an adjustment. You have given the black race the most delicate, the most dangerous, as well as the most sacred of all privileges. Let that privilege be maintained inviolably. But give him real freedom, and do not make him the Janizary of party tyranny. Allow that race to learn what you have learned in New England and carried with you into that new empire of the West which your energy has created, that moral worth, intelligence and industry and wealth are the true foundations of a people's happiness and liberty, no matter what their color. Let it no longer rely upon Federal bayonets. They inspire a contempt for law and disqualify for self-government.

Sir, this race problem is capable of solution. Two English statesmen such as Lord Derby and Earl Russell, or Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Disraeli, could agree upon a basis of settlement in three days; and we could do the same here but for the interposition of the passions of party in the contest for the power and emoluments of government. It could be settled in this District and throughout the South without abridging universal suffrage or subjecting either race to the control of the other. Take the question out of national politics and it can be settled on a basis which would consolidate all the rights of the black man, make him free and equal with every citizen before the law, protected in the fruits of his labor, safe in his person, happy in his household, secure in the enjoyment of whatever he can in fair competition achieve, whether it be of fortune or fame, and thus secure to him a higher and better life than he now leads as the misguided and deluded constituency of dishonest office-holders.

I have not intended to intimate that the capacity of the black race for freedom and the duties of citizenship should be determined by the considerations which I presented. The freedom of this race, its citizenship, have not had a fair opportunity for favorable development at the South. Controlled through the authority of the Government by the worst men as they have been, it would be unjust to them to form any estimate of their capacity to meet the demands of their high position by the events of the last ten years.

Sir, we know that one great cause of the jealousy with which the southern people are regarded is the fact that they stand between the ambition of a party and the glittering prizes of honor and emoluments and patronage which the control of the Government for another four years will give. I believe, sir, if they could do so consistently with their constitutional obligations, our people would willingly stand aloof and let the northern people settle the question of President for themselves, upon the condition that there shall be no further intervention in their local affairs. But, sir, they cannot abnegate their rights and duties as American citizens and impose on themselves a sullen and inactive incivicism. They must go forward and keep abreast with American progress and American destiny, and take their share of the responsibility in the settlement of the questions in which all parts of the country are alike interested.

But it is asked why we are united in support of the democratic party. A celebrated author in his work on political ethics says that in the history of all free countries there is no instance of a people being unanimous in sentiment and action, unless they were made so by the imminence of some great and common peril or by the inspiration of some enthusiastic sentiment.

The people of the South are not moved by the latter. Even if the events of the war and the sufferings since the war had not, as they have done, crushed out all their party attachments, nearly one-half the people of the South have no attachment to the democratic party, and in acting with it for the time being, they only obey, as I said before, the imperious law of self-preservation.

The motive which prompts their co-operation is not the expectation of filling cabinets and directing policies, but simply to get an administration which will not be unfriendly to them, an administration which in place of the appliances of force, subjugation, and domination, will give them amnesty, restoration to the privileges of American citizenship; which will accord to their States the same equal rights with other States in this Union; equality of consideration, equality of authority and jurisdiction over their own affairs; equality, sir, in exemption from the domination of their elections by the bayonet and by soldiers as the irresistible instruments of a revolting local despotism. Give them that, give them local self-government, and you will then see at last what will be the dawn of prosperity in all the industries and enterprises of the North; you will see, sir, a true southern renaissance, a real grand reconstruction of the South in all the elements of social order, strength, justice, and equality of all her people. Rising from her confusion and distress, rejoicing in her newly-recovered liberty, prosperous, free, great, her sons and daughters of every race happy in her smile, she will greet your benignant Republic in the words of the inspired poet—

Thy gentleness hath made me great.

[Applause.]

APPENDIX.

[Extracts from the speech of Hon. O. P. MORTON, at Richmond, Indiana, September 29, 1865.]

NEGROES UNFIT TO VOTE.

I believe that in the case of 4,000,000 slaves just freed from bondage there should be a period of probation and preparation before they are brought to the exercise of political power. * * * What is their condition? Perhaps not one in five hundred—I might say one in a thousand—can read, and perhaps not one in five hundred is worth $5 in property of any kind. * * * Can you conceive that a body of men, white or black, who have been in this condition, and their ancestors before them, are qualified to be immediately lifted from their present state into the full exercise of political power, not only to govern themselves and their neighbors, but to take part in the Government of the United States? Can they be regarded as intelligent and independent voters? The mere state of facts furnishes the answer to the question. * * * To say that such men—and it is no fault of theirs; it is simply a misfortune and a crime of this nation—to say that such men, just emerged from slavery, are qualified for the exercise of political power is to make the strongest pro-slavery argument I ever heard. It is to pay the highest compliment to the institution of slavery.

THE RIGHT TO VOTE INVOLVES THE RIGHT TO HOLD OFFICE.

The right to vote carries with it the right to hold office. You cannot say that the negro has a natural right to vote, but that he must vote only for white men for office. The right to vote carries with it the right to be voted for. When that right is conferred, you can make no discrimination, no distinction against the right to hold office; and the right to vote in a State carries with it the right to vote for President and members of Congress and for all Federal officers. The right of suffrage being conferred in South Carolina, for State purposes, under our Constitution, as I have before pointed out, carries with it the right to vote for President and Vice-President and members of Congress.

COLORED STATE GOVERNMENTS THE RESULT.

If you enfranchise all the negroes in these States you will have at least twenty negro votes to one white vote, and in the work of reconstructing the States of South Carolina, Alabama, and Florida you will have a larger proportion—perhaps thirty colored votes to one white. Now, I ask you, what is to be the effect of that? The first effect will be, you will have colored State governments. Under such a condition of things the negro would no more vote for a white man than you up here would vote for a black man. They would no more elect a white man than you would elect a black man. Human nature is the same, whether in a white or colored skin. There could be nothing that would confer more pleasure upon a man of that race, of course, than the elevation to political power of a man of his own race and color. Having secured power, they would retort upon us that which we have so steadily practiced upon them. If you give them the vote they will elect men of their own color, and we would have no right to blame them. We would rather think badly of them if they did not. I would ask you if the negroes of Hayti, or any other place where they are in a majority, have ever elected a white man to office? Under Mr. Sumner's plan you will give them an overwhelming majority in every one of these States, and you will give them the political power of the South.

That they will exercise this power by electing men of their own color is absolutely certain. Believing that human nature is the same under different complexions, that the negroes are not differently constituted from ourselves, and that they have like passions with us, we cannot doubt how this power will be exercised. Some will say that it is all right; if they can find colored men qualified, all right. There are enough colored men of education in the North to go to the South and fill every office there, and I have no doubt they stand ready to do it. Here we deny to them almost every right except that of mere personal liberty; and it is so in Illinois and many other northern States; and when you present to them the prospect of holding the highest offices in the gift of the people of the Southern States, rest assured they will embrace it. They will have colored governors and colored Members of Congress, and Senators, and judges of the Supreme Court, &c. Very well; and suppose they do send colored Senators and Representatives to Congress, I have no doubt you will find men in the North who will be willing to sit beside them and will not think themselves degraded by doing so. I have nothing to say to this. I am simply discussing the political effect of it. In every State where there is a colored State government, a negro for governor, and a negro for supreme judge, white emigration will cease; there will be no more white emigration to any such State. You cannot find the most ardent anti-slavery man in Wayne County who will go and locate in a State that has a colored State government. You will absolutely shut off at once and effectually all emigration from the northern States, and from Europe, too, whenever that event shall happen. Thus they will remain permanently colored States in the South. The white men who are now there would remove from them; they would not remain under such dominion.

EFFECT OF THEIR ENFRANCHISEMENT; A NEGRO BALANCE OF POWER.

Very well, say some; that is all very well if we can get the negroes to go there. But let me say that the colored States would be a balance of power in this country. I ask, is it desirable to have a colored State government? I say it is not; it is not for many reasons. One reason is that such States would perpetually constitute a balance of power. They would be held bound by that stringent tie that ever held men together: the tie of color and race, the tie of a down-trodden and despised race. As 300,000 slaveholders by a common tie were able to govern this nation for a long time, so 4,000,000 people, bound together by a much stronger tie, despised by the whole world as they have been, would constantly vote and act together; and their united vote would constitute a balance of power that might control the government of this nation.

I submit, then, however clearly and strongly we may admit the natural right of the negro—I submit it to the intelligence of the people that colored State governments are not desirable; that they will bring about results that are not to be hoped for; that finally they would threaten to bring about and, I believe, would result in a war of races.

THE SOLUTION OF THE DIFFICULTY.

Now the question turns up, how can this be avoided? If I had the power I would arrange it in this way: I would give these men a period of probation and preparation; I would give them time to acquire a little property and get a little education; time to learn something about the simplest forms of business and prepare themselves for the exercise of political power. At the end of ten, fifteen, or twenty years, let them come into the enjoyment of their political rights. By that time these States will have been so completely filled up by emigration from the North and from Europe that the negroes will be in a permanent minority. Why? Because the negroes have no emigration, nothing but the natural increase, while we have emigration from all the world and natural increase besides. Thus, by postponing the thing only to such times as the negroes are qualified to enjoy political rights, the dangers I have been considering would have fully passed away, their influence would no longer be dangerous in the manner I have indicated, and a conflict of races would not be more likely to happen than it now is in Massachusetts. In Massachusetts the negroes have exercised political rights for twenty-five years, and yet there has been no disturbance there, no conflict of races. Why? Because the negroes have been in the minority.

[Extract from Governor Andrew's valedictory address.]

Governor Andrew, of Massachusetts, in his valedictory address delivered on 5th January, 1866, speaking of the basis of reconstruction in the South, uses the following language:

"It may be asked: Why not demand the suffrage for colored men, in season for their vote in the business of re-organization? My answer is, I assume that the colored men are in favor of those measures which the Union needs to have adopted. But it would be idle to re-organize those States by the colored vote. If the popular vote of the white race is not to be had in favor of the guarantees justly required, then I am in favor of holding on just where we now are. I am not in favor of a surrender of the present rights of the Union to a struggle between a white minority, aided by the freedmen on the one hand, against a majority of the white race on the other. I would not consent, having rescued those States by arms from secession and rebellion, to turn them over to anarchy and chaos."

In urging the necessity of securing the participation of the whites, under a general amnesty, in the control of the new governments, he says:

"I only know that we ought to demand, and to secure, the co-operation of the strongest and ablest minds and natural leaders of opinion in the South. If we cannot gain their support of the just measures needful for the work of safe re-organization, re-organization will be delusive and full of danger.

"Why not try them? They are the most hopeful subjects to deal with, in the very nature of the case. They have the brain and the experience and the education to enable them to understand the exigences of the present situation. They have the courage, as well as the skill, to lead the people in the direction their judgments point, in spite of their own and the popular prejudice. Weaker men, those of less experience, who have less hold on the public confidence, are comparatively powerless. Is it consistent with reason and our knowledge of human nature to believe the masses of southern men able to face about, to turn their backs on those they have trusted and followed, and to adopt the lead of those who have no magnetic hold on their hearts or minds? Re-organization in the South demands the aid of men of great moral courage, who can renounce their own past opinions and do it boldly; who can comprehend what the work is and what are the logical consequences of the new situation; men who have interests urging them to rise to the height of the occasion. They are not the strong men, from whom weak, vacillating counsels come; nor are they the great men, from whom come counsels born of prejudices and follies, having their root in an institution they know to be dead and buried beyond the hope of resurrection."

Mr. GARFIELD obtained the floor, but yielded to

Mr. COOK, who moved the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. CLYMER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly a bill (H. R. No. 2592) to transfer the conduct of Indian affairs from the Interior Department to the War Department, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. GOODE. I rise to a question of privilege. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which contains the proceedings of last Saturday represents me as having applied for and obtained an indefinite leave of absence. That is a mistake, as I did not apply for or obtain any such leave of absence. It would be an immaterial matter but for reference made to it for party puposes in certain public prints of the country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The correction will be made in the Journal and in the RECORD.

OSAGE LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. GOODIN. I ask by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 3625) providing for the sale of Osage ceded lands in Kansas to actual settlers, returned from the Senate with amendments, in order that they may be non-concurred in and a committee of conference requested.

There was no objection.

Mr. CONGER. I do not object to the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas, if it is agreed that the amendments shall be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GOODIN. The amendments of the Senate are all printed in this morning's RECORD, where they can be seen. I move that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GOODIN. I now move that a committee of conference be requested on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as managers of said conference on the part of the House, Mr. GOODIN, Mr. LANE, and Mr. MCDILL.

Mr. COX. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. JOHN REILLY. I move the following as an amendment to the motion to adjourn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That when the House adjourns it be until eleven o'clock a. m. to-morrow, and that thereafter and until the close of the present session that hour be the regular hour of meeting; and that the hour between eleven and twelve be assigned first to the consideration of the pension bills on the Calendar, and next to receiving reports of committees, without considering the same.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That involves a change of the rules, and cannot be entertained.

Mr. COX's motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin, indefinitely.

And then (at five o'clock and twenty-two minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. CUTLER: Remonstrance of citizens of New Jersey against the licensing of prostitution in the District of Columbia by authority of Congress, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. THORNBURGH: The petition of Benjamin Baker, late private Company C, Ninth Tennessee Cavalry, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 3, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 2692) to relinquish the title of the United States to certain property in the city and county of San Francisco, California, was read twice by its title.

Mr. SARGENT. The Committee on Naval Affairs, I believe, has a Senate bill relating to the same matter under consideration, and I move that this bill take that reference.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 24th ultimo, a statement of the aggregate number of civil officers employed in that Department from 1859 to 1875; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MERRIMON. I present the memorial of W. W. Corcoran, M. W. Galt & Brothers, and many other citizens, business men, residing on Pennsylvania avenue, remonstrating against the passage of the amendment offered by Senator DORSEY, July 31, 1876, extending the time for repaving Pennsylvania avenue. The memorialists say that they have already suffered great damage by the present condition of the Avenue, and they are anxious that the paving shall be completed as soon as possible. I move the reference of this memorial to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that by unanimous consent it be agreed that House bill No. 58 be taken up, and then I will give way until after reports are made.

Mr. DAVIS. What is the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the bounty bill.

Mr. SARGENT. Of course it is impossible to come to any conclusion on that bill in the morning hour.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not desire to interfere with morning business. I merely ask that the bill be taken up and then I will yield to morning business.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator wishes to have the bill considered in the morning hour, I understand?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SARGENT. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California objects to the proposition of the Senator from Illinois. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. INGALLS. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of Daniel Spalding, deceased, have instructed me to report it back and ask to be discharged from its further consideration. It appears from an inspection of the papers that the claim is for contingent expenses, for clothing and equipments furnished by the ancestors of the petitioners during the war of 1812, and the committee ask that the papers may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 923) authorizing the appointment of Acting Passed Assistant Surgeon Francis V. Greene as surgeon and of Acting Passed Assistant Surgeon Joseph J. Sowerby as assistant surgeon in the Navy, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 354) to give an American register to the steamboat Isabel, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 22) allowing the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to carry the mails in their new iron steamships, to report it with an amendment. I desire the immediate consideration of the joint resolution, as there is necessity for its speedy passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be reported, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is very dangerous to act upon bills of this importance the very moment they are reported; but the Senator from Nevada says, and of course he is correct, that it is quite important that the action should be speedy. I have no objection to the bill being considered, subject to objection at any stage, so that if any difficulty shall arise it may go over and we may look at it. There are one or two amendments I want to suggest.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the Postmaster-General to accept from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, for service in transporting the mails of the United States between San Francisco and China, the steamships City of Sidney, City of New York, and City of San Francisco, the same being new iron American-built ships of more than three thousand tons register; these iron steamships to be substituted for the wooden side-wheel steamers now doing service under the act of Congress of February 7, 1865, they having been constructed in full with the requirements of said act; but nothing contained in the joint resolution shall be construed as an indorsement of any claim now pending, or as a basis of any claim which may hereafter be preferred against the United States by the steamship company, growing out of any existing law or contract whatever, excepting the law of February 7, 1865.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with an amendment in line 17, to strike out the word "existing" before "law;" so as to read:

That nothing herein contained shall be construed as an indorsement of any claim now pending, or as a basis of any claim which may hereafter be preferred against the United States by said steamship company, growing out of any law or contract whatever, excepting the law of February 7, 1865, above referred to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have one or two amendments to suggest, and I have no doubt they will be entirely agreeable to the Senator from Nevada. In line 10 I move to strike out the word "the" and insert "any" after "for;" and to insert "lawfully" after "now" in that line; so as to read:

Said iron steamships to be substituted for any wooden side-wheel steamers now lawfully doing service under the act of Congress of February 6, 1865.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now move in lines 12 and 13 to strike out all after the words "eighteen hundred and sixty-five;" that is to strike out these words:

The same having been constructed in full with the requirements of said act.

That is a matter of fact that is quite unnecessary and it is not usual to put such a statement in a law, I believe.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In line 14 I move to strike out the words "an indorsement of" and insert "creating, reviving, or recognizing;" so that it will read:

That nothing herein contained shall be construed as creating, reviving, or recognizing any claim now pending, or as a basis of any claim, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In line 18 I move to strike out the word "excepting" and insert "except such as may lawfully exist under;" so as to read:

Growing out of any existing law or contract whatever, except such as may lawfully exist under the law of February 7, 1865, above referred to.

It is the same idea the Senator had who draughted the joint resolution, and states it a little more fully.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill (S. No. 1021) allowing the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to carry the mails in their new iron steamships."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WINDOM (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1022) to provide for the taking of testimony to be used in the General Land Office; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MAXEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1023) for the relief of George H. Giddings, of Texas; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1024) for the relief of Henry M. Meade, late paymaster in the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1025) to authorize the Commissioner of Pensions to waive irregularities in declarations for pensions in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1026) for the issue of silver coin and to make a silver dollar a legal tender; which was read twice by its title, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. DORSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 23) in relation to the Hot Springs reservation, in the State of Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DORSEY. I move that the joint resolution (S. R. No. 21) defining the meaning and intent of the act of June 11, 1870, entitled "An act in relation to the Hot Springs reservation in Arkansas," which was introduced by me the day before yesterday, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

COLLECTORS OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 2922) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to make allowances for compensation to collectors of internal revenue who went out of office prior to February 8, 1875, upon final settlements of their accounts was indefinitely postponed on the report of the Committee on Finance. Upon official information received by me this morning, I ask that this vote be reconsidered and the bill recommitted to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

REPORT OF SOUTHERN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. WRIGHT. I rise to offer a resolution, and before I present it I wish to state one fact. It appears that by the act of March 3, 1875, provision was made for printing fifty copies of the summary report of the southern claims commission, that is, the list of claims that were rejected, twenty-five copies thereof for the use of the Senate and twenty-five for the use of the House. It seems that no provision was made in that act for giving to the southern claims commissioners themselves any copies of this report. My attention has been called to it by the commissioners. They think it but right and proper that at least five copies shall be given to them of the twenty-five, and I suppose there will be no objection on the part of the Senate to giving them these five copies, as they seem to be quite important for their use. At their request I have draughted the following resolution:

Resolved, That whenever the twenty-five printed and bound copies of the summary report of the commissioners of claims, ordered for the use of the Senate, are received by the Secretary of the Senate from the Public Printer, he shall deliver five copies thereof to the said Commissioners for their official use.

I trust there will be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to move to take up the motion to reconsider Senate bill No. 917, relating to the patent of Erastus T. Bussell, which I made yesterday; but if there are any further resolutions, of course they are entitled to precedence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa has not yielded the floor yet.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I supposed when a bill or a resolution was passed the floor was empty for the moment.

Mr. WRIGHT. I shall not interfere with the Senator from Vermont. What I wished to propose to do was to take up House bill No. 3168, relating to partition of real estate in the District of Columbia. That bill the Senator from Vermont is familiar with; but I do not wish to interfere with him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator from Iowa would let me take up the motion to reconsider.

Mr. DAVIS. I have a resolution to offer. There will be no objection to it, I know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That being morning business takes precedence.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF ALLEN T. CAPERTON.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate pay from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon the approval of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses, the expenditures made by the Sergeant-at-Arms on account of the death and burial of Hon. ALLEN T. CAPERTON, late a Senator from the State of West Virginia.

HAMBURGH RIOTS.

Mr. MORTON. I ask that the resolution I offered yesterday to print the President's message relating to troubles in South Carolina be referred to the Committee on Printing. I thought it was until just now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred, if there be no objection.

SIGNAL SERVICE CORPS.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to call up and pass if possible during the morning hour a bill of general interest to which I do not think there can be any objection. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 731, to limit and fix the Signal Service.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like, before the bill is taken up, to know whether this service is required for the Signal Corps?

Mr. SPENCER. The bill has been very strongly recommended by the President of the United States, by the present and the late Secretary of War, and by the Signal Service itself, and also it is very strongly recommended by General Sherman, the General of the Army. The service has been emasculated by the sundry civil bill, and there will be no Signal Service unless this bill is passed. It is necessary in order to place the service on a permanent footing. There is a long report accompanying the bill which can be read, if the Senator desires.

Mr. MORTON. I think this matter will give rise to some debate. I should be glad to have the question of reconsideration proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] disposed of.

Mr. SPENCER. This is a matter of general consequence to the country, and the matter that the Senator from Indiana speaks of is a local bill, entirely personal.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let the bill go over.

Mr. LOGAN. If there is objection, of course I do not desire to say anything.

Mr. SPENCER. My motion is pending.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely desire to say, in addition to what the Senator from Alabama has stated, that this matter of organizing the Signal Service is a very important consideration. It does not affect the service so far as the Army is concerned, except that it puts it upon a basis where these officers cannot be taken away at the will and pleasure of anybody and assigned to other places after they have learned the duties of their office. The object of the bill is to establish the service upon a permanent basis, and it is a very important matter, I think, to the whole country. It does not change or affect the amount of money to be expended under the appropriation bill for this service. There are some amendments proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs, which I suggested myself, in reference to the pay of these officers, cutting them down to infantry pay instead of cavalry pay, but so far as expenses are concerned the bill does not affect the general cost of the service.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. McCREERY. The consideration of this bill having been objected to, I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question has not yet been submitted to the Senate. The Senator from Alabama moves the present consideration of the bill he has named.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 731) to limit and fix the Signal Service. It authorizes the President to appoint, as assistants to the Chief Signal Officer, two majors, six officers who shall have the rank and pay of captains mounted, six who shall have the rank and pay of first lieutenants mounted, and six who shall have the rank and pay of second lieutenants mounted, or to detail as such assistants the said number of officers who shall have respectively the said rank and pay while so serving.

Section 2 provides that the enlisted force shall be maintained as hitherto upon duty, and not to exceed one hundred and fifty sergeants, thirty corporals, and three hundred privates; and the enlisted men of the Signal Service shall receive pay at the rates formerly fixed for enlisted men of the Signal Corps of the Army of similar grades; but all acts or parts of acts relating to the duties of the Chief Signal Officer and the Signal Service shall remain in force.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was to strike out the word "mounted" in lines 5 and 8 and in lieu thereof insert "of infantry."

Mr. LOGAN. The Senate will understand that that amendment, instead of giving cavalry pay, gives infantry pay, which reduces the expenses as they exist.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I inquire whether this bill does not increase the expense of the Signal Service?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir.

Mr. SAULSBURY. My understanding is that in the sundry civil bill there was an appropriation for that service.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAULSBURY. My impression is that this bill will increase the expense of that service and require an additional appropriation.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all. The appropriation bill provides for the amount which shall be expended this year, and this bill does not affect that at all. These officers are paid in the Army and it is a part of the pay of the Army, and they are officers of the Army now. The effect of this amendment, as the Senator will see, is to reduce the pay of the officers from that of cavalry officers to that of infantry officers, which makes quite a difference so far as the pay is concerned.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator says that is the case, I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. It does not now increase it; that is certain, because we cannot get any further appropriation, and I would not ask for any myself. The appropriation is less for this year and this bill does not affect it either directly or indirectly. All that this bill does is to make the service permanent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ERASTUS T. BUSSELL.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I move as an act of justice to the gentleman whose patent matter was disposed of yesterday to take up the motion to reconsider that I entered yesterday in order that the matter may be now disposed of. I voted against the passage of the bill, coming in late, because it appeared to me that it was not sufficiently guarded in respect of articles that might be manufactured during the period that this patent has expired since 1874 and down to the new extension. With an amendment which I propose to offer, if it be reconsidered, to protect everybody who has manufactured articles during that time and to use them afterward, I should be willing to vote for the bill. I move, therefore, to take up the motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 917) to enable Erastus T. Bussell, of Indianapolis, Indiana, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for extension of letters-patent for a "combined rubber and spiral steel spring" was rejected.

The motion to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I move to reconsider the vote ordering the third reading of the bill, so that I may offer an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I move to add at the end of the present proviso the following words:

Nor in respect of any article manufactured during said time, nor shall any right exist to prevent the use of any such article so manufactured during the said time.

So that the proviso will read:

Provided, That no damages shall be collected of any person for an infringement of said patent between the time of the expiration of said patent and the time of the renewal of the same, nor in respect of any article manufactured during said time, nor shall any right exist to prevent the use of any such article so manufactured during the said time.

The word "during" in the print should be changed to "between."

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Vermont seems to be diverted for a moment. I suggest to him that that should be "after the extension and before the renewal thereof."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, it should be so changed according to the print.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I will simply say to the Senator from New York and the Senator from Vermont that if they will reflect one moment they will see that nothing of that kind is necessary, because this extension when granted by the Commissioner, if it shall be granted, does not relate back to the expiration of the patent, and from the expiration of the patent until the extension is issued anybody can manufacture and anybody can sell articles thus manufactured without this inventor having any rights whatever against such a person under the law as it now stands, without any proviso in the bill at all.

Mr. CONKLING. I am not sure that that is not so as matter of law. I was talking about the sense of the amendment. If the amendment is necessary at all, it ought to mean something.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not dispute my friend's law; I am too wise for that. But I took it for granted that as there was a proviso in this bill of exactly this character, only that it was too narrow, the framer of the bill and the committee who reported it thought as a matter of precaution it was desirable to make an absolute and unquestioned security. Therefore my attention was only directed to perfecting the limitation contained in the proviso in the bill.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I will say now in reference to this bill as well as other bills reported from the Committee on Patents that that has been put in the bills for the purpose of not arousing any objection in the Senate and thereby obstructing their passage; but any lawyer will see on reflection that it is not necessary, because when there is no patent no right can be gained by the inventor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But there was a patent, and it is to be renewed, and it depends upon the date when the renewal takes effect. If this man is to be re-instated as of his former estate in the regular way, under the principles of the patent law, then the extension would operate all the time unless there be special words to prevent it; but there is no use in spending time upon it. Certainly the amendment will not do any harm.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I do not object to it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I voted against this bill yesterday on the general principle that the extension of patents is wrong. I am told that this patentee is a very worthy gentleman and very poor. I have no doubt that is true, and I do not want by any vote of mine to do him injustice; but I think as a general rule it is entirely wrong, and it is better that private individuals should suffer than the public generally suffer by granting the extension of patent-rights.

There is an admission in this bill that there have been springs manufactured by other parties than this gentleman, and precaution is taken to guard against the patentee having rights as against those parties so manufacturing; but you can see very readily how those parties may be damnified by the passage of this bill. In order to manufacture these articles after the expiration of the patent, they must necessarily have fitted themselves up for that purpose; they must have possessed themselves of the proper machinery, and may be engaged to-day in that business. You, therefore, by the extension of this patent stop these gentlemen, whoever they may be. I do not know that there is any such person; but I suppose that may be the case from the precaution that is taken to guard against any liability on their part. You at once render entirely useless all the capital they may have invested in machinery, shops, &c., necessary to manufacture these springs after the expiration of this gentleman's patent. We may be doing this gentleman a favor, but we may be doing great injustice and injury to other gentlemen by the passage of this bill. I do not wish to do this gentleman any injustice, and I do not want by any act of mine to do any injury to other parties who have engaged in this business after the expiration of this gentleman's patent. I therefore cannot vote for the bill.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I presume that the Senator from Delaware and myself will not disagree and that the Committee on Patents will not disagree with him in reference to the general rule which should be adopted in relation to the extensions of patents. I am opposed to any general extension of patents. I think they should not be extended except in some peculiar cases where great hardship has been suffered by the inventor and where justice and right demand that his patent should be extended for the purpose of giving to him what the Constitution gives him. In this case I assure the Senator from Delaware that no injustice of the kind to which he alludes can possibly happen. The committee examined into that question, and they ascertained that so far from any injustice being done to gentlemen who may have been engaged in manufacturing these articles there are none of those gentlemen who have not done great injustice to this inventor. They have been using his invention for years; they have been fighting him in the courts; they have been preventing him from getting any reward for his ingenuity, skill, labor, and time, and there are no manufacturers of these springs which have not been in existence for a long time infringing on the rights of this gentleman.

Mr. SARGENT. Did the court sustain him?

Mr. WADLEIGH. The courts sustained him in 1874.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

DAVID DE HAVEN.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 932, for the relief of David De Haven.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 932) for the relief of David De Haven was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Captain De Haven, of Boonville, Missouri, of $50,000, in full payment and complete satisfaction of his claim against the Government of the United States for the steamboat Alonzo Child, of which he was former master and owner, and which boat was taken possession of by the officers of the Mississippi squadron, and used and appropriated for the benefit of the Government of the United States in the summer of 1862.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report in that case read. That is quite a handsome little sum of money.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. SARGENT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, on the 21st of June:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the claim of Captain David De Haven, of the State of Missouri, for the loss of the steamer Alonzo Child, beg leave to report that they have had the matter under consideration, and have carefully examined the evidence submitted in sppport of said claim and find the following facts fully established:

About the month of April, 1861, Captain David De Haven, the claimant, was the master and owner of the steamer known as the Alonzo Child, which was at that time a regular passenger-packet plying on the Mississippi River between Saint Louis and New Orleans. That about the middle of the said month of April the said packet cleared the port of Saint Louis on her regular trip, arriving safely at New Orleans, where she remained a short time to take in her cargo, and then left that port under regular clearance-papers from the United States custom-house for the port of Saint Louis.

That when opposite Memphis, Tennessee, on her upward-bound trip, that city being then in the hands of the confederates, a shot was fired across the bow of the said steamer from one of the confederate batteries and Captain De Haven was directed to bring his boat ashore. There being no alternative but to obey this order, the captain ran his boat ashore and made a landing.

As soon as this was accomplished his boat was boarded by a strong detachment of soldiers under one Captain Frank Hicks, the cargo discharged and confiscated, and the boat retained by the said Captain Hicks and his command.

Captain De Haven, finding himself completely in the power of the enemy, immediately proceeded to the headquarters of General Pillow, and made every effort in his power to get his boat released and to be allowed to pass up the river. In this, however, he entirely failed, and thinking that if he remained with his boat and kept his own men on board of her he could the better protect her from injury, and hoping that an opportunity would be afforded him to escape, he made a request to be permitted to remain with her, which was granted, and his officers and men remained with him on the boat until the confederates ran her into the Yazoo River, and blockaded her with rafts, so that she could not be got out, and then he left her, leaving two of his men on board of her to watch her, and to keep him advised of any change that might take place, and with instructions, also, that should the Federal forces get possession of the river and recapture her, to inform them that it was his boat, and also the circumstances of her capture by the confederate forces.

Captain De Haven, finding it useless to remain longer with his boat, with a view of getting beyond the confederate lines, and being himself in feeble health, went into the interior of the State, to Shelly Springs, where he remained a long time an invalid.

Some time in 1862, the Federals got possession of the Yazoo River, and found this steamer lying at Yazoo City, with her cabin furniture undisturbed, bed and bedding sufficient to accommodate seventy-five men, and a cargo of yellow pine, consisting of about one hundred thousand feet, all of which, together with the boat, was taken possession of by the Mississippi squadron, under Admiral Porter, and the boat used in the naval service for nearly a year, when she was by them completely gutted, and her hull condemned and sold as a prize at Mound City, Illinois, and purchased by the Government.

The further fact appears that at the time that the Federal forces took possession of this boat, they were not only informed by the two men whom Captain De Haven had left on board of the boat that she was the property of Captain De Haven, and of the circumstances under which she was taken from him by the confederate forces, but that the chief engineer of the Mississippi squadron, who actually took possession of the boat, was well acquainted with Captain De Haven, had know him for a long time, and knew his boat, and as soon as they came in sight of the boat, told Admiral Porter that it was Captain De Haven's boat, the Alonzo Child, and that he knew him well, and that he was a loyal man.

It further appears that as soon as Captain De Haven was informed of the fact that the Federals had got possession of his boat, he sent a message to General Morgan L. Smith, with whom he was acquainted, and who was then in command of a division of the Federal forces at Snyder's Bluffs, the point to which she had been taken after her recapture, that the Federal forces had got possession of his boat, the Alonzo Child, and requested him to protect his interests therein.

It further appears that at the time the boat was taken possession of by the Federal forces she was nearly new, and had cost Captain De Haven $85,000 in gold, and the chief engineer of the Mississippi squadron, to whom she was turned over, and by whom she was used, swears that she could not have been built short of $125,000.

Captain De Haven was and is a resident of a loyal State, and his loyalty is established beyond question; and as to the merits of this case your committee are of the opinion that there can be no question. It is clearly proved that she was never employed in aid of the rebellion, by consent of her owner. On the contrary, her owner was a loyal man, and so known to the Federal officers in charge of the expedition which made the capture, and also to the Government officer at the time of the sale of her hull. This boat was not a lawful prize when taken possession of by the Government, and no act of condemnation could make her so; and the report of the honorable Secretary of the Navy shows that they did not consider it as a prize, and did not so treat it. They took it into the naval service and kept it for about two years, and during nine months of the time used it in the service; then, after appropriating everything but the hull, they had that sold and the proceeds distributed; and in the list of published prizes it is expressly excluded, and reported as taken into the naval service.

Your committee are, therefore, of opinion that it was the duty of the Government to have immediately restored the boat to her owner, or, if the exigencies of the service required her impressment, the Government was as much bound to pay for her as though she had never been captured by the enemy, and had been taken possession of within the Federal lines on her way up the river to Saint Louis.

The claimant, therefore, now stands as a claimant for the value of this boat, as though no such proceedings had been had.

Your committee, therefore, recommend that Captain David De Haven be paid the sum of $50,000, in full for the steamer Alonzo Child, the proof being clear that that sum is a small estimate of its value, and report the accompanying bill with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report of the Secretary of the Navy referred to in that report read. This seems to me to be rather an extraordinary proposition.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will ask the committee from which this report comes whether any inquiry has been made at the Treasury Department for information concerning this claim?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes, sir; and we have here copies of the opinion of the Second Comptroller and of the Auditor recognizing the claim so far as the facts are concerned and the loyalty of the claimant, and stating that the only provision of law under which they could proceed was one authorizing a payment for property taken in the military service of the country; and they state that that does not embrace the naval service; and on that, which might be considered a technicality, unquestionably a correct decision, and on that ground alone they rejected the claim for payment that was made there.

Mr. CRAGIN. They had no jurisdiction.

Mr. SARGENT. They held they had no jurisdiction of the case under the statute.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then they could not try it.

Mr. SARGENT. They did not pass upon it for that reason.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report of the Secretary of the Navy read.

Mr. SARGENT. I hold in my hand the report of the Secretary of the Navy, which is simply an extract from public documents showing that the schooner Alonzo Child was captured by the Mississippi squadron, taken to Springfield and taken into the naval service. This is a list of vessels captured and destroyed in violation of blockade or in battle, &c.

Mr. LOGAN. What was the time of the capture?

Mr. SARGENT. April, 1861.

Mr. LOGAN. I mean by our forces.

Mr. SARGENT. In 1862, at Yazoo City.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This report of the Secretary of the Navy, as it is called, seems to be a leaf cut out showing a table of vessels mentioned in a report of the Secretary of the Navy which I have sent for. The heading is as it here stands, "Statement of vessels captured and destroyed for violation of the blockade or in battle, &c., continued," and among others is the Alonzo Child, captured by the Mississippi squadron, sent to Springfield, which I suppose is in Missouri, and taken into the naval service. This was 1862-'63. Now the report of the committee shows that this vessel was captured by the confederates at the town of Memphis, Tennessee, in April, 1861, and that she remained in the possession of the confederate government, as we call it for short—the government of the rebellion—for about a year and a half, down to some time in 1862, when the Union forces recaptured her in the Yazoo River where the rebels had her fastened to keep her from being got away.

I should like to ask my friend from California, who, I see, made this report, on what authority of law it is that he states that this was not a lawful capture by the United States forces when we seized the vessel and got her back? I had the impression that the law was——

Mr. SARGENT. I think I did not say in the report that it was unlawful for the American forces to recapture her.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What I mean by "lawful capture" is a lawful capture jure belli, and that is one which changes the property and transfers the dominion from the government from which the capture was made into the government making the capture.

Mr. SARGENT. My impression is that the Senator would hardly desire that I should assume to instruct him upon the law on that point.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; but I asked him to explain to the Senate what is stated in the report.

Mr. SARGENT. Unquestionably it is the law of nations, well settled and laid down by all the leading authorities and our own Supreme Court, that where a vessel or any other property or thing belonging to the citizens of one government has fallen into the possession of an enemy, on being recaptured by the forces of the nation friendly to the individual, it should be returned to him. I lay that down as a broad proposition and have proceeded on that theory in this report. I think I could show the Senate, if I had time, that that view is really sustained by the authorities.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it is, then the Senator has got, probably, a pretty good ground for this report as far as I now understand him; but I certainly do not understand that to be the law. I ask the Senator to let this bill go over until to-morrow that we may look into it. If he is right about his law, he has taken one great step in favor of this claimant undoubtedly; but if the law should turn out to be the other way and it is only by special statute that a return is made after the enemy has had firm possession, as I believe they call it, that is, for twenty-four hours, then of course this was a lawful prize when the United States took possession of it again and the right of the individual owner was entirely gone when the confederates had captured her and kept her for twenty-four hours. If the Senator is right about the law, then the case certainly would fall within a class that deserves consideration. I do not know particularly about its merits, and the only thing that struck me in the report was that question of prize or international law—the law of capture.

Mr. SARGENT. I hold in my hand a memorandum of a report of the Second Comptroller in the case of the Anglo-American and Saint Charles presenting a claim for vessels taken by the Quartermaster's Department. I have had of course no opportunity to verify this memorandum as being from a written opinion of the Comptroller; but there are certain authorities cited here which agree with my idea of what the law is, and if the Senator will allow me, I should like to call his attention to this.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. SARGENT. This memorandum says:

> Up to date of capture the vessels were within rebel jurisdiction and control.
>
> In such a case the right of post liminium obtains, "by virtue of which persons and things taken by the enemy are restored to their former state or country again into the possession of the nation to which they belonged."
>
> The sovereign is bound to protect the persons and property of his subjects, and to defend them against the enemy. When, therefore, a subject or any part of his property has fallen into the enemy's possession, should they come into the possession of his sovereign, it is undoubtedly his duty to restore them to their former condition, to re-establish the persons in all their rights and obligations, and to give back the effects to the owner; in a word, to replace everything in the same footing in which it stood previous to the enemy's capture. (Vattel, Book 3, chapter 14, page 392; vide Wheaton, supra, page 653.)
>
> The time when the restitution takes place "as soon as such person or things captured by the enemy fall into the hands of soldiers belonging to their own nation, or are brought back to the army, the camp, the territories of the sovereign, or other places under their control." (Vide Vattel, supra, page 393, section 206.)

I think that is the law, and upon that theory of the law the report is drawn. The vessel was built a year or two, I think two years, before the capture by the confederates. She was nearly a new vessel at the time of her seizure.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I of course am not prepared to dispute Vattel or Wheaton; but I think if the Senator would look into the text he would find a very considerable qualification of that doctrine. I am very sure it was not so understood by the Government of the United States when in 1799 or thereabouts—I forget the exact date—we passed an act of Congress which provided that when property of American citizens which has been captured by the French, with whom we had a quasi war, should be recaptured by vessels of the United States, it should be delivered up to the owner upon an allowance of salvage to the recaptors and pointing out how much salvage should be allowed and how much it should be. I certainly had the impression that the law was in respect of a vessel on navigable waters, whether she belonged to citizens of one of the belligerents or of a neutral power; that if she had been captured in due course of war by the other belligerent and recaptured after a period which is short, (I believe it is twenty-four hours, but I will not be sure about that;) but certainly after a long period like this when she has been in firm possession of the opposing belligerent and is recaptured, the recapture makes her a case of prize, and she is entitled to be condemned and the proceeds distributed. Upon this principle, wherever there is a state of belligerency between two parties who are recognized as belligerents as these were in this war of the rebellion, and one party makes a capture and reduces that capture into firm and permanent possession, the right of the individual owner is absolutely extinguished. On this principle this steamer, the Alonzo Child, became the property of the Confederate States of America, public property; and it being their public property they might have sold it to anybody they liked and would have made a good title. Now, its being recaptured by the forces of the Union did not revive the property of the owner, but it divested the firm property that before existed in the confederated states and transferred it to the United States. On that principle it appears, although the vessel was taken into the Navy because they needed her on the spot, as soon as they could she was libeled in a prize court and condemned as prize of war. That is what the report states, as I understand. But my friend says in his report that—

Library University of Wyo

This boat was not a lawful prize when taken possession of by the Government, and no act of condemnation could make her so.

That is exactly what I should like a little time to look into. If he is right in that statement, it takes us a large step forward in the case.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont a question. Does he not recollect that we have treated other vessels precisely as the claimant in this case asks to be treated?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not remember any such case.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have an impression that there are several such cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, and the unfinished business is the river and harbor bill.

THE PUBLIC PRINTER.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to call attention to an error in an enrolled bill. The sundry civil appropriation bill contains a provision which was intended to abolish the office of Congressional Printer and to establish the office of Public Printer, with the same duties and obligations and responsibilities, but holding his office by a different appointment and by a different tenure. The bill as it was enrolled reads:

That so much of all laws or parts of laws as provide for the election or appointment of Public Printer be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

There was no Public Printer at the time this bill was before us, and therefore this enrolled act, as I understand it, abolishes an office which did not exist, and the one which was intended to be abolished, I suppose, still exists. I move that the matter be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the point? Why not refer it to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. ANTHONY. Because it is a legal question. Perhaps it should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it go there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, if there be no objection.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is an error in the enrolled bill. I have made inquiries at the State Department and have received a dispatch from the Secretary of State. So I suppose the office of Congressional Printer still exists.

TREASURY STATEMENTS AND ACCOUNTS.

Mr. DAVIS. It will be recollected a few days ago I gave notice that this morning I should ask the Senate to take up the report of the Committee on Finance on the Treasury discrepancies so that I might make some remarks. I then excepted the bill now pending. I now give notice that to-morrow morning, if this bill should be disposed of in the mean time, I shall ask the Senate to allow me to submit my remarks in the morning hour.

THE HAWAIIAN TREATY.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask leave to make a remark. The legislation to give effect to the Hawaiian treaty has been pending before the Senate for some time. We have been prevented from bringing it up by the fact that so much time was absorbed by the impeachment and other important matters. I shall ask the Senate as early as possible to give consideration to that legislation. Business interests are being somewhat disturbed for want of action. For these considerations and because of the importance of the measure, I shall ask its earliest consideration.

Mr. MITCHELL. I concur fully in that suggestion.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. HAMLIN. Allow me to say in that very connection that I shall ask the Senate to give consideration to the post-route bill as soon as the pending measure is disposed of, and I hope the Senate will give me an opportunity.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3625) providing for the sale of Osage ceded lands in Kansas to actual settlers, and requested a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. JOHN R. GOODIN of Kansas, Mr. LAFAYETTE LANE of Oregon, and Mr. JAMES W. MCDILL of Iowa, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 982) providing for the completion of the Washington Monument; and

An act (S. No. 774) to remove the political disabilities of Samuel Jones, of Virginia.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. MITCHELL to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as to a canal around the Cascades of the Columbia River, to insert after the word State:

And jurisdiction to hear and determine such proceedings is hereby conferred on the circuit court of the United States for the district of Oregon; and no appeal shall operate to stay proceedings.

So as to make the committee's amendment read:

Of which amount the Secretary of War is authorized to expend so much as, in his judgment, may be necessary and proper to secure title and right of way for canal and locks not exceeding the sum of $10,000; and whenever, in the prosecution of the said work, it shall have become necessary to obtain the right of way over any lands for the said canal and locks, the Secretary of War shall take possession of and use the said lands, after having purchased the same, or, in case the said lands cannot be purchased for a reasonable price, then after having paid for the same, or secured the value thereof, which value may be ascertained in the mode provided by the laws of Oregon for the condemnation of lands for public uses in that State. And jurisdiction to hear and determine such proceedings is hereby conferred on the circuit court of the United States for the district of Oregon; and no appeal shall operate to stay proceedings. The Department of Justice shall represent the interests of the United States in any legal proceedings under this act to obtain the right of way for said canal.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I had the honor yesterday to propose what I thought was a very innocent amendment to the river and harbor bill. To my surprise, however, it met with violent opposition from the honorable Senator who sits immediately behind me and also from certain other Senators. I did not yesterday evening, by reason of a motion made to adjourn by the honorable Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY,] have an opportunity to reply to the objections made by these Senators to my amendment; and now in order that I may have that opportunity I shall do what I have never done before in the Senate, make a dilatory motion. I now move that the river and harbor bill be recommitted in order that I may have an opportunity to say what I desire to say in answer to what was said yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves the recommittal of the bill to the Committee on Appropriations. The question is on that motion.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator proceeds on that theory, I should like to make a suggestion. I do not wish to disturb him at all; but, if I understand the rule, a motion to recommit is also subject to the five-minute arrangement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The five-minute rule only applies to amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I have failed to read the rule correctly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, yesterday the honorable Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] in making his objection to the amendment offered by myself used this language:

Mr. BAYARD. I trust the Senate will pause long before they give their consent to the doctrine of this amendment. We have had the question raised in this body several times, and I am not aware that any decision can be found for it. I am not aware of any judicial decision of the courts of the United States, and certainly there has been no legislative precedent for any such claim of power on the part of the Government of the United States. If you can assume such a right to condemn lands in invitum, what becomes of the right of eminent domain which in all periods of the history of this Government has been supposed to be vested in the States themselves?

The doctrine enunciated by the honorable Senator is that the Government of the United States has no power whatever to exercise the right of eminent domain over lands within a State desired for the use of the United States Government unless the consent of the State has been first had. In the course of the discussion, the honorable Senator who sits immediately behind me [Mr. CONKLING] used these words:

Mr. CONKLING. I wish the Senator would let me understand the Senator from Oregon. Does he say that there is no statute of Oregon under which the United States may take property for a public building or anything else?

Mr. MITCHELL. I know of no such statute in Oregon. There is a general incorporation law providing for the condemnation of private property for public use.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest that Oregon had better prepare herself to receive appropriations for improvements.

Thereby concurring, as I understand, fully with the doctrine laid down by the honorable Senator from Delaware, which, as I have stated, is to the effect that the Government of the United States through its Congress has no power to exercise the right of eminent domain over lands within a State unless the consent of the State is first had.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the Senator will pardon me. Before he proceeds now to knock me down in argument, I wish to disclaim altogether the construction which he puts upon my remark. He commenced by saying that I had violently opposed this amendment, whereas my impression was that I had merely undertaken to understand what the amendment means. Now he refers to my remark that Oregon had better prepare herself to receive improvements. I beg to state to him in advance that what I meant was exactly this: that inasmuch as the Legislature of the State of New York, with whose doings I am more familiar, and the Legislatures of all other States whose action has been brought to my knowledge in that connection, with which I am less familiar, have at all times spontaneously and readily done whatever was necessary to make over to the United States both possession and jurisdiction where that was necessary to the construction or completion of a work, I thought it would be well for Oregon, if she had not that kind of statute, to adopt it in order to remove any impediment which might be found in receiving such benefactions or benefits, if that be more accurate, conferred by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the only trouble with the position of the honorable Senator from New York is that the Supreme Court of the United States, as well as several other courts in the different States, have decided that, so far from the States having any power to exercise the right of eminent domain for the benefit of the United States, no such power exists.

Mr. CONKLING. I did not affirm that it did exist. I will affirm what I believe to be the law about it when I get the opportunity, but I do not wish words put in my mouth.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think I had a perfect right to infer from the language used by the honorable Senator from New York that it was his judgment that it was the duty of the State of Oregon, before coming to the Congress of the United States and asking for an appropriation in aid of a great internal improvement and for the condemnation of private property within the limits of the State of Oregon necessary for that improvement, to give its consent. That I understand to have been the position of the honorable Senator yesterday. If it is not his position to-day I am glad to see that he has reformed, and that he has accommodated his views to the decisions of the courts and the views of elementary writers on this particular subject.

I said yesterday before I had time to examine the authorities upon this point, that I was surprised at the position taken here that it was necessary to ask the consent of a State before the Congress of the United States could exercise the right of eminent domain in constructing a great public improvement. That never was the law. No court ever held that, so far as I know, and I am surprised at the honorable Senator from Delaware to-day in hearing him enunciate the doctrine that he has enunciated here. Why, Mr. President, that would have done very well under the old government of the confederation, where no power could be exercised by the Congress except those powers that were expressly delegated; and that is one reason why the government of the old Confederation was set aside by the people of this country who, in order to form a more perfect union, ordained and established the Constitution. But there are certain implied powers under the Constitution of the United States and there are certain express powers. What is one of the express powers? By article 1, section 8, of the Constitution Congress shall have power—

> To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.

In regulating commerce they have a right under this clause, as has been decided over and over again, to encourage commerce, to promote commerce, and how is this done? By the improvement of our rivers and harbors, by the construction of canals, and by the building of railroads, if you please. As an incident to that power it becomes necessary to condemn private property, not only within the Territories, but within the States; and the constitutional question raised by the amendment that I have offered to this bill is simply whether the Congress of the United States can exercise the right of eminent domain over private property within a State without the consent of the State. It has been decided in Ohio; it has been decided in Michigan; it has been decided, I think, in California, and, better than all, at the last term of the Supreme Court of the United States the Supreme Court unanimously decided it. It is true Judge Field dissented from the judgment upon certain minor points involved, but upon the general question as to the right of Congress to exercise the right of eminent domain within a State, that question was finally and conclusively settled in the case of Mary R. Kohl and Others, Executors of John S. Kohl, vs. The United States, decided at the October term, 1875. The case came up from the State of Ohio in reference to the condemnation of land in Cincinnati.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to my friend, as I happen to know about it, that there was some difficulty in getting the needed legislation from the State of Ohio; indeed it was practically impossible; and therefore that made a test case of the authority of the United States which condemned a whole square in the city of Cincinnati, a square appraised at six or seven hundred thousand dollars. The matter was contested with great activity by many of the lot-owners, carried through all the stages of litigation, and it was intended by the Government of the United States to be a test case as to its right to condemn private property for public use.

Mr. CONKLING. That was for a custom-house and post-office?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before proceeding to call the attention of the Senate to precisely what that decision is, I wish to refer to a few elementary authorities. Upon this point I refer first to Cooley's Constitutional Limitations. I read from page 525:

> As under the peculiar American system the protection and regulation of private rights, privileges, and immunities in general properly pertain to the State governments, and those governments are expected to make provision for those conveniences and necessities which are usually provided for their citizens through the exercise of the right of eminent domain, the right itself, it would seem, must pertain to those governments also, rather than to the government of the nation; and such has been the conclusion of the authorities. In the new Territories, however, where the Government of the United States exercises sovereign authority, it possesses, as incident thereto, the right of eminent domain, which it may exercise directly or through the territorial governments; but this right passes from the nation to the newly formed State whenever the latter is admitted into the Union.

But now hear what follows:

> So far, however, as the General Government may deem it important to appropriate lands or other property for its own purposes, and to enable it to perform its functions—as must sometimes be necessary in the case of forts, light-houses, military posts, or roads, and other conveniences and necessities of government—the General Government may still exercise the authority, as well within the State as within the Territory under its exclusive jurisdiction, and its right to do so may be supported by the same reasons which support the right in any case; that is to say, the absolute necessity that the means in the Government for performing its functions and perpetuating its existence should not be liable to be controlled or defeated by the want of consent of private parties or of any other authority.

I refer also to a very able decision made by Judge Cooley in the case of Trombley vs. Humphrey, 23 Michigan, page 471. In that able opinion, in discussing the powers of the General Government to exercise the right of eminent domain without the consent of the States, he uses this language, and here I take pleasure in stating that I learn from the report that my honorable friend from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] participated in that decision:

> Under the division of the power between the United States and the individual States, each has its sphere of sovereignty, within which it moves and operates without let or hinderance from the other, and within that sphere it employs the eminent domain whenever needful to the complete and effectual exercise of its powers, and with as little occasion or necessity for the permission or assistance of the other as if the two governments were wholly foreign to each other instead of being constructed as parts of one harmonious system.
>
> The right to take private property for public purposes is an incident to all governments. (Baldwin, 205.)

And so it is, Mr. President, it is incident to all governments. It does not come, perhaps, so much from the Constitution as from the fact of sovereignty; as every sovereign State may exercise this right within its sphere, or else there is an end at once to all government. But not only so, the authority in the case of Michigan does not stop here; neither does the authority of the Supreme Court of the United States stop here; but they go further, and they uproot and undermine the suggestions and the positions made and taken yesterday by the honorable Senator from New York and the honorable Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him to reconcile what he is now expressing with the seventeenth paragraph of section 8 of article 1 of the Constitution, which says Congress shall have power—

> To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings.

I should like him to reconcile the opinion which he is now expressing with this clause; and then to answer this further interrogatory, whether he believes it is competent for the General Government to enter within the limits of a State and acquire property for any and for every purpose that Congress may determine?

Mr. MITCHELL. No question about it, Mr. President, provided that property is necessary to carry out any end that Congress may have in view within its sphere. I will answer the honorable Senator further that that provision of the Constitution does not apply and has no kind of reference to the question of the appropriation of property. It only refers to the exercise of jurisdiction over the property after it has been acquired. That has been decided. That was decided in the case in Michigan; that was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case to which I have referred. I call the attention of the honorable Senator, in answer to his interrogatory, to the following in the case from Michigan. I read from the syllabus:

> Consent of State not condition-precedent, only necessary to transfer jurisdiction. The consent of the State is not a condition-precedent to the taking of lands by the General Government. Its consent is required only for the purpose of a transfer of jurisdiction.

And the Supreme Court of the United States, I will say to the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] following up that idea and adopting the principle and I may say almost the very language of the supreme court of the State of Michigan, holds to the same view, as I will show. I now read from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Kohl et al. vs. The United States, decided at the October term, 1875, in which they use this language:

> The consent of a State can never be a condition-precedent to its enjoyment. Such consent is needed only, if at all—

Even a doubt in the mind of the Supreme Court whether it is needed at all—> only, if at all, for the transfer of jurisdiction and of the right of exclusive legislation after the land shall have been acquired.

So it is not a condition-precedent to the taking of the land. It is a monstrous doctrine, let me say to the honorable Senator from Delaware, to hold that before the Congress of the United States can appropriate a foot of land for a fort or an arsenal or an armory or a light-house or a canal they must obtain the consent of the State or the consent of anybody else. Such a doctrine would destroy this Government and make it as powerless before the people as was the government of the Confederation, where they could not exercise any power except that power was expressly granted to them in the Articles of Confederation.

But, Mr. President, not only so, as I was about to say, when interrupted by the honorable Senator from Delaware, the decisions and the elementary writers on the subject go further, not merely to the effect that Congress may exercise this power, but they go further and say the States have no right to exercise it for the Federal Government, and why? For the simple reason that every sovereignty may exercise the right of eminent domain, for what purposes? For its own purposes, but not for the purposes of another. The right of eminent domain is a right recognized the world over, in all governments, in all sovereignties: in France by making compensation as we do here; in England frequently without making any compensation. That right, deemed so necessary to the welfare of a great government, is exercised time and again, and has been as I have said in England without making compensation, although they sometimes do make compensation. What is the law, then? Not as suggested by the honorable Senator from New York; not as stated and elaborated by the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] but just the reverse. The law is that no State within the Federal Government can condemn property for the use of the Federal Government.

Mr. CONKLING. I interpose now a second time. I have once said to the Senator from Oregon that I expressed no opinion on this question. I have read the RECORD, and I find that I expressed none. Having disclaimed it, he has now for the third time imputed to me what I never said or never intimated; and as I am not ambitious to have the Senator from Oregon associate my name with this debate—I will do that myself if I choose to do it—I ask him again to omit me when he refers to the Senators who have stated in the Senate the contrary of this doctrine. I said nothing about it; I maintained nothing about it. I have my view about it, which I will endeavor to state myself, inadequate as that statement may be compared with one which the Senator from Oregon may make. But now in good nature and in seriousness, I say to him again that I will thank him to omit me in this repetition time after time of what has been said by Senators.

Mr. MITCHELL. I certainly have no intention of doing the Senator from New York any injustice, nor am I ambitious to associate his name with a debate that he does not care to have it associated with; but, unfortunately, the Senator from New York himself associated his name with this debate; and, if I think it necessary or proper in defending the amendment which I have had the honor to offer and which the honorable Senator from New York, as he had a perfect right to do—because I do not question that for a minute—saw proper to question, then I cannot help it if it becomes necessary to refer to his name. Of course I shall feel compelled to do it, and shall do it, in perfect good nature, because I never get out of humor and I am not out of humor now; and I shall certainly say nothing intentionally to associate his name unpleasantly with this debate, or to place him in any awkward or false position. I thought I had a right to say what I have said after what the honorable Senator from New York had said in the suggestion he made yesterday, that Oregon had better prepare herself to receive appropriations for improvements. I will say to him in all candor, in all kindness, and in all good nature, and I will say to the Senate, that the State of Oregon assumes no such right, the State of Oregon assumes no such power as to dictate to the Government of the United States when it shall or shall not condemn private property within its limits for the purposes of a great public improvement in the interest of commerce.

Mr. President, as I was saying when interrupted by the honorable Senator from New York, the doctrine laid down in the case in Michigan and which was adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States in the decision to which I have attracted attention, is to this effect—not only to this effect, but is absolutely this, and I call the attention of the Senate to it and of every member of the Senate—namely, that a State of this Union, while it has the power under its right of eminent domain to condemn private property within its limits for the use of the State, for the use of corporations created by a State, has no power whatever, directly or indirectly, to condemn private property for the use of the United States. That is the doctrine, and, that being the doctrine, the State of Oregon has no power whatever to entertain jurisdiction to condemn property at the Cascades of the Columbia River for the use of the United States Government upon which to erect a canal and locks.

Now allow me to quote from these decisions to see whether or not I am correct. The supreme court of Michigan, Judge Cooley delivering the opinion in the case of Trombley vs. Humphrey, used this language:

The States of this Union possess the eminent domain for all legitimate purposes under their own sovereignty. They may take and appropriate lands for roads, canals, state-houses, court-houses, school-houses, and many other purposes needful to enable them to accomplish the objects for which their governments have been created by their people. But there are other public objects which, though to be accomplished within their territorial limits, are just as much beyond the scope of the eminent domain as possessed and exercised by them as they would be if to be accomplished within the exclusive jurisdiction of a foreign nation. Under the division of powers between the United States and the individual States each has its sphere of sovereignty within which it moves and operates without let or hinderance from the other, and within that sphere it employs the eminent domain wherever needful to the complete and effectual exercise of its powers, and with as little occasion or necessity for the permission or assistance of the other as if the two governments were wholly foreign to each other, instead of being constructed as parts of one harmonious system. For the one to enter the sphere of the other and employ its officers and machinery in the exercise of its eminent domain for the benefit of the other would not only be as much without warrant, but also as much a work of supererogation, as for the United States to exercise the like authority and employ the like agencies in a foreign country in order to appropriate individual property therein for the benefit of the government of such foreign country, which, as a sovereignty, had powers of its own fully adequate to the purpose.

In the exercise of its sovereignty, and as a part of its provision for the regulation, control, and protection of commerce—

Now, speaking of commerce—

the United States erects light-houses, and may without question seize the property of individuals for the purpose, observing the constitutional requirement of making due compensation therefor. To do this, would be but an ordinary exercise of the right of eminent domain. But when the State undertakes to do the same—

I call attention to this—

But when the State undertakes to do the same—not for any purposes of its own, but in order to turn the property over to the United States, the difficulties appear to us insurmountable. In the first place there can be no necessity for the exercise of this right by the States for this purpose, for the authority of the nation is ample for the supply of its own needs in this regard under all circumstances. In the second place, the eminent domain in any sovereignty exists only for its own purposes.

"Only for its own purposes." The United States cannot condemn property for the use of a State, neither can the sovereign power of a State condemn property for the use of the sovereignty of the United States. Each one is exclusive within its own sphere and its own jurisdiction.

But further:

And to furnish machinery to the General Government, under and by means which it is to appropriate lands for national objects, is not among the ends contemplated in the creation of the State government. Thus we perceive that the foundation upon which must repose the right to appropriate individual property against the will of the owner under the eminent domain is wholly wanting in the case before us. We do not doubt that the appropriation would have been effectual had the United States seen fit to accept the land and the owners to receive the compensation awarded; for a statute may transfer the title to land in any form the parties mutually assent to, (Embury vs. Conner, 3 New York, 511;) but, until the assent of both is signified, the proceedings are and must be wholly inoperative."

The Supreme Court of the United States, following in the line of that decision, delivered their opinion in the case of Kohl vs. The United States at the October term last. The opinion was delivered by Mr. Justice Strong, and it asserts the doctrine, as I have stated, positively and emphatically that the right of eminent domain not only exists in the General Government to condemn private property within a State for the use of the General Government, but that it is an exclusive right in the General Government and that no such right exists in the States whatever. I must be pardoned if I quote at length from this opinion in order that Senators may understand what they are doing in voting on this amendment.

It has not been seriously contended during the argument that the United States Government is without power to appropriate lands or other property within the States for its own uses and to enable it to perform its proper functions. Such an authority is essential to its independent existence and perpetuity. These cannot be preserved if the obstinacy of a private person or if any other authority can prevent the acquisition of the means or instruments by which alone governmental functions can be performed. The powers vested by the Constitution in the General Government demand for their exercise the acquisition of lands in all the States. These are needed for forts, armories, and arsenals, for navy-yards and light-houses, for custom-houses, post-offices, and court-houses, and for other public uses.

This is another public purpose:

If the right to acquire property for such uses may be made a barren right by the unwillingness of property-holders to sell or by the action of a State prohibiting a sale to the Federal Government, the constitutional grants of power may be rendered nugatory and the Government is dependent for its practical existence upon the will of a State, or even upon that of a private citizen.

I call the attention of the honorable Senator from Delaware to this because it is a perfect answer, I think, to the interrogatory he propounded to me some time ago.

This cannot be,

Say the Supreme Court.

No one doubts the existence in the State governments of the right of eminent domain; a right distinct from and paramount to the right of ultimate ownership. It grows out of the necessities of their being, not out of the tenure by which lands are held. It may be exercised though the lands are not held by grant from the Government, either mediately or immediately, and independent of the consideration whether they would escheat to the Government in case of a failure of heirs. The right is the offspring of political necessity, and it is inseparable from sovereignty, unless denied to it by its fundamental law.

That is the doctrine of the Supreme Court upon this subject. Even though there were no implied power resulting from any express language used in the Constitution, still the right of eminent domain would exist necessarily in the General Government; and why? As a political necessity, as a matter growing out of the fact of sovereignty. The Supreme Court, proceeding further, say:

But it is no more necessary for the exercise of the powers of a State government than it is for the exercise of the conceded powers of the Federal Government. That Government is as sovereign within its sphere as the States are within theirs. True, its sphere is limited. Certain subjects only are committed to it, but its power over those subjects is as full and complete as is the power of the States over the subjects to which their sovereignty extends. The power is not changed by its transfer to another holder.

But now I call attention to the other question decided by the Supreme Court, and that is the question as to the absence of all power in the States to exercise this right for the benefit of the Federal Government. The Supreme Court, in referring to the case of Trombley vs. Humphrey, 23 Michigan, page 471, say:

A different doctrine was asserted, founded we think upon better reason. The proper view of the right of eminent domain seems to be that it is a right belonging to a sovereignty to take private property for its own public use, and not for those of another. Beyond that there exists no necessity, which alone is the foundation of the right. If the United States have the power, it must be complete in itself. It can neither be enlarged nor diminished by a State. Nor can any State prescribe the manner in which it must be exercised. The consent of a State can never be a condition-precedent to its enjoyment. Such consent is needed only, if at all, for the transfer of jurisdiction and of the right of exclusive legislation after the land shall have been acquired.

This is the language of the Supreme Court of the United States. In reference to this pending amendment it was suggested by the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] on yesterday that while it perhaps was, as stated by him, within the power of the Federal Government to confer jurisdiction on the Federal courts to condemn property, the amendment offered by myself was inefficient; that it would not have that effect, in that it did not prescribe how it should be done; whether by a court, or a commission, or a jury, or how. I beg to call the Senator's attention to this case in the Supreme Court, which perhaps proves enough to show that my amendment is not necessary at all, because the Supreme Court held in this case that it was not necessary that there should be any legislation by Congress further than a mere right to purchase property for the specific purpose in order to give the circuit court jurisdiction. In this very case of Kohl and Others vs. The United States, the only legislation as I believe on the subject was an act of Congress authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase property for the specific purpose required. No reference was made in the legislation whatever to any Federal court. No authority was given to the circuit court of the United States for the district of Ohio to try the case or to entertain jurisdiction, and yet the Supreme Court of the United States held that under their common-law powers, or rather under the grant of the Constitution conferring jurisdiction upon the Federal courts, they had the right to entertain jurisdiction in that proceeding and to condemn this property. From that part of the opinion Justice Field dissented. By an act of Congress approved March 2, 1872, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to purchase a suitable site for the erection of a building for the accommodation of the United States courts, custom-house, &c., in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio. The act was further amended June 10, 1872, by which a sum of money was therein appropriated and set apart "for the purchase at private sale or by condemnation of the ground for a site" for the building. The act did use the words "or by condemnation of the ground," for the purposes herein set forth. That was all the legislation there was by Congress conferring jurisdiction upon Federal courts to determine this question; and yet the Supreme Court of the United States held that they had the power to condemn this property without any further legislation upon the subject. Upon that point the Supreme Court say:

But it is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs in error that the circuit court had no jurisdiction of the proceedings. There is nothing in the acts of 1872, it is true, that directs the process by which the contemplated condemnation should be effected, or which expressly authorizes a proceeding in the circuit court to secure it. Doubtless Congress might have provided a mode of taking the land and determining the compensation to be made, which would have been exclusive of all other modes. They might have prescribed in what tribunal or by what agents the taking and the ascertainment of the just compensation should be accomplished. The mode might have been by a commission or it might have been referred expressly to the circuit court; but this, we think, was not necessary.

It is true my amendment goes a little further than the Supreme Court, that is a majority of them, say is necessary. Justice Field thought it was necessary that there should be some further legislation conferring jurisdiction than was contained in the act under consideration at that time. The Supreme Court say further:

The investment of the Secretary of the Treasury with power to obtain the land by condemnation, without prescribing the mode of exercising the power, gave him also the power to obtain it by any means that were competent to adjudge a condemnation. The judiciary act of 1789 conferred upon the circuit courts of the United States jurisdiction of all suits at common law, or in equity when the United States or any officer thereof, suing under the authority of any act of Congress, are plaintiffs. If, then, a proceeding to take land for public uses by condemnation may be a suit at common law, jurisdiction of it is vested in the circuit court. That it is a "suit" admits of no question. In Weston vs. Charleston, 2 Peters, 464, Chief Justice Marshall, speaking for this court, said "the term [suit] is certainly a very comprehensive one, and is understood to apply to any proceeding in a court of justice by which an individual pursues that remedy which the law affords. The modes of proceeding may be various, but if a right is litigated in a court of justice, the proceeding by which the decision of the court is sought is a suit."

I do not deem it necessary to read further from this decision. It is clear then that the law is well settled that the Congress has not only the right to do just what is proposed to be done by my amendment, but that the State of Oregon has no right whatever. That is the law of the land, and that is the reason why I offer the amendment, and I trust it may be adopted. I hope that the Senate will adopt this amendment. The honorable Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] yesterday very kindly stated that he felt friendly to this improvement, as I have no doubt he does. I will say to him that in my judgment, under the decision of the court to which I have attracted his attention this morning, unless this amendment is adopted, this improvement will in all probability be obstructed by the power in Oregon that has had control of the waters of the Columbia River ever since that river was discovered almost. The object of this legislation is to break down the monopoly that has seated itself in power at the Cascades of the Columbia River, and that has bid defiance to the people of Oregon in all past time. Will it be said now that before the Congress of the United States can have the privilege of constructing a canal and locks at that point in order to break down that monopoly and build up the commerce of that great and growing country they must kneel before that monopoly and before the power that perhaps it may exercise insidiously over the minds of a legislative assembly?

I hope, Mr. President, the amendment will be adopted. I hope that all objection will be withdrawn to the amendment. I am now satisfied that no objection whatever would have been made on yesterday either by the honorable Senator from New York or by the Senator from Delaware had they been advised of the very recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, of which I had no knowledge myself, I confess, until after this debate was opened.

I am sorry to have detained the Senate so long, and would not have done so had I not deemed it absolutely necessary to the great interest for which I have been contending in this body ever since I have had the honor of a seat here, namely, the removing of obstructions from and the opening up of the commerce of the second river on the continent.

I withdraw my motion to recommit the bill, having made it simply to avoid the restriction imposed by the five-minute rule, applicable to discussion on my amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to my friend from Oregon that he do not reprove the committee again for occupying five minutes in explanation of the bill, as he did yesterday, as I observe he has now occupied an hour. If we are to pass this bill we have to omit debate upon great constitutional questions, to some extent at least.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am very sorry to have detained the Senate; but I think the honorable Senator from Iowa will find a sufficient excuse in what took place yesterday for me in the time that I have taken to-day. I certainly have not done so because I wanted to be heard talking on a constitutional question. It was because I want this amendment adopted and because I believe it is necessary to the commencement of this work, that I spoke at the length I did.

Mr. KELLY. I renew the motion to recommit the bill, for the purpose of making a few remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WALLACE in the chair.) The Senator from Oregon moves to recommit the bill.

Mr. KELLY. I would prefer really the amendment as reported by the committee with a slight modification. I think we had better derive the title of these lands through the laws of the State of Oregon. That has been the mode heretofore adopted; and it seems to me it stands upon better ground or at least quite as good ground as the mode prescribed by the amendment of my colleague to the amendment of the committee; and if that shall be voted down I shall offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee, which will make it read in this way:

That the Secretary of War shall take possession of and use the said lands, after having purchased the same, or, in case the said lands cannot be purchased for a reasonable price, then after the title to the same shall be procured by the United States, under the laws of Oregon, in such manner as the Legislature of that State may prescribe.

I admit that at the present time under the existing laws there may be doubts whether the courts have the right to condemn land in case the United States cannot make this purchase. I refer to the constitution of the State of Oregon, which contains this clause:

Private property shall not be taken for public use, nor the particular services of any man be demanded, without just compensation; nor except in case of the State without such compensation first assessed and tendered.

The State has provided for the condemnation of lands by a corporation under the general law, and after so providing, section 52 of the act provides that:

Whenever the law authorizes private real property to be appropriated to public uses, the same may be entered upon, examined, surveyed, and selected in the mode prescribed by the statute giving such authority, and thereafter the State, county, or other municipal or public corporation therein, seeking and authorized to make such appropriation, may proceed in the mode in this title prescribed to have such property appropriated and the compensation therefor determined.

That authorizes the State, county, or any municipal corporation in the State to condemn lands. It does not include the United States. It does not say the United States may proceed to condemn lands for public use. Therefore the law in that respect perhaps does not authorize a condemnation of these lands by the United States; but the Legislature of Oregon will be in session in five weeks from this time and I doubt not that by a unanimous vote in both branches the Legislature will provide a mode by which the property may be condemned in the courts of Oregon. I have no doubt that when the matter is called to their attention this will be done. It will be necessary, according to my judgment, for the State of Oregon to sanction the purchase of the United States before any moneys shall be expended.

Mr. MITCHELL. I call the attention of my colleague to the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States decide emphatically that it is not necessary.

Mr. KELLY. I will presently refer to that point. I call the attention of the Senate to section 355 of the Revised Statutes, which says:

no public money shall be expended upon any site or land purchased by the United States for the purpose of erecting thereon any armory, arsenal, fort, fortification, navy-yard, custom-house, light-house, or other public building, of any kind whatever, until the written opinion of the Attorney-General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title, nor until the consent of the Legislature—

To this I call the attention of the Senate—

nor until the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the land or site may be, to such purchase, has been given.

Where the land is to be purchased for any building whatever, as the building of locks in this case for a canal, it is, in my judgment, within the purview of the statute. No money can be expended upon the construction of that canal and the locks until the assent of the State is given to that purchase. Here is a statute of the United States, and I presume it will be paramount and will control this case, to the effect that no officer of the United States shall be authorized to make an expenditure until the State has given its assent to the Federal Government making the purchase. That being the case, as I have said, the Legislature will shortly assemble, within a little more than a month from this time, and I have no doubt that the assent of the Legislature of Oregon will be given to this purchase and that it will at the same time authorize the lands to be condemned in such a way as it may deem proper and just.

As to the right of a State to condemn the land, I will say that this amendment substantially conforms to the law that was passed on the 3d of March, 1875, in relation to the Fox River improvements, where it is provided:

That whenever, in the prosecution and maintenance of the improvement of the Wisconsin and Fox Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin, it becomes necessary or proper, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, to take possession of any lands, or the right of way over any lands, for canals and cut-offs, or to use any earth-quarries or other material lying adjacent or near to the line of said improvement and needful for its prosecution or maintenance, the officers in charge of said works may, in the name of the United States, take possession of and use the same, after first having paid or secured to be paid the value thereof, which may have been ascertained in the mode provided by the laws of the State wherein such property lies.

That, it seems to me, is the proper way to have the lands condemned. I will say here that while the decision rendered in the State of Michigan is certainly a very able one, it is in direct opposition to two cases that had been decided before that time. I refer to a case in Massachusetts and especially to the case of Gilmer vs. Lime Point, decided by the supreme court of California, and reported in the eighteenth volume of the supreme court reports of that State. They there held, after an elaborate review of the law upon this subject, that the State has a right to take and condemn lands for the purpose of erecting buildings for the United States. The supreme court of California say:

The phrase employed in our Constitution is: "Nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." The words "public use" here, mean a use which concerns the whole community, as distinguished from a particular individual or a particular number of individuals. It is not necessary, however, that each and every individual member of society should have the same degree of interest in this use, or be personally or directly affected by it, in order to make it public (18 California Reports, page 251.)

It may be for the public use of the State; it may be for the public use of the United States. Here let me say that this is in my judgment a correct view of the law. Where the constitution of Oregon says that private property may be taken for public use, it may be taken for the public use of the State or for any county in the State, or for the United States, where the benefit accrues to the people of that State.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will my colleague allow me a moment?

Mr. KELLY. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Supreme Court of the United States decides the reverse and overrules all those decisions.

Mr. KELLY. I do not understand it so. I do not understand that the decision rendered at the last term of the court overrules them. The decision says that the United States have a right to proceed in their own courts and condemn land. There is no question about that; but the objection I make to the proposition of my colleagne is that there is no law at this time which authorizes the courts to proceed and assess the value. It is true that in the case referred to concerning the land for a custom-house in Cincinnati, the United States courts did proceed to take jurisdiction of the case. They proceeded to condemn lands, and undoubtedly it was the law of the land; but I question the propriety of the court undertaking to decide this matter without any law of the United States upon the subject. I admit it would be very proper, very appropriate, that such a law should be passed, especially after this decision has been made, but at present there is no law of this kind. Inasmuch as the State has the right, as I conceive, to acquire this title and transfer it to the United States, I think the amendment reported by the committee should be agreed to. I prefer, inasmuch as the State has a right to condemn as well as the United States, that the amendment as the committee have reported it should be adopted with slight modifications.

Therefore I shall vote against the amendment of my colleague, hoping that the amendment of the committee with the modification which I have suggested will be adopted, so as to proceed in the State courts to acquire this title. I have no doubt we can do it and proceed with this work. Not only the Legislature, but the courts of Oregon and every individual in the State, or nearly so, unless such individual happens to be adversely interested—the whole community, no doubt, will assist in acquiring the title to these lands and give them to the United States at a very moderate compensation. I think, therefore, the proper way is to intrust to that State the right to acquire this land and the right to transfer it immediately to the United States for their benefit.

I withdraw the motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, previous to 1871 or 1872 the practice I believe had been uniform, when the United States wished to obtain property in the States for public works of any kind, to borrow the power of eminent domain of the several States to acquire it. The right of the States to exercise that power for that purpose came first squarely out in the case that has been cited from Michigan, a case in the decision of which I participated, and for that reason I would not cite it here if the Supreme Court of the United States had not fully ratified it by the decision which they have recently made in the case of Kohl and Others vs. The United States. As to the substance of that decision I will proceed to state the point and then how far I think the decision of the United States court has affirmed the points in the case in Michigan. I read from the decision:

This State has no authority, by virtue of its eminent domain, to condemn private lands within its boundaries for the purpose of turning the same over to the United States for the erection and maintenance of light-houses thereon. Act No. 119 of 1867, (session laws, 1867, page 158,) which undertakes to authorize the governor to do this, is unconstitutional, for the reason that its enactments are not within the sphere of State powers, and if put in force would constitute an appropriation of the property of individuals without due process of law.

The eminent domain is the rightful authority which exists in every sovereignty to control and regulate those rights of a public nature which pertain to its citizens in common, and to appropriate and control individual property for the public benefit, as the public safety, necessity, convenience, and welfare may demand. It has its foundation in the imperative law of necessity, which alone justifies and limits its exercise.

The States of the Union cannot any more exercise this right within their territorial limits for purposes which under the division of powers between the United States and the individual States are within the sphere of the sovereignty of the United States than as if the two governments were wholly foreign to each other. Such purposes, though to be accomplished within the territorial limits of a State, are beyond the scope of the eminent domain of such State.

The United States in the control of its sovereignty, and as a part of its provision for the regulation, control, and protection of commerce, erects light-houses, and may in the exercise of its eminent domain, by observing the constitutional requirement of making due compensation thereof, seize and condemn the property of individuals for that purpose.

The right of eminent domain in any sovereignty exists only for its own purposes; and to furnish machinery to the General Government for it to appropriate lands for national objects is not among the ends contemplated in the creation of the State government.

The United States has never, by any legislation, undertaken to confer upon the States authority to judge of its needs of lands for national purposes or to assess the compensation it should pay, and any such judgment and assessment must, therefore, be wholly provisional and subject to its acceptance and ratification.

The aid of the State, as here attempted to be afforded, in obtaining a site for a light-house, is not analogous to the aid it gives the General Government in rendering its war power effectual.

The proceeding under said statute cannot be sustained on the ground of the interest of the State by reason of its coastwise commerce, in the establishment of light-houses upon these waters. The statute does not proceed on any theory of State interest.

Where, in a proceeding of this nature, the State abandons the proceeding before its completion, and the owner of the lands, sought to be taken, applies for mandamus to compel its being carried into effect, the question of the State power is of necessity involved. This right, if it exists at all, must be mutual.

The consent of the State is not a condition-precedent to the taking of lands by the General Government. Its consent is required only for the purpose of a transfer of jurisdiction. (23 Michigan Reports, pages 471 and 472.)

Now I wish to see how far the Supreme Court of the United States have ratified that decision and how far they have approved or disapproved the case cited by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. KELLY] from the courts of California.

It is true—

Say the Supreme Court of the United States—

this power of the Federal Government has not heretofore been exercised adversely, but the non-user of a power does not disprove its existence.

That is the power of the Federal Government.

In some instances the States, by virtue of their own right of eminent domain, have condemned lands for the use of the General Government, and such condemnations have been sustained by their courts, without, however, denying the right of the United States to act independently of the States. Such was the ruling in Gilmer vs. Lime Point, 18 California, 229, where lands were condemned by a proceeding in a State court and under a State law for a United States fortification. A similar decision was made in Burt vs. The Merchants' Insurance Company, 106 Massachusetts, 356, where land was taken under a State law as a site for a post-office and subtreasury building. Neither of these cases denies the right of the Federal Government to have lands in the States condemned for its uses under its own power and by its own action. The question was whether the State could take lands for any other public use than that of the State. In Trombley vs. Humphrey, 23 Michigan, 471, a different doctrine was asserted, founded, we think, upon better reason.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. Shall he proceed by unanimous consent?

Mr. CONKLING. Are we under the five-minute rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We are.

Mr. CONKLING. Did not the Senator from Oregon renew the motion to recommit the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He did and withdrew it when he sat down.

Mr. CONKLING. Then the Senator from Michigan can renew it and finish his reading.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I renew the motion to recommit the bill in order to conclude what I have to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan will proceed.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. The court say——

In Trombley vs. Humphrey, 23 Michigan, 471, a different doctrine was asserted, founded, we think, upon better reason. The proper view of the right of eminent domain seems to be that it is a right belonging to a sovereignty to take private property for its own public use and not for those of another. Beyond that there exists no necessity, which alone is the foundation of the right. If the United States have the power, it must be complete in itself. It can neither be enlarged nor diminished by a State. Nor can any State prescribe the manner in which it must be exercised. The consent of a State can never be a condition-precedent to its enjoyment. Such consent is needed only, if at all, for the transfer of jurisdiction and of the right of exclusive legislation after the land shall have been acquired.

Showing conclusively that the Supreme Court of the United States have approved the decision which I have just read from the State of Michigan in everything perhaps, I may say without any qualification; but in the application of it there may be an exception. It may be true that the supreme court of the State of Oregon might decide that they had the constitutional power to use the right of eminent domain for the benefit of the United States. That would be directly contrary to the decision in Michigan, but still it might be the law of that State, because the decision of the supreme court of that State might be beyond the reach of the Supreme Court of the United States. I am inclined to think it would be so, and therefore if the supreme court of the State of Oregon should so decide, that must be looked upon as a final decision. They have not yet so decided, as I understand, although the State of California has. But the Supreme Court of the United States have gone further. They have held that the right of eminent domain may be exercised by the United States authority and in the United States courts without the aid of an act of Congress; and that is the very point which arises upon this amendment. Under this decision I see no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the amendment reported by the committee on the authority of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. I must frankly say that without that decision of the Supreme Court of the United States I should have thought we should be taking rather bold ground to say that the power of eminent domain on behalf of the United States could be exercised without the authority of an act of Congress regulating its exercise; but, after all, I am rather inclined to think the decision of that court is right in principle, and it certainly is the law of the land. It is based, as I understand it, upon this ground, that if the proceeding in the Federal court be of a character which sufficiently protects the rights of individuals, it may be done without an act of Congress; otherwise it cannot. That, I think, is the full extent of the decision, and to that extent I think the decision is right in principle; but it would be much better to have an act of Congress covering the whole ground. I see no objection, however, to the amendment as reported by the committee within the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. But the amendment suggested by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. KELLY] based upon the decision in the eighteenth California Reports, might or might not be valid as the supreme court of the State of Oregon should or should not decide. Such I understand to be the legal positions involved in this amendment. For myself I am in favor of the amendment reported by the committee and opposed to that suggested by the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. KELLY.]

I withdraw the motion to recommit the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to recommit is withdrawn. The pending question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bruce, Christiancy, Edmunds, Ferry, Hamlin, Harvey, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Sargent, West, and Wright—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Cockrell, Conkling, Cooper, Davis, Eaton, Gordon, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, Maxey, Merrimon, Randolph, Ransom, Saulsbury, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hitchcock, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, McCreery, McDonald, Norwood, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, and Windom—34.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KELLY. I now offer an amendment, which I ask the Clerk to report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out of the amendment reported by the committee the words:

After having paid for the same, or secured the value thereof, which value may be ascertained in the mode provided by the laws of Oregon for the condemnation of lands for public uses in that State.

And in lieu of those words to insert:

After the title to the same shall be procured by the United States under the laws of Oregon in such manner as the Legislature of that State may prescribe.

So that, if amended, that portion of the amendment will read:

Of which amount the Secretary of War is authorized to expend so much as, in his judgment, may be necessary and proper to secure title and right of way for canal and locks, not exceeding the sum of $10,000; and whenever, in the prosecution of the said work, it shall have become necessary to obtain the right of way over any lands for the said canal and locks, the Secretary of War shall take possession of and use the said lands, after having purchased the same, or, in case the said lands cannot be purchased for a reasonable price, then after the title to the same shall be procured by the United States under the laws of Oregon in such manner as the Legislature of that State may prescribe. The Department of Justice shall represent the interests of the United States in any legal proceedings under this act to obtain the right of way for said canal.

Mr. MORTON. I did not pay very careful attention to the reading of the decision of the Supreme Court; but I think I understand the drift of it, and it is this: that so far as the right of eminent domain is concerned the United States has it, and a State cannot give it to the United States. If the Government cannot procure the land by purchase, this amendment provides for obtaining it under the laws of Oregon; but according to principles that seem very well settled, Oregon cannot confer this right by her own law. She can take land for State purposes, but she cannot take land for United States purposes. The United States can take that herself and does not have to go to the State of Oregon. This amendment makes a muddle of this whole doctrine, and recognizes that the Government cannot get a foothold in a State even for a post-office or a public work or a custom-house without the consent of the State. As far as I am concerned I want to put my foot, small as it is, on that doctrine wherever I find it. That doctrine denies to the Government the power to have a post-office in a State by denying her a foothold. We recognize the converse of that proposition by denying to a State the power to tax United States bonds. We say if a State can tax United States bonds it can tax the bonds out of the State. If it be true that the Government cannot get a footing for a public work of any kind in a State without the consent of the State, then it is in the power of that State to keep the Government out. I will never recognize that doctrine, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I always regret when I hear an argument in this Senate or elsewhere in the country based upon the idea that there is a necessary hostility upon the part of States toward the Federal Government. Why, sir, the States could scarcely exist, would certainly blot out their national existence, without this great tie of the Union to bind them, just as much as the Union itself must fall if the States are not preserved in their integrity; and by what method of reasoning is it that an American can suppose that a constituent portion of his country's Government is hostile to the existence of that Government? Mr. President, would it not have been as well to wait until there had been some suggestion on the part of some State that there was an unwillingness to aid in the necessary prosecution of the Government's business by making it a free grant of its lands or assisting in every way to give it jurisdiction over those portions of its territory necessary to the operations of the Federal Government?

Why, sir, there never has been a case in the history of this Government known to me in which there has been the least hesitancy on the part of a State freely to cede jurisdiction and aid in the establishment of Government works. What a spectacle does this bill present? We have had too much here in my opinion of local search for local advantage. It was to have Government works built in the State, Government moneys expended in the State, that we have seen so much ardor, so much just, prompt, quick apprehension of local advantage exhibited all over the Senate. Why, then, is the necessity to state this proposition, that in this community of feeling, each for mutual advantage, the Union covering the States with its blessings and the States maintaining the Union in its integrity, for suggesting here that there is danger to us as a people under a Federal Union that that Union will ever be injured or weakened by the refusal of a State to give us that aid or that cession of its territory which is necessary for Federal purposes?

Mr. MORTON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BAYARD. Certainly.

Mr. MORTON. I did not suggest the idea that there is hostility; but I oppose the idea of making the Government of the United States dependent upon the consent of a State to own a custom-house in that State. There has been hostility in ten States where the Government would have been denied the right if she had applied for it and where she was even driven from her own property. It is of no use to talk about a thing of that kind being impossible; it is possible, because it has been. But the idea that I am combating is this, of making the United States dependent upon a State for the possession of any property in a State. I do not know that the time will ever come when a State will refuse it; but I do not want the Government to be in the position of depending upon a State. It destroys her sovereignty. The idea that lies at the bottom of that has been the author "of all our woe."

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I exceedingly regret that it does not seem possible for the honorable Senator from Indiana to take part in a debate but what there must be a resuscitation or a reference to causes of past strife in no way necessarily connected, in no way in my opinion properly to be adduced in the consideration of this question before us. I was speaking only in a feeling of unity and peace, trying to show that the best hopes of this nation lie in the happiness of the people of the various States. That was my idea, and I do not think it at all necessary to assume a doubtful power or to make assertions of a doubtful power when there is no possible necessity for it and has been no suggestion of necessity for it. For my own part, I believe that this Government is just as likely to fall from hostility at the hands of those who have Federal power as it is at the hands of those who have State power, because the existence of both is equally essential to the happiness and existence of each. Therefore it is that I resist when it is now put forth this first claim by an act of Congress to the exercise of that right known to lawyers as the right of eminent domain of the States, the right of Congress by a law to give either to representatives of the United States or other parties the power to take in invitum the property of private citizens for public use. That power has in the history of our Government always been exercised through the sovereign powers of the States. It has never yet been exercised under the authority of Congress by the Government of the United States, and I say therefore until there shall occur some occasion in which the interests of the Federal Government are obstructed selfishly, improperly, by the action of a State, the asserted power, for the exercise of which no necessity is shown to exist, will not be claimed. I would rather take a thing as a free gift from one whom I love and respect than have it with the feeling that he gave it to me under compulsion. There is no necessity for making this precedent in this case and I would pause before it is made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. KELLY. I do not deny the binding authority of the decision of the Supreme Court which has been read and commented on by my colleague and other Senators who have spoken. I do not deny that where the title cannot be procured through State authority or under State law the United States may acquire it as it did in the case of Kohl vs. The United States, in Cincinnati; but where the State is willing under its laws to have the property condemned, certainly the United States can acquire the title to the property they desire under the State law, and that is the mode which has been invariably pursued in all the States heretofore. I see no good reason why we should depart from it now, and I have therefore offered this amendment, knowing that the Legislature, that meets in five weeks from this time, will, as the California Legislature did in the Lime Point case, provide laws for the condemnation of its property in case it cannot be purchased. Feeling satisfied that the State of Oregon will do this, I have offered this amendment. I have no doubt that a law will be provided at the coming session by which this property may be condemned and the title acquired, and that the United States will get it as cheaply and perhaps more so than if they were to purchase it without any condemnation whatever. I know it is the interest of the people of that State that this work shall be prosecuted, and as I said before I am satisfied there will not be a dissenting voice in either house of the Legislature as to this mode of obtaining the title.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Legislature of Oregon desires to convey this property, it has ample power now. If it does not, I think some way will be found by which the United States can take possession of it if we appropriate this money.

Mr. KELLY. I should like to correct the Senator. There is no law at the present time in Oregon authorizing the United States to condemn land, and that is the reason why I have offered this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. But the Legislature of Oregon meet in five weeks, and if they want this money expended in that State they will make some provision for it. If they do not the United States Government will find some way to do it. Therefore I move to lay the amendment on the table. I want to finish the bill some time.

Mr. MITCHELL. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to put an inquiry to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MITCHELL. My point of order is this, that the motion carries the bill with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is an appropriation bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I raise the further point of order that this is not a general appropriation bill within the meaning of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not sustain the point. This is an appropriation bill within the rule.

Mr. MITCHELL. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon appeals from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the rule read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. Senators will find on reading the rule that all appropriation bills, excepting this one, shall go to a certain committee, thereby making this one, if there is any meaning in language.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that rule read.

The Chief Clerk read the second clause of Rule 30, as follows:

All amendments to general appropriation bills reported from committees of the Senate, proposing new items of appropriation, shall, one day before they are offered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and all general appropriation bills shall be referred to the said committee; and in like manner notice of amendments to bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors shall be given and referred to the committee to which such bills shall be referred.

Any pending amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without affecting the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. The rule just read shows that this is not a general appropriation bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask that the second clause be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read again for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And in like manner notice of amendments to bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors shall be given and referred to the committee to which such bills shall be referred.

Any pending amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without affecting the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question. The motion of the Senator from Iowa is to lay upon the table the amendment of the Senator from Oregon to the right of the Chair, [Mr. KELLY.] The other Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] raises the point of order that this carries with it the bill, which point the Chair overrules. From that decision the Senator from Oregon has appealed.

Mr. ALLISON. Now Oregon does not seem to have exhausted itself upon this particular measure, and I withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon withdraws the point of order, the Chair supposes?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL. Now I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. I notice in the phraseology reported as an amendment from the Committee on Appropriations that the Government is to take possession of—and use the said lands, after having purchased the same, or, in case the said lands cannot be purchased for a reasonable price, then after having paid for the same, &c.—

they shall be condemned under the laws of Oregon. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa if he thinks it would be a sufficient title upon the bare purchase on the part of the United States from an individual. I see that this does not provide for anything if it can be purchased previously. It strikes me that that is hardly enough. In nearly all cases where we have provided for acquiring lands we have provided that we shall have the consent of the Legislature that they are not to be taxed.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. KELLY] read a provision which I understand applies to this clause as well as to all others, that the Attorney-General shall see that the title is perfect before any money is expended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That relates merely to the title. This is a question of taxation.

Mr. MORRILL. The question is whether the Government of the United States can acquire a sufficient title to lands for public use by merely purchasing them of an individual. I think not.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the point now of the Senator from Vermont. I think very likely that might be amended so as to cover the objection made.

Mr. KELLY. I think the consent of the State would cure it. The section of the Revised Statutes that I referred to before provides:

No public money shall be expended upon any site or land purchased by the United States for the purposes of erecting thereon any armory, arsenal, fort, fortification, navy-yard, custom-house, light-house, or other public building, of any kind whatever—

It may be a question whether the building of the locks of a canal is a public building.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should think so.

Mr. KELLY. I think so too—or other public building of any kind whatever until the written opinion of the Attorney-General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title, nor until the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the land or site may be to such purchase has been given.

According to my construction of that, no money can be expended upon the site of this proposed canal until the assent of the Legislature of Oregon is given.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The trouble about that is it has not the slightest reference to a canal at all. It has reference, as the Senator has read it, to public buildings and things of that sort. If we have any right at all in this matter, it is a right that belongs to the United States under the Constitution, and not one that we are to acquire by virtue of any sovereign assent of a Legislature. Neither the Legislature of Oregon nor the Congress of the United States nor both put together can resort to any contrivance by which Congress is authorized to do a thing that the Constitution of the United States does not allow. I take it everybody will agree to that proposition.

The question then is whether the Constitution of the United States authorizes Congress to make this improvement around these rapids in the Columbia River by means of a canal instead of blowing the rocks out in the swift water and building locks right in the midst of the river. It is the same thing in substance exactly, just as year after year we have improved the Des Moines Rapids in Iowa, by going within the territorial jurisdiction of the State of Iowa either with or without its consent—I do not care which for my present point—and instead of taking rocks out of the channel of the river we have gone to the edge and are digging them out there to make a canal instead of a mere river lock. We either have the constitutional authority to do that or we have not. If we have the constitutional authority to do it then does it not follow that we have the constitutional authority to take every step necessary to do it? If we have not the constitutional authority to do it, how can the State of Oregon confer upon us the authority to do a thing that the Constitution of the United States has not authorized us to do?

Mr. MORTON. Allow me to ask my friend a question? What would be the worth of a title coming through the laws of Oregon?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The title possibly as a mere piece of private property, like private ownership, if you can suppose that for the general welfare the United States of America might possibly own a piece of private land that they took on execution for instance, might be worth something; it might be possibly something that we could sell. But when it comes to exercising the necessary sovereign dominion to regulate the persons by whom and the manner in which transit shall be made through it, with such conditions for security or tolls or anything else as we think proper to impose, then it is an entirely different question. If we have not the power to regulate the conditions upon which and the manner in which vessels are to go through this so-called canal, just as they do through the Louisville Canal and the Saint Mary's Canal around the falls of Saint Mary's, both of which are perfectly analogous cases, then we ought not to pass any such law at all; we ought not to spend a dollar of the money that belongs to the United States for such a purpose. So I regard the vote of the Senate against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] as a definitive destruction of the whole appropriation, because as it now stands it is absolutely inoperative and must be so upon constitutional and legal principles; and this amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon farthest from me [Mr. KELLY] does not help it a bit. It merely makes it a matter of trade and regulation depending upon the sovereign will of the State of Oregon. The constitutional rights of Congress do not depend upon the sovereign will of any State at all; and of course as my friend from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] suggests she can exercise it without this language as well as with. It only clouds the subject and makes a concession in this bill which I never will vote for, that we have no right in the exercise of our constitutional powers granted, where we have the power to do anything at all to act without the consent of a State.

Taking it for granted that we have the power to make the improvement—and I think in this case we have—I will never admit that this power that we have to do this thing depends upon the will of anybody, because if it is a power at all it is a constitutional power and it exists because the Constitution gives it to us, and our power is sovereign and complete under the Constitution and does not depend upon the will of anybody. When it comes to political dominion in the sense of punishing crimes and that sort of thing, then the Constitution of the United States says that the United States, in respect of certain subjects—and I will take it for this purpose to mean all of them—shall have exclusive legislative power with the consent of the State, just as it has in the District of Columbia; and that makes it as to the State foreign territory. We do not want this for foreign territory. This is not the point for which we want it at all. It is not for the purpose of getting the legislative dominion in the sovereign sense of exercising the political power of making laws and furnishing an asylum for fugitives who may run over on to a lock in this canal. That is not it. That is entirely wide of the mark. That is all this provision of the Constitution has any reference to at all, and that is to give to the United States full dominion in the legal and public sense over such places in the States as the States may cede. The United States does not ask for any such legal and political dominion in respect of its jurisprudence and the execution of justice or anything of that kind; so that I hope we shall not utterly spoil this thing by adopting the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. KELLY.]

Mr. MITCHELL. One word. I hope the amendment of my colleague will be voted down, because I think if the State had the power, which I am satisfied it has not, to do the thing that is proposed here, it can do it just as well under the amendment reported by the committee, and I think the amendment of my colleague would have this effect: After the title has been obtained in that way an appeal from the decision of the inferior court would tie the matter up, and proceedings could not go on until a final decision, until the title was determined; whereas under the general incorporation law of the State of Oregon we can secure the money to be paid and take the property.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. KELLY] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Senator from Iowa if he chooses to leave this matter as it was originally reported, leaving it entirely in the power of the Secretary of War to purchase the lands, and take no other proceeding?

Mr. ALLISON. I think the bill is well enough as it stands; but I will examine that question further, and if anything further is necessary will see that it is put in in conference.

Mr. MORTON. It seems to me that the Government has the right to procure by purchase and direct deed from the vendor any property it has a right to own and hold for any purpose. The question of acquiring exclusive jurisdiction is another and distinct question. But if the Government has a right to own a piece of property, it has the right to buy it directly like an individual.

Mr. MORRILL. Would it not be subject to taxation as much as though owned by any individual, after such a purchase?

Mr. MORTON. That would be another question, which it would not be necessary to decide in deciding this particular point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be read.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 498, to reduce the appropriation "for the improvement of the harbor at Racine, Wisconsin," from $9,000 to $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 500, to reduce the appropriation "for the continuing of the work on the ship-channel in Galveston Bay" from $100,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senate to disagree to the next amendment.

The next amendment was in line 501, in the clause making appropriation for the continuing of the work on the ship-channel in Galveston Bay, to strike out the words "to be expended between Red Fish Bar and Morgan's Point."

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause examinations or surveys, or both, to be made at the following points, namely:

Dan River, from Clarksville, Virginia, to Danville, Virginia.

New River, from the lead mines in Wythe County, Virginia, to the mouth of Wilson in Grayson County, Virginia.

Onancock Creek, Virginia.

Hunting Creek, Virginia.

Tonawanda Harbor, New York, on the east branch of Niagara River, at the mouth of Tonawanda Creek, and extending north and south therefrom.

Sackett's Harbor, New York.

Harbor at Whitehall, at the south end of Lake Champlain, to procure twelve feet of water.

Bayou Bartholomew, Arkansas.

Saline River, Arkansas.

Upper Arkansas River, commencing at Kansas City, in the State of Kansas, to Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas.

Holston River, Tennessee, commencing above the mouth of French Broad River, to Union, Tennessee.

Nolachucky River, Tennessee, from its mouth to Warrensburgh.

Sunflower River, Mississippi.

Paul River, Mississippi.

Big Black River, Mississippi.

Towne Creek, Monroe County, Mississippi.

Chattahoochee River, from Columbus, Georgia, to Thompson's Bridge.

Examination and survey of the harbor at Annapolis, Maryland, and an estimate of the cost of the removal of the bars at the entrance thereto.

Western branch of the Patapsco River, from Light Street Bridge to Elk Ridge Landing.

Pocomoke River, Maryland.

Great Choptank River, between Denton and Greensborough, Maryland.

Head Haven Creek, at or near Easton Point, Talbot County, Maryland.

Laurel Creek, Kentucky.

Harbor at San Luis Obispo.

Coos Bay, Oregon.

Coquille River, Oregon.

The channel in Back River between the Kennebec, at Bath, Maine, and the Sheepscott River.

Manistee River, from its mouth to Sherman, Wexford County, Michigan.

From The Dalles of the Saint Croix River to Lake Superior in Minnesota, with a view to a water-route.

Port of Memphis, Tennessee, so as to ascertain what measures, if any, are necessary to protect the landings and wharf from further injury from the current of the Mississippi River, and the cost of the same.

Mouth of Bell River, Saint Clair County, Michigan.

Cohasset Harbor, Massachusetts.

Gloucester Harbor, Massachusetts.

Man-of-War Shoal at Boston, Massachusetts.

Breakwater at Fairweather Island, Connecticut.

Bayou Courtableau, from its mouth in the Atchafalaya River to Washington, Louisiana, with estimates of the cost of removing obstructions in said bayou so as to give a sufficient depth of water to accommodate the steamboats traveling on the bayou.

A survey to ascertain the practicability and cost of the construction of a sea-wall or breakwater for the protection of the city and harbor of Galveston, Texas, against storm floods from the Gulf of Mexico, to be paid for out of the appropriation for the survey of rivers and harbors.

A survey to ascertain the practicability and cost of the construction of a water-route for transportation from the mouth of Saint Mary's River on the borders of the States of Georgia and Florida through the Okefenokee Swamp and through the State of Florida to the most available and convenient point on the Gulf of Mexico; and that the sum of $7,500 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for that purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

A survey for a ship-channel through Galveston Bay, beginning at twelve feet water in the mouth of the San Jacinto River, and running out of the mouth of said river east of Morgan's Point to the present channel, through Red Fish Bar; thence through the same, extending through Galveston Harbor, passing west of Half Moon Shoals and Pelican Island, and to twelve feet water in Galveston Channel; and to cause an estimate of the cost of the same to be made, and of the comparative merits of the same, with the route to the head of Bolivar Channel; and of the effects of the completion of each of said channels on the Galveston Harbor as to shoaling or deepening the same, and report the same to Congress by the 1st day of December, 1876.

A resurvey and estimate of the cost of deepening the channel across the bar at the mouth of the Brazos River, Texas, and an estimate of the capacity of the harbor at the mouth of the Brazos and its fitness for a harbor of refuge and naval station.

Harbors of Ashland and Bayfield, in Wisconsin.

Chaumont Bay, in Lake Ontario, New York.

The Missouri River, from the town of Saint Charles to the mouth of said Missouri River, with the view to protect the owners of land on the banks of said river, in Saint Charles County, Missouri, against the deflection and abrasion of the current of said river by reason of the erection of the Saint Charles bridge.

A survey and estimate of the damages, if any, done or to be done to riparian owners of lands and improvements thereon at or in front of the town of Venice, Illinois, near Saint Louis, Missouri, by reason of Government improvements made or to be made at or near said town of Venice.

Delaware River, near Cherry Island Flats.
Delaware River, near Petty's and Smith's Islands.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And the sum of $40,000 is hereby appropriated for incidental repairs of harbors for which there is no special appropriation provided for by law and for examination and survey of such rivers and harbors as in the judgment of the Secretary of War will subserve the general interests of commerce.

Mr. ALLISON. There is one matter struck out of the second section that I supposed was in the first section. It relates to a survey of the ship-channel in Galveston Bay, from line 79 to 92 inclusive. That is not really a survey. It is an examination of the bay at Galveston with a view of ascertaining how best to expend the money appropriated and to be appropriated for that harbor, and the Engineer Bureau say that it is very desirable to make that survey. Therefore I want to reserve that portion of the section and insert it at the end of the first section.

Mr. MAXEY. I have here a diagram of the harbor.

Mr. ALLISON. It must be provided for. It is really to ascertain the best mode of improving Galveston Harbor.

Mr. INGALLS. Is the objection that is included between lines 113 and 118 intended as an addition to section 1 or as an independent section?

Mr. ALLISON. As an addition to section 1. It is not printed as we intended. We intended to have it inserted at the end of section 1, and then to strike out the second section, but by some mistake the amendment was inserted after.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would be better to make it a separate section, as it is a separate subject.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not quite a separate subject. The sum of $40,000 is appropriated for incidental repairs of harbors for which there is no specific appropriation. Therefore it is really an appropriation for repairs as well as for new surveys.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not care about it. Take your choice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is the money to come from for this survey of the bay of Galveston?

Mr. ALLISON. It may come from the $40,000 or the principal appropriation for Galveston Harbor. We have appropriated $225,000 for Galveston Harbor, and there is a question as to the mode of making this improvement. So the engineers say, and they want authority to make the survey.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why will it not fall under the clause at the end for the "examination and survey of such rivers and harbors as in the judgment of the Secretary of War will subserve the general interests of commerce?"

Mr. ALLISON. I think it would.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that is left in, there is a direct direction to do a particular thing without any money to pay for it, whereas if you leave it under the general head, if the interests of commerce in the opinion of the Secretary of War warrant it he will make this very examination to which the Senator has alluded.

Mr. MAXEY. I think I can explain it to the Senate without difficulty. The survey is one of the very greatest importance. There are two distinct sets of improvements going on; one from Houston down through Buffalo Bayou and the San Jacinto River to the mouth, and then in Galveston Bay at the outer bar. That is one system. Then there is another system from Galveston to the outer bar. There is a conflict, and a very important one as an engineering question—I have examined the whole matter on the ground—as to where the ship-channel for the improvement from above, that is, from the Houston Harbor down, should run through the bay. It is contended by the people of Galveston that if it runs in the direction that it is sought to be run by the people of Houston, it will have the effect of creating an underdrain that will carry the waters of North Galveston Bay, which now furnish the water of Galveston, around Bolivar Point and will thus shoal Galveston Harbor. The Senate has limited the appropriation of $75,000 for the upper work that I referred to, to work between Morgan's Point and Red Fish Bar. That leaves the disputed question between Red Fish Bar and Bolivar's Point or the harbor of Galveston as the route may be determined by the engineers, and therefore it is an important question for the Senate to direct that survey to be made. It is a matter of the utmost consequence to those two peoples.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The same may be said, probably, of nine-tenths of all the clauses in this second section. This is to make an exception for a single survey of one particular locality when there are fifteen or twenty or perhaps thirty in the whole section. In lieu of all of them, the committee propose to give $40,000 for incidental repairs and for all these examinations, which covers this and all others. Now why we are to make a special exception in favor of this particular locality and require a survey there and require it nowhere else, I do not quite understand. I do not doubt that it is valuable and important. Many of the others are valuable and important; but when we have given this sum of money for this general purpose, if the Senator is correct, and I have no doubt he is, that this is a proper thing to do, then can there be any doubt that the Secretary of War will do it? Certainly he has authority under this amendment recommended by the committee to examine such harbors as in his judgment "will subserve the best interests of commerce?" I hope the Senator will not insist upon this clause; the result will be to get above the $5,000,000, and it is rather invidious.

Mr. MAXEY. I do not think it makes a particle of difference so far as that is concerned, because it will come out of the $40,000. But as will be seen by any one who understands engineering, the amount of $75,000 is limited from this point on which I have my finger [indicating on a diagram] down to Red Fish Bar here. [Indicating.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where is that limited?

Mr. MAXEY. In the bill. The continuation of that work, as claimed by those having an interest in the improvements above, is to run it according to the red line to Bolivar Point. [Indicating.] There is the city of Galveston; here is the North Galveston Bay. [Indicating.] They insist that if the channel is cut through there the embankments thrown up will necessarily create an underdrain which will throw this water of the North Galveston Bay now feeding Galveston Harbor around by Bolivar Point, and thus shoal Galveston Harbor.

Mr. SARGENT. Why will not that all be provided for under the second section as the committee propose it? If the engineers think that the survey should be made and that it is necessary for the general interests of commerce that it should be made, of course they will avail themselves of the allowance under the second section to expend money for the purpose.

Mr. MAXEY. Now I will go on and finish what I had to say. It is insisted by those above that it will not have that effect and that they will save several miles in getting to the outer bar by going the way they want. It is insisted by the people of Galveston that it will have that effect. Whether it will or not is a matter that I think a layman cannot determine. It will have to be determined by an engineer, and it is important to have it determined speedily, in order to make the $75,000 effective which is appropriated already to this work.

Mr. CONKLING. I confess I can see no objection to the request of the Senator from Texas, and I think the Senator from Vermont on reconsideration will see none. If the latter section of the bill as it now stands includes this, then the division of the amendment has no effect one way or the other. If, on the contrary, that latter provision is for any reason too narrow to embrace this, the effect will be not to increase appropriations made by the bill or any one of them, but to take from the money appropriated for this harbor enough to answer this need, which need is an essential one as affecting the providence and safety and good judgment with which the whole appropriation may be applied.

Surely, on that state of case I can see no objection to this proposition. It may be that that would be the law upon the general provision at the end. If so, my answer is, then it does no harm, and that I have a right to say because the committee has the evidence that the board of engineers and its chief consider this survey proper, consider it necessary. Therefore it would be certain to fall within the last section of the bill if for other reasons that section is broad enough to include it, and then there can be no possible reason, I submit, why we should not specifically nominate it in the bill to cure all doubt. On the other hand—and I repeat myself—if it should be held to fall without the concluding section of the bill and to require the payment of money not there devoted, then it comes out, not of any other money, not of any future appropriation, implies no increase of appropriation here, but it is simply subtracting that small sum, which we cannot now definitely determine, from the appropriation contained in the bill devoted to that harbor and to the security of that appropriation, to the well-doing of the work for which that appropriation is made. We are assured by the experts that this survey is needed. Now, either way, how can there be any reason why we should not allow the Senator from Texas to "make assurance double sure" by retaining these words?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly I do not wish to stand in the way of the Senator from Texas in doing anything he wishes that does not cost the Government anything. I move to amend the part proposed to be stricken out by the committee, and which the Senator wishes to have retained, by adding after the word "six," in line 92, these words: "the cost thereof to be paid out of the $40,000 hereinafter mentioned," so as to make it clear and definite that the expense is to be borne by the forty-thousand-dollar appropriation.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Texas does not object to that; it is in his interest.

Mr. MAXEY. I do not object to it at all.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object.

Mr. SARGENT. Is it proposed to keep in the words in lines 1, 2, and 3 of section 2? To have this stand by itself would be singular.

Mr. ALLISON. No; we will change it to "to survey;" so as to read: "The Secretary of War is hereby directed to survey," &c.

Mr. CONKLING. The mode, I submit, should be to non-concur in the amendment striking out the lines named by the Senator from California, 1, 2, and 3, on page 22, so as to read:

That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause examinations or surveys, or both, to be made at the following points, namely.

Then will follow this one point, and then will follow:

And the sum of $40,000 is hereby appropriated for incidental repairs of harbors for which there is no special appropriation provided for by law, and for examination and survey of such rivers and harbors as in the judgment of the Secretary of War will subserve the general interests of commerce.

But, to make it exactly grammatical, I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that in line 2, in place of "examinations," it should be reduced to the singular; so as to read "to cause examination and survey," and then strike out "or both," "to be made at the following point," make that singular, "namely." Then will come in the words:

A survey for a ship-canal through Galveston Bay, &c.

Mr. ALLISON. I think we can arrange it in a moment. I ask the Senate to strike out all of section 2, and then we can re-insert what is needed.

Mr. CONKLING. Probably that is the shortest way.

Mr. HARVEY. I am opposed to the motion of the Senator from Iowa, for the reason that I think the striking out of all these surveys would be an admission that we have arrived at that degree of poverty referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] the other day, when he spoke of the condition of a farmer who was too poor to purchase seed to sow in the spring so as to raise a crop. Now, sir, if there is any ground for contemplating in the future any new improvements in the way of rivers and harbors, the best indication of where examinations should be made would be to take this bill as it stands, without the amendment offered by the committee. Here we find indicated a number of places in different portions of the country where it is believed that surveys will show improvements to be practicable, improvements which would be greatly beneficial to the commerce of the country. This is the way in which the great improvements that have already been made of this kind have been commenced, their feasibility ascertained; and, as has been said heretofore in this debate, this country is not yet finished; further improvements of this kind will be made; further improvements are needed; and to neglect to make surveys and take steps for the improvement of streams that may be made useful to the general commercial interests of the country will result in their being occupied by corporations such as have heretofore occupied a number of such places, and, like the robber barons of the Middle Ages, have made use of such occupation to levy tribute on the passing commerce of the whole country. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] this morning eloquently described one instance of the kind, and many others are within the knowledge of every Senator here. I say that the neglect on the part of the General Government to take such measures to improve for the common interest of the people of all the States the natural facilities that exist for making easy the transmission from one portion of the country to the other of the different commodities produced here will result in leaving many opportunities for grasping corporations to take advantage.

For these reasons I think these surveys had better be made as the bill originally provided and be made as a thing separate from the appropriation "for incidental repairs of harbors for which there is no special appropriation provided for by law." It is better to take the judgment of Congress as to where these surveys should be made rather than the judgment of any Department. I hope, therefore, the Senate will not agree to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Kansas overlooks the fact that we have made here a specific appropriation for surveys. It will not add to the number of surveys that can be made to insert them in the bill. We have just $40,000 here for surveys. Now, if we name five hundred places to be surveyed, the cost of which would be two or three hundred thousand dollars, of course they would not all be made. Therefore, the committee, instead of inserting specific places, say "We will appropriate a specific amount and we will allow the Engineer Bureau to use this amount in making such surveys as the interests of commerce require." Therefore, I think the amendment proposed by the committee subserves the purpose the Senator from Kansas has in view much better than the bill as it came from the House. I hope, then, he will make no objection to this general feature as proposed by the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SARGENT. If the engineers would look into this bill to find out where important works of a general public interest should be established, I think they would be somewhat puzzled. They would find here Laurel Creek and Onancock Creek and Hunting Creek, and I suppose Fishing Creek, and a great many other creeks scattered all through here which have very forbidding names provided the names are to imply to us the idea of the interests of general commerce in the improvement of these creeks.

I might go further. It seems to me that there never were assorted together in a single bunch more absurdities than are found in this section which we propose to strike out. That there may be here and there an important public work I presume is beyond question. Those works the board of engineers will have their attention drawn to by the provision which the committee insert. I hope that they will overlook these fishing and hunting creeks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment striking out the whole of section 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I move to insert after section 1 the following words:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause a survey for a ship channel through Galveston Bay, beginning at twelve feet water in the mouth of the San Jacinto River, and running out of the mouth of said river east of Morgan's Point to the present channel, through Red Fish Bar; thence through the same, extending through Galveston Harbor, passing west of Half-Moon Shoals and Pelican Island, and to twelve feet water in Galveston Channel; and to cause an estimate of the cost of the same to be made, and of the comparative merits of the same, with the route to the head of Bolivar Channel; and of the effects of the completion of each of said channels on the Galveston Harbor as to shoaling or deepening the same, and report the same to Congress by the 1st day of December, 1876, the cost thereof to be paid out of the $40,000 hereinafter appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now add the next amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the second section the following:

And the sum of $40,000 is hereby appropriated for incidental repairs of harbors for which there is no special appropriation provided for by law and for examination and survey of such rivers and harbors as in the judgment of the Secretary of War will subserve the general interests of commerce.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEST. All the amendments of the committee being now concluded, I desire to offer an amendment on page 21. In lieu of the proviso commencing on line 504 I offer this:

Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available whenever and so long as there shall be an open channel of eighteen feet of water to and from the sea through the South Pass of the Mississippi River.

This merely makes the occasion when that appropriation shall be available determined by Congress instead of by the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I offer the following amendment:

SEC. —. It shall not be lawful for any person or corporation to use or occupy any pier, breakwater, or other work of the United States without the written consent of the Secretary of War, and without compliance with such conditions as he shall prescribe, and such consent may be canceled at any time on one month's notice. And any person who, whether acting under the authority of a corporation or otherwise, shall knowingly violate the foregoing provisions, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by imprisonment for not more than one year or by fine not greater than $500. This section shall take effect on the 1st day of October, 1876.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose the object of that section is to reach the east pier at Cleveland.

Mr. CONKLING. Why does the Senator suppose that?

Mr. ALLISON. It may have some general effect that I do not understand. I only wanted to know what it meant.

Mr. HOWE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words beginning with the words "without the written consent of the Secretary of War" down to the clause which commences to state the penalty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the words proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. SARGENT. Would it be in order to refer that amendment to the Committee on Commerce?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such a reference would carry the bill with it.

Mr. SARGENT. I merely make the suggestion. I object to legislation on appropriation bills. As to referring the whole bill, I would rather not do it. As the Senator from New York is the able chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I thought he could report back the proposition in such form that we should be able to understand it and act on it.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from California has evidently been absent from the Chamber. The Secretary has read this amendment twice with great facility and great clearness. If he had been here he would have heard it.

Mr. SARGENT. I was in my seat all the time, and noticed that it required the assistance of the Senator from New York to read the document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves to amend the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I inquire whether the amendment has been reported from any committee or whether it is in order, as it is legislation in reference to a general subject?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It involves no appropriation. It is in order.

Mr. SARGENT. Is it in order to move to lay it on the table?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. SARGENT. Would that motion carry the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would.

Mr. SARGENT. It seems to me we ought not to put on this bill a provision affixing penalties which has not been examined or reported by any committee. I do not know but that judicious legislation in the direction of this amendment might be an advantage; but there certainly ought to be some exceptions. A vessel in distress might tie up against a pier on the land side of it to protect itself in case of a storm. I am not entirely sure that the language of the amendment would not prevent its taking refuge without having first obtained the consent of the Government in writing. I merely mention this. Perhaps it may be an extreme instance; but there may be exceptions to this rule. I see no reason why it should not follow the course of such important measures, and be considered and reported by a committee, especially when a new penal offense is invented and punishments are affixed to acts which are merely mala prohibita. Under this amendment, as I understand it, if a person desires to drive a cart over one of these piers he cannot do it without first having obtained the consent of the Secretary of War.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why should he?

Mr. SARGENT. It might be very convenient and do no harm to any one, and it might be an accidental circumstance. It might be on an occasion of an accident, for instance, the sudden blocking up of a street by the falling of a house or some other occasion which might make it essential to do it. In other words, I do not believe the Government in that respect should be different from any private proprietor and complain of a trespass under such circumstances. The Senator from Vermont by his question would imply that he is in favor of this legislation, proposed in such a shape that it requires two or three Senators to assist the Clerk to read it, being put on the bill without examination. It is contrary to all his course in the Senate heretofore, as I have observed it, because on the simplest propositions he has insisted that it is contrary to the course of the Senate to act upon them without a report from a committee, and I myself on a number of occasions where I thought delay was injurious have consented to his suggestion that matters should go to the committees, believing perhaps that he might be right that in all cases these things should go to committees and be there considered and reported in form. In some cases where the urgency was very great, I have resisted the appeal, I believe, not always with success. I think we should follow the general rule, and legislation of this character fixing a new crime and putting penalties upon the heads of citizens of the United States should at any rate receive the ordinary examination which is given to a bill establishing a single post-route.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do feel an interest in this amendment, because I consulted the Senator from New York about it before he offered it and also I consulted with the Senator from Ohio who is farthest from me, [Mr. THURMAN.] Of course what led to this amendment, which is perfectly germane to the bill, because it is merely for the protection of the property that we are trying to spend money to construct, everybody can see. The necessity for it has been made apparent from the circumstance referred to about the east pier at Cleveland, as the Senator from Ohio who sits nearest to me [Mr. SHERMAN] stated that he wanted to take these people by the throat and compel them to come to an understanding.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator will not quote me as willing to send a man to the penitentiary because he crosses a pier to get to a bridge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I will not quote the Senator from Ohio as being willing to send anybody to the penitentiary for occupying the Cleveland pier for twenty-three years to the exclusion of the United States, or to take any steps whatever to correct the abuse. I will not impute anything of the kind to him. Far be it from me to bring the Senator from Ohio into any such attitude as that.

Now I will begin again. Mr. President, the public works of the United States, its piers, breakwaters, &c., are built by the money of the people. They are not built, so far as we understand it, for private accommodation; they are built for the public protection of the water-ways, and not to furnish accommodations for ship-masters or anybody else to tie up to or to unload wood or iron or any other thing upon, or to make wharves of. If I am wrong about that, I hope the Senator from Ohio will correct me now. Of course I am not; he will agree to that; they are. Therefore, just like any other public building or structure of the United States, it ought to be protected against injury and occupation by private people against the interest and against the right of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. But where the private occupation and interest are perfectly convenient to and not injurious to the public use and occupation, it would be an outrage to prevent the people of the United States from using their own.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Their own?"

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So it would, but I respectfully submit to the honorable Senator that the Treasury of the United States in that sense is the "own" of the people of the United States, and I should be very glad to adopt his apparent doctrine and be at liberty to go in and fill my hat with greenbacks and walk off. It would be very convenient to me at this present time of distress.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not agree to that proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I do not agree to this one. They are both of them only the public property of the United States, and they belong to all the people in exactly the same way and in exactly the same degree, and the Senator has no right to use the pier at Cleveland or anywhere else for his private advantage any more than I have a right to use the money in the Treasury. The idea that either of us can do it because it belongs to the people of whom we are one is, it strikes me, somewhat outside of reason; I will not say absurd.

Now, then, we have had one instance. It is evident, I think, from the course of this debate that there are a good many others where private persons are injuring these piers in their use, as every use does injure to a certain degree, as the use of a house wears it out. They are using the piers and breakwaters of the United States because there does not happen to be any lawful way to stop it. Now, this is exactly such a law as applies to all the public buildings and public grounds of the United States to prevent injuries to public property. It is like the law of the State of Ohio about the public property at Columbus; and that is, that nobody shall injure or deface it or cut up a tree or injure the grass or do anything else under a penalty. Here there is an additional provision which does not exist in the other laws; and that is, that it may be done with the consent of the Secretary of War in writing.

Now, the Senator from California says, "Why in case of distress a ship ties up to it and that is a violation of your law." Suppose in a case of distress under the druggist act my friend goes to a druggist's and buys a bottle of laudanum, which under the laws of many of the States in cities he cannot buy without the certificate of his physician because it is a poison; but he needs the laudanum and the druggist sells it to him. That is a violation of the law; but who prosecutes that sort of a thing? Somebody runs his horse by accident or in a terrible storm into a public building and injures it a little. Nobody thinks of prosecuting it as criminal. Thus, sir, the illustration will not help it. This is a simple proposition now once for all, when we are spending millions a year for protecting the property of the Government of the United States against unlawful occupation without the assent of the Secretary of War.

Mr. ALLISON. If the object of this amendment were to correct the abuse spoken of at Cleveland, Ohio, I do not know that I should object to it; but it does seem to me that it covers a broader ground. The language is that no person or corporation shall use or occupy a pier, breakwater, or other improvement without the written consent of the Secretary of War. Here is a harbor with two piers at Saginaw, Michigan, if you please, or at some sea-port, say McCargoe's Cove, where vessels come in for what purpose? For the purpose of unloading a cargo or receiving a cargo? They land at one of these piers right there. How is a person to get his goods from that vessel to the shore without in a sense at least using or occupying or crossing the pier for that purpose?

I may be all wrong with reference to this subject, but I do not see what the object of having these piers can be unless it is for the use of the public, by which people who have conveyed property by land shall be enabled to communicate with the people who are conveying property by water in vessels.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which party ought to control them, may I ask the Senator? Ought the Secretary of War to control these works or the United States, or ought private people to make them a common?

Mr. ALLISON. But if the vessel chooses to land at a pier or at a breakwater for the purpose of discharging its cargo, before it can use that pier or breakwater for that purpose, if this provision is inserted, it must secure, as I understand it, the written consent of the Secretary of War. I take it that these piers are for the public use and not for the specific use of corporations or particular individuals. They are open to the poor man's wagon or the rich man's wagon the same to unload a cargo from a vessel or to load a vessel with a fresh cargo. If I am entirely mistaken with reference to the scope of this amendment, then of course I may yield; but as I understand it now I cannot vote for it.

Mr. HOWE. I move an amendment, and I should like to have my amendment reported. I have kept the floor until this time in hopes that I should be recognized in the course of the afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out of the amendment after the words "United States" the following words:

Without the written consent of the Secretary of War and without compliance with such conditions as he shall prescribe, and such consent may be canceled at any time on one month's notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HOWE. The proposition of the amendment moved by the Senator from New York is to say that your piers and breakwaters shall not be occupied for private purposes except by the written consent of the Secretary of War, which in two syllables says that the Secretary of War may lease all your piers and breakwaters on any terms that he sees fit and to anybody that he chooses. The amendment I have moved is to strike out that power. I do not believe that the Secretary of War should have that power. I think the Senator from Iowa is entirely mistaken, not as to the scope of the amendment, but as to the character of these structures. They are not built for the common use of the people of the United States. They are built in the interests of commerce. They are built to guard the entrance, not to make the harbor. That is a business that the United States has no right to engage in, but they are built to guide and guard the entrance into a harbor.

Mr. ALLISON. My friend will remember one thing, that where many of these piers have been constructed persons build wharves running along outside of them. It is so at Chicago, and at many other points with which I am perfectly familiar. They pile and build out along these piers.

Mr. HOWE. Where they do that, let them get possession of the breakwater in front of their wharves, and make it a part of the wharf, and we give it up.

Mr. SHERMAN. You cannot put the wharf on the breakwater.

Mr. SARGENT. You allow the Secretary of War to lease the breakwater under the amendment.

Mr. HOWE. I do not propose to allow the Secretary of War to lease at his pleasure $20,000,000 of property belonging to the United States.

Mr. SARGENT. My friend will agree with me, then, that the amendment is crude; that it needs perfecting. There are some things to be remedied, I admit, but it ought not to be done in this way.

Mr. HOWE. I think it will be perfect if you take that power away from the Secretary of War. Then your law would be a simple command to everybody, "keep off the property of the United States, or if you violate this law pay the penalty." Is anything simpler than that? Is anything more right than that? A river emptying into a lake or an ocean or a sea is broad inside, but has a bar at the mouth, and the usual mode of improving, as we call it, that harbor or of getting an entrance into that harbor is to dredge out the bar and throw out breakwaters or piers to deep water to prevent the bar from forming again. The harbor is inside and away beyond these structures which are built by the Government. There wharves are built and those wharves are private property; but to turn these breakwaters themselves into wharves for the use of common carriers, it seems to me, is making a gross abuse of the property of the United States. That should not be done. They should not be permitted to take possession of it without conditions, and those conditions should not be in my judgment arbitrarily fixed by any one agent of the Government. In a case like that referred to at Cleveland, where a great corporation, for the sake of getting room for its business, builds out into the lake, reclaims the bottom of the lake and in the rear of the breakwater, I see it is very convenient for them to have the right to cross the breakwater; but there is but one condition on which they should have that right, and that is to get from the Government the right to make the breakwater a part of their wharf and maintain it as a part of their wharf. Take the breakwater away and the wharf is a breakwater. They first induce the Government to build so much pier that they can get in behind it, and then they take the pier as an annex to their wharf and make the Government keep it up. Is that right? Is that an honest use of the Government property? Certainly my friend from Iowa will not insist that it is. I do not think that any Senator can insist that it is. If that be not a proper use of the Government property, then the only question is whether you will insist upon giving the Secretary of War or any other one agent the right to lease all this property.

Mr. SARGENT. I think the trouble with the amendment is that it attempts to legislate generally, having in view simply a single case. I do not care to discuss the question of the breakwater or pier at Cleveland. The action of the railroad company there may be right or it may be wrong; but are we to lay down a general principle because a single bad instance, admitting it to be bad, has developed itself, and to do it in this hasty way without the consideration of consequences in other matters? It is bad policy. When I spoke a few moments ago I alluded to a few cases which I said might be extreme. The Senator from Vermont points out that they are extreme. Admit that they are extreme, but I can suggest other cases in point where this policy of the Government of the United States might operate with great hardship. I might refer to the case of training-walls, walls put along rivers in front of cities built by the United States to prevent the erosion of the banks. A provision of this kind came to us in this bill from the House and we struck out the words "to prevent erosion and destruction of its banks," because we were not exactly prepared to admit that the Government ought to take care of the banks of the river. It might involve a general care of the banks, as in the case of the levees of the Mississippi River, which is still a mooted question. Take a case of that kind. The Government has to my knowledge in some cases in the West built along the side of rivers near cities walls which may be called training-walls, to prevent the erosion of the banks or the encroachment of the river, sometimes to protect its own property and sometimes to protect the property of citizens. To say as to a wall of that kind thus built along the line of a river that nobody could cross it with teams, or freight, or anything of the kind, would be simply to shut out the people from access to a river upon which their commerce floats. Take the case of the levees of the Mississippi River. We have not yet admitted that the Government is liable to take care of this great flood of water which passes over and collects in many States of the Union and forces its way down by New Orleans to the Gulf of Mexico. We have not yet admitted the principle to its full extent that the Government of the United States and the people of the United States are bound to take care of this immense volume of water which pours down there and victimizes to a certain extent the inhabitants near the mouth of the Mississippi; yet to a certain extent we have admitted this principle by giving lands to aid in building levees along the banks of that river. It has been contended by Members and Senators from Louisiana and Mississippi that in equity the Government should go still further and should control this great volume of water which comes down upon them, which it is beyond their financial capacity to control for themselves. If ever that principle is admitted, the Government will take a step further and instead of merely giving land for the purpose of building levees along both banks of the Mississippi, will make appropriations of money to control this vast flood of water which has collected there through the States and forces itself down upon them.

If legislation like that proposed is now admitted, the Government could prevent any man from crossing those levees from the river to reach his farm or to go to any town, or village, or city, or hamlet which may be scattered along down the banks of that river. It is a Government work, and consequently without the permission of the Secretary of War in writing nobody could have access to the land from the river. Nobody could land a cargo or land persons or property without committing a trespass, without violating the laws of the United States, without becoming liable to having the penalties denounced by this proposed legislation fall on his head.

I say that such legislation ought to be carefully considered by a committee to see whether if it is done there will not be extreme cases where there will be hardship which we should in fact bring upon the people. I have heard it suggested with great force that there ought to be a rule regulating this property belonging to the United States. I think we should not consider on an appropriation bill any amendment which proposes to change an existing law, upon the principle which I know a good many eminent authorities on this floor have adopted. I say we ought to reject this legislation, especially where it is so obscure in its tendency that it may produce a hardship.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I suggest to the Senator that this is not an appropriation bill to carry out any existing law at all. Every word in this bill is absolutely new legislation. There is not a line which entitles anybody to a dollar, whether we pass it or not, that he would get until we passed it. In the case of other appropriation bills, I suggest to my friend, it is quite different.

Mr. SARGENT. If it should be the judgment of the Senate that a river and harbor bill is not an appropriation bill in that sense which makes it unwholesome to put upon it general legislation affecting matters not really pertaining to the specific appropriations, then it ought to be put in the category of general appropriations, and if not, it ought not to receive any favor at the hands of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It never was in the category of a general appropriation bill.

Mr. SARGENT. It has never been called a general appropriation bill, but it is called a bill making appropriation for rivers and harbors. The rule does use the word "general" with reference to it. It has been sent heretofore to the Committee on Commerce instead of the Committee on Appropriations; but there is not a single suggestion which could be made against legislation on the omnibus bill or the legislative bill which will not apply to this.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It seems to me that the owner of the shore has a right of adjacency to the water just as much as he owns the land. It may be, and I have no doubt in many of these cases it is the fact that these breakwaters and piers are so situated that they would cut off the owner from that adjacency and from the use of it. I do not think the United States or any other government has any right to do that. If it is necessary in order to get to the water to cross one of these piers, I think they have got a right to cross it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Or cross anybody else's property?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Or cross anybody else's property. I do not think any government has a right to put a work between my property so as to destroy my right of adjacency to a great public highway.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose the Government owns the land that the work is put on?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Government does not own my land.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it owns its own land where it builds its works.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Government makes a work which cuts off the proprietor of a shore from his right of access to the water, the Government must pay him under the Constitution before it makes the work from the right of which it thus deprives him. I suppose nobody will deny that the right to the exclusive possession of works constructed by the Government belongs to the Government. If it has a constitutional power to construct them at all it must have a right to exclusive possession of them, and must assert that right so far as it is necessary for their preservation. We had a year or two ago a proposition to put the improvements at the mouth of the Mississippi under the absolute military control of the Secretary of War under a sort of quasi military law authorizing him to make rules and regulations and to punish people for the violation of those rules and regulations; or rather that they should be punished for the violation not of the statute enacted by Congress, but of such rules and regulations as should be made by the Secretary of War.

I do not know that there is any very great necessity for the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York. One might infer there was not from the fact, and a very singular fact it is, that so far as I can discover there is not one single line in the statute-books of the United States for the protection of the public works of the United States, even this very Capitol in which we are legislating, or any other public building of any sort or description. I may have overlooked some of the statutes, but so far as the index to the Revised Statutes shows, and I do not claim that that is perfection at all, I have not been able to find one single statute for the protection of the public buildings or public works of the United States. I dare say there are some that I have overlooked, but certainly there is a very great want of legislation upon that subject. That tends to show that there has been no very great necessity for any such legislation, but yet there may be.

I have a word to say upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin. I understand the Senator from Wisconsin to move to strike out that clause in the amendment of the Senator from New York which authorizes the Secretary of War to give a permit to use and occupy, so as to make the prohibition absolute. It seems to me nothing could be more unwise than that. What injury is done? Take the case of Cleveland which is brought up in this discussion. What injury is done by the use that is made of the pier at that place?

Mr. HOWE. Eight thousand dollars.

Mr. THURMAN. Eight thousand dollars; and what is $8,000 compared to more than $800,000 of benefit to the public every year by the very use that is made there? What is it? It is there that the railroad system and the navigation of the lake are connected and in a way that they could not be connected anywhere else. That connection is an absolute necessity. All that can be said, and properly said, is that inasmuch as the railroad companies use the pier there in that manner, they ought to contribute to its maintenance. That is the whole of it; but to say absolutely and positively that they shall not be allowed to use it at all, that no freight shall go over that pier, that communication between the land and the water shall be absolutely severed, would be simply monstrous. It would be far better for commerce there that you had never built the pier at all but had left it to private enterprise to build docks. But you have built it; it is your property; you are entitled to it. You have prevented anybody else from building it. You have prevented the railroad companies or the city of Cleveland or private enterprise from building it. And now will you say that instead of benefiting commerce by building that pier you will put an absolute barrier upon commerce? I venture to say that if my friend will go to Cleveland and look at it, he will never for a moment think of such a proposition as that which he has now made. These are not two piers away out in the lake; these are two piers that begin at the bluff bank at the mouth of the river. Right at the bluff bank where the railroads run along, right where the railroads or the merchants or the land-owners would have built their docks, you saw fit, and wisely enough, to go and build these piers. Did anybody suppose that when you were building them you meant to erect a barrier between the lake and the land? No, Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not insist upon that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HOWE. I do not propose any absolute barrier between the wharf of the Cleveland Railway Company and the waters in the harbor at all. One of two things must happen. Either the right to use this pier must be conferred by Congress direct, or you must vest in some officer the power which it is proposed here to vest in the Secretary of War, the power to lease all your piers and breakwaters everywhere. I do not think that power ought to be intrusted in the hands of any one agent. It is too irresponsible. He makes no report; you have no way of keeping an account of it, no way of holding him to responsibility. It is the simplest thing in the world if that railroad company want to enjoy this pier as a part of their wharf for them to ask us to make it a part of their wharf, and to put upon them the responsibility of doing by the pier just what they do by the wharf. "We built it, we give it to you; you just take care of it." Is there anything wrong or hard in that?

Mr. THURMAN. Let me say to the Senator that I would not be willing to give the exclusive right of the pier to that railroad company. That pier is used there not simply by the railroad company alone, by any means. Everybody uses it. Trucks pass over it by the hundred every day right where this little part of it is used and clear out to the end of the pier.

Mr. HOWE. Just as they use the dock, but for the convenience of those who own the wharf and for the convenience of nobody else whatever. Nobody wants to go across that pier except to go on to the wharf, and the power that can now let them go on to the wharf of the company, if the company owns the pier, can let them go across the pier. That is all there is of it. A disposition to make a free gift of your structure to a railway company is simply another way, as it seems to me, of permitting the railway company to use it for nothing and oblige us to keep it up for nothing.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me a moment? The very object, as I understand it, of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York is that the Secretary of War may compel this company which has the benefit of this pier to maintain it by such conditions as he may see fit to prescribe. If you cannot trust your Secretary of War, then find somebody else whom you can trust.

Mr. HOWE. Do I understand my friend from Ohio to say that he is willing to clothe the Secretary of War with the power to lease all the piers and docks of the United States?

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir; I do not think that there is any such thing as that contained in this proposition.

Mr. HOWE. Or to license the use of them?

Mr. THURMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HOWE. Is not that a lease?

Mr. THURMAN. The license to use them may be a very proper thing when the public interest requires that they shall be used.

Mr. HOWE. I ask my friend again, is he willing to clothe the Secretary of War with the power to lease all the piers and breakwaters?

Mr. THURMAN. Where the public interest will not suffer by it, I am.

Mr. HOWE. And allow him to be the judge of whether the public interest suffers or not? If the Senator is willing to do that, I have got his position. I am not willing, and I think you had better not consent to it or insist upon it. I think I have as much confidence in the present Secretary of War as in anybody I know of, and shall probably have a reasonable degree of confidence in the next one; and I hope always to confide in them more or less. I would not grant that power myself. It is an unnecessary one which will bring your Secretaries into grave responsibilities. If I were Secretary of War, I would not take the responsibility; but if you insist upon clothing him with it, so be it.

Mr. EATON. I hope this amendment will be voted down and for this reason——

Mr. WHYTE. Do you refer to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment?

Mr. EATON. So far as the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin goes it is very well; but I refer to the amendment to which that is an amendment. I hope it will be voted down for this reason simply: It is very evident to any individual who lives in the neighborhood of public works that a power of this sort ought to be carefully scanned before it is given. That the Secretary of War here in Washington should be able to determine with regard to who shall occupy for one day, or one hour, or one week public buildings in any part of the United States, is simply impossible. It would simply be destructive to commerce. Here is a breakwater, for instance, at New Haven or at Stonington. Suppose I desire to use it. If it is proper that the United States through its officials should determine whether I may use it for one week or not, let the collector at that port give me permission, not the Secretary of War here in Washington. I am by no means certain that anything of this sort is necessary, but I am very certain that it will be utterly impossible for the Secretary of War to transact a business of that character. I trust the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. BAYARD. I am of the impression that at the earlier part of this session I heard very strong objections made to the ingrafting of anything upon money bills other than matters appropriate thereto. Here is now, however, a proposition to make a general law entirely penal upon all persons who shall, without the consent of one Cabinet officer, use certain necessary public works, breakwaters, piers, and the like. It seems to me that there are many objections practically to this proposition, and also objections for want of constitutional power. In the eighth section of the first article the power to exercise exclusive jurisdiction is given to Congress over what is now the District of Columbia—

> And to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards and other needful buildings.

Under that clause unless there has been a cession of jurisdiction by the State to the General Government, the legislative power of the State still extends to the exclusion of the General Government. It is for that reason, I have no doubt, that a general law protecting public buildings or structures of the United States has not been placed heretofore upon the statute-book, because in many places these public works exist on territory the cession of legislative power over which has never yet been made by the State to the General Government. Therefore it seems to me that we should not certainly ingraft a general law of this kind upon an appropriation bill without paying heed to this constitutional restriction.

But independent of that question there is gross impracticability in the language of this proposed law. It prohibits the use of a breakwater without the consent of the Secretary of War. The use of the breakwater which lies at the mouth of the bay appurtenant to the State in which I live (and it is used by the commerce of the world almost) at different times in cases of storm is a necessity. They run in there at nightfall and they run out in the morning. They go in there for shelter in time of storm and they leave just so soon as safety will permit. Under certain circumstances, with the sudden storms arising on our coast, it is impossible for any merchant to know whether the occasion for seeking shelter behind the breakwater will come or not till the sudden gust shall come. Hatteras, for instance, the most dangerous point on our coast, is just out of the channel. This Delaware breakwater will sometimes have in the course of six hours as many as from three to five hundred vessels gathered there who will remain there possibly until the next day and possibly pass out in a few hours. How impracticable therefore it would be under the language of the amendment to fix a penalty for the use, for that is the language of this proposed law, of such a work as that without having the preceding license of an officer of the Cabinet!

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question? Does he understand that if a vessel anchors inside of the Delaware breakwater that is a use of the breakwater?

Mr. BAYARD. Unquestionably, under the language of the amendment. There is no other use which can be made excepting this. If the Senator will visit the Delaware breakwater he will find it has in it means of attaching vessels and mooring them for safety. That is a thing that arises under the emergency of the moment. The vessel may be in a sinking condition when she reaches there and wants to make fast to these various piles of stone that are arranged in the Delaware breakwater, and it has given the use of them for forty years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was inquiring of the anchorage inside. Is not that one method of shelter?

Mr. BAYARD. That is one method of use undoubtedly. To take shelter behind it is the usual method. To make fast to it for the purpose of safety is another method; and the necessity for that use can only be decided on the emergency, and that emergency occurs in times of storm and danger. As I said, it seems to me that it is inopportune and—I use the word with due respect—improper at this time to ingraft upon this money bill a feature of general legislation of a penal character, especially when, as I have suggested, it may be exceedingly doubtful whether the Government of the United States has had from the States that assignment of their jurisdiction which will enable us to exercise prohibitive legislation over the lands upon which the improvements have been made.

Mr. CONKLING. This in one sense is not my amendment. I did not hold the pen which wrote it. It was prepared by another Senator, and as I understand on consultation with still other Senators. I offered it in the absence of the Senator who chiefly prepared it. Before offering it I read it, and one thing occurred to me as an objection in detail, and that touches the penalty, which I thought might be too heavy. A Senator sitting near me expressed that opinion. Another thing occurred to me, which was matter of detail, and one or two others have been suggested.

I rise, however, to speak of the general purpose and spirit of the amendment, and I am surprised somewhat at the way in which that is encountered. The Senator from Delaware seems to have no suggestion to make with a view to perfecting the amendment, but only such suggestions as show that he differs with it as it stands. In the absence of any attempt to improve it, and in the presence of objections to any attempt at such an amendment, I have this to say: In the first place, a river and harbor bill is not a regular appropriation bill proceeding under standing laws, of which we have heard so much and of which I have heard so much more of late in the Senate than I think is wholesomely instructive; but I have nothing to say on that subject now. This has nothing to do with existing law. It is a bill which proceeds by itself in and of itself, referring to no existing law and gauged by no statutes that exist.

Therefore there can be no objection to legislation, I submit, upon such a bill. It is a bill proceeding as some Senators would maintain, under the vagrant clause of the Constitution, the power to regulate commerce, and as others would maintain under the provision of the Constitution conferring on Congress power to appropriate money for the general welfare. Proceeding under one or both of these clauses its object is to devote money to augmenting and improving the channels of commerce belonging to the nation. When it goes into creeks, and sedges, and sluices, such as riparian owners have a right to control, I conceive that it goes beyond the pale of power. When, however, it is confined to the gateways of the nation, for such the harbors are, to the great navigable rivers of the nation, and therefore the highways of national commerce, can it be possible that Senators mean to maintain that in all cases, or in any one case, we shall appropriate the general treasure of the nation to erect and maintain costly structures that they may do the office of a private wharf? Is it possible that expensive cut-stone masonry is to be founded, and reared, and maintained by yearly appropriation to the end that a railway company, or anybody else, may enjoy at the public cost wharfage, the solid, enduring foundation kept up at the public expense over which they may trundle their ponderous traffic, and by dint of which they may enjoy their revenue? Here lay yesterday a report which, brought up to the present time, alleges that one railway company enjoying a wharf, maintained at the public cost has reaped nearly $2,000,000 of savings of wharfage, and therefore profit to them.

Mr. President, can it be that Senators intend, under any possible version of the power to appropriate money to improve commerce or regulate it among the States, that we are to plant works, costly works, and maintain them forever by yearly appropriations, to be used in lieu of works which otherwise private individuals must build and maintain; and to be used not only to their damage and destruction for private advantage, for private profit, and under the unchallenged understanding that when they have thus been used, damaged, crushed, destroyed, they are to be reared again from the common treasure? I apprehend no Senator will undertake to defend such a doctrine as that; and if not, then I beseech the Senate, should we not address ourselves to perfecting this amendment; and if the penalty is too rigorous relax it; if the provisions are not right adapt them, but not to leave ourselves in the predicament of being told that when a corporation seizes a public work of the United States and the engineer reports to us that a military force will be necessary to dispossess them, we have nothing on earth to do except to sit meekly by and once a year make an appropriation to build it up, for fear if we did not we should not assert the right we have to it. It seems to me that that is a conclusion too lame and impotent for the Senate to rest upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly no one would desire more than myself to vote for any proposition that would protect public piers or any works built by the United States for the good of commerce. If this was a proposition of that kind, I certainly would vote for it; but it does seem to me that it goes too far. First, it makes a penitentiary offense of the most common, ordinary use of a pier. Forsooth, unless the person who is driven perhaps by the stress of necessity or by custom, and does what everybody does, can show the consent of the Secretary of War, he is liable to be indicted and sent to the penitentiary.

If the remedy is aimed at the particular case in point, it is totally unnecessary. Senators have entirely exaggerated the condition of things at Cleveland. There the Cuyahoga River, coming in contact with the lake, passes around the foot of a great bluff; I do not know how high, but I will say one hundred to one hundred and fifty feet high—quite a bluff. The Cleveland and Pittsburgh and other railroad companies, not this company alone but all the railroad companies, own pretty much all the land from the foot of the bluff, including all riparian rights to the lake and lying east of a certain pier built by the Government of the United States. The only way by which these great corporations can get to the lake or come into that city is by sweeping along down the bank of the lake and striking this Government pier at right angles, outside of the bluff and just where the bluff comes in contact with the waters of the lake.

Years ago Congress authorized the railroad companies to bridge this harbor, and now there is a bridge built by the Lake Shore road over these piers and resting on these very piers. That is a turn-bridge, so that it does not really impede commerce. Just below, outside of this, the Pittsburgh and Cleveland Railroad, as I understand under a contract with all the railroads, have built extensive warehouses and places where goods can be received and shipped. It is the only spot where it is possible to bring the business of the railroads in contact with the business of the lake. The character of the bluff, the character of the ground, the condition of affairs there, prevent that contact from being brought about anywhere else, because if the railroad was brought on the top of this bluff it would be impossible to lower and raise the enormous freight that passes at that particular place, from land to sea and from the sea to land. There alongside is that common wharf, because the wharf is used by everybody. Every boat that comes there, every schooner, every steamer, every canal-boat, that passes along this place laden with lumber or otherwise passing by, may be attached to this pier, and they all use the pier precisely to the extent that the Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad uses it; but they have built outside of the pier, east of the pier, their works. Besides they have extensive docks running out in parallel lines from this pier with breakwaters, and across in the face of them, and there that great business goes on, because they carry over their freight from the Cuyahoga River, which is the property of the people, not the property of the United States. It is the property of every citizen of the United States guaranteed by the fundamental law of Ohio, by the act which created it, as free to all. The people of the United States have to pass from the nature of things their property, their iron, their coal, their lumber, from the waters of the Cuyahoga River, which is not yours, over this pier into the warehouses built by the railroad to be transported for the wants of the world. Every officer of the railroad is to be sent to the penitentiary, every boat-owner, and every man who lands a vessel there is to be dealt with, because forsooth the Government of the United States have erected a pier between the navigable water of the Cuyahoga River and the only place where it can reach the great railroad commerce of the country. That is wrong. Senators have mistaken the facts. These railroad companies and these people are responsible men, and if the Government has any rights, or if the use of this pier by these railroads has been injurious to the Government, there is a remedy against them and it can be enforced.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the remedy?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator himself will provide a simple remedy to prevent this pier from abuse or misuse, I will vote for it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why does not the Senator provide it himself, if he wants it taken by the throat?

Mr. SHERMAN. I did propose a remedy and that remedy is ample. It is to authorize civil proceedings to be commenced against this railroad company or anybody else who uses the property of the United States to its injury. All that these people engaged in the commerce of Cleveland do is to transport and transfer their private property from a navigable stream of the United States over to the railroad warehouses and the railroad tracks, and they cannot do it except by crossing your pier.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If this proposition were based on any injury done to property of the United States, if the only effect it had was to protect the Government, I should vote for it. It seems to me the amendment is altogether too broad, and deprives every citizen of the United States from using in any manner, however slightly, any property of the United States enumerated in the amendment, without first coming to Washington and getting a permit from the Secretary of War. I can imagine very well how this would operate injuriously in a great many instances. Take for instance the Delaware breakwater, with which I am more familiar than I am with most other works of improvement. There is a breakwater established by the expenditure of some $2,000,000 for the protection of the commerce of the country. The Government seeing that that work was not complete, that the full protection which commerce required would not be complete without building out into the harbor thus made by the breakwater an iron pier, is now engaged in erecting such pier, and is expending some $250,000 or $300,000 on that pier. It is not yet completed. This bill contains a further appropriation of $30,000 for that pier. The object of the pier is that the commerce of the country which may take refuge in the harbor or breakwater may have the advantage of the pier and thereby communicate in cases of necessity with the shore. Yet if this amendment is agreed to, no man can even walk upon that pier without first coming and getting permission from the Secretary of War. The vessels in that harbor, however much distressed, could not land a crew or pass any portion of their crew to the land for succor or for aid. I think that that is entirely wrong. If the proposition was to hold any person responsible who does damage to the works of the Government, I would support it; but to exclude the use of it, the absolute use of it, without the permission of the Secretary of War, is entirely wrong. This bill for instance appropriates money for building locks on the Kanawha River, and yet no vessel could pass through those locks without permission. A vessel might perhaps come up from the Mississippi River and the captain would want to pass up the Kanawha, but before he could pass through one of the locks under this amendment as proposed, as I understand it, he must first get the permission of the Secretary of War.

Now, the adoption of this provision, according to my understanding of it, will embarrass the commerce of the country much more than it will do good in the protection of the interests of the Government in taking care of its property. Then look at the penalty. I do not know why we should always have our bills filled with the fearful penalties of fine and imprisonment for every violation of a law, however trivial. I would rather see a civil remedy provided against the parties who may damnify the property of the Government than to be holding up over the people of this country the pains and penalties of imprisonment in the penitentiary. I cannot vote for a proposition of that kind.

In my judgment, therefore, we had better let this whole thing alone. At any rate without proper consideration we ought not to attach to a bill of this kind such a provision. Certainly I will not vote for the bill with any such provision in it. If the object is to defeat the bill, it will have that effect so far as my vote is concerned. I will not vote for a bill creating penal offenses to put my fellow-citizens in the penitentiary; I do not care where the amendment comes from that requires it. If you provide a civil remedy against parties who may injure the public property of the country, I will vote for such a proposition; but I will not vote for this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] to the amendment of the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.]

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. MERRIMON. It seems to me that this amendment, if enacted into a law, would be a very wise provision to protect the property of the Government. I am not exactly sure that it ought to be made in this bill. With a view, however, to perfect it, I would suggest to the Senator from New York if it shall become a part of the bill, that it be amended in this way: Insert next after the words "United States" in line 6 the words "for purposes of business," and substitute the word "willfully" for the word "knowingly," in line 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina to the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think there is any objection to that.

Mr. MERRIMON. I think the word "willfully" is better than "knowingly." Take the case put awhile ago where a vessel in a storm is forced to go on the Government property; that act ought not to be punished.

Mr. OGLESBY. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina how far he means the expression "for purposes of business" to extend? Take the case of a vessel passing in between the piers from the lake and entering a river, the channel of which has been deepened or widened or both, and the Government has constructed stone walls or barriers along the banks of the river to prevent the caving in of the banks and thus to avoid obstruction to its navigation. Take the case of a vessel entering in between the piers, coming up the stream along the stone walls erected by the Government two or three feet wide, up against which the business of the city is all carried on; where the warehouses, store-houses, market-houses, retail establishments, elevators, &c., are built immediately against that stone wall. Does he mean or will the amendment be construed to mean that a vessel cannot run against that wall and discharge its cargo, and that persons occupying the buildings along the banks cannot cross that wall with their produce and put it on board of vessels without being characterized as carrying on business? Does he mean by those terms to exclude that sort of business? If he does, I think his amendment adds nothing whatever to the amendment suggested by the Senator from New York, and I can see that that Senator might very readily accept the suggestion. If, on the contrary, the Senator from North Carolina means by "business" a permanent occupation of the wharves, a permanent occupation of the piers, a permanent occupation of the breakwaters, I could get along with it with considerably less difficulty.

Look at the Chicago River for instance, a river that runs through the heart of the city, that is walled in as it were to prevent its banks from breaking in and stopping the channel. To say that steam-tugs, sailing-craft, steam-craft cannot go up by the side of an elevator or of the wholesale houses along there and tie to that wall or pass over that wall without committing a misdemeanor is going further than I am willing to go by my vote. I would inflict no penalty on commerce or any of the agents or instruments of commerce for such an occupation or such a use of a wall or a pier as that, whereas I should be perfectly willing to vote that no pier and no wall should be permanently and continuously occupied by any company or any person for gain or profit or business. I could go for that, but I certainly could not accept the construction which I think the language naturally bears.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not intend the words to have any such construction as that attributed to them by the Senator from Illinois; nor do I think if this amendment should become a law any court would so construe them. If a breakwater is made for the accommodation of navigation and such purposes as he has indicated, it would be perfectly legitimate.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Senator misunderstood me. I did not say a breakwater. The breakwater is another instrument of defense around a harbor, altogether different from lining the banks of rivers through cities. Those are walls made to protect the water from the falling in and caving in of the banks, not to break the water off, but to break the dirt off.

Mr. MERRIMON. I do not care what improvement it is, whether it is a breakwater or whether it is a wharf; whatever it may be, if it is made for general use, to be used in a particular way in navigating a vessel or in unloading a vessel, every one would have the right to use it according to law. The proper construction to be placed upon these words is this: Wherever any one shall be using any public work of the character embraced by the amendment otherwise than as the law allows for purposes of business, in that case he shall be subject to the penalty. I think it is very plain that that is the only construction that can be placed upon it. If the law allows any shipper or any one having charge of a vessel to use the work for a lawful purpose, then it would be no violation of this proposition if it were the law to-day; but if he shall use it in a way other than that allowed by law for purposes of business, in that case he would be subject to the penalty. It seems to me these words are appropriate in this view. In the case of piers and many other public works along rivers persons might want to walk along them occasionally for pleasure and it would be very absurd to say that such penalties should be imposed upon persons who happened to walk on a pier or any other public work; but where they undertake to use it for purposes of business, and do it knowingly and willfully, then they ought to be subject to heavy penalties.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I think it is probably true that there should be some legislation to protect these works; but I submit that we are not prepared to make the appropriate legislation now. This provision would apply to every work built by the Government to improve rivers or harbors making it penal to trespass upon them, and I fear we should interrupt uses of some of these works that are very necessary and very beneficial to commerce. My suggestion is that this legislation should be had after an application to the War Department that we may have from the engineers and those who are familiar with the subject facts showing that there are wrongs done and what their general character is, so that we may frame penal legislation with more care than we can now. Therefore I submit we had better take this up as a separate subject, have a report from a committee which can be based upon information showing the character of legislation that will properly protect the public works and will not be a great obstruction to business in the ways suggested by the Senator from Illinois and some that I can imagine myself in reference to a few harbors that I am familiar with.

Mr. HARVEY. I presume the object of this amendment is to prevent the permanent occupation and use of public works by persons or corporations engaged in commercial business to the exclusion of other persons and corporations engaged in like business. If that is the object of the amendment, I am certainly in favor of the principle; but I agree with the Senator from New York who has just spoken that it had better be made the subject of a separate bill and considered in another connection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] to the amendment of the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.]

Mr. CONKLING. I accept the amendment as I have a right to do having in form offered it, so that there need be no vote on that. After hearing the Senator from Illinois on my right [Mr. OGLESBY] and feeling that there is force in what he says, I suggest an amendment which if adopted will cause the first two lines of this proposed provision to read:

> It shall not be lawful for any person or corporation to continuously or permanently use or occupy any pier, breakwater, or other work, &c.

Mr. THURMAN. You have a right to modify your amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. I know I have; but I do not want to modify it without myself considering for a moment and getting the Senator, if he will, to consider the effect.

Mr. MORRILL. I would suggest the addition of the word "exclusively."

Mr. CONKLING. There the Senator will be "hoist with his own petard." He will scarcely find a case where one single person goes, without community with anybody else, and occupies exclusively one of these structures. In a case which I do not like to refer to because I do not want to be invidious, it appears that there is one king-bee in the hive that occupies, and then swarming in along with him are several other small interests, and it is all very good for them; but it is pretty hard for the people generally engaged in commerce and I should like to have a little share for the Senator's constituents and others who are called upon once a year to build up what is broken down by this proceeding. If it says "exclusively," for the reason I have stated and for an additional one which I might state, I do not think the statute will be operative; but if we say "whoever shall continuously and permanently"—those are the words used by the Senator from Illinois—squat upon the pier and stay there so that they will not go off, so that the engineer reports that it would require military force to dispossess them or to enable him to go on and do anything with the pier, then it would take hold.

Now I have a word to say to my colleague in answer to his suggestion. I do not know whether he means to vote for the river and harbor bill as it stands or not. Assuming that he does, and that he is a friend of the bill, knowing as I do that he is a friend to some of the appropriations which it contains, I make to him this suggestion: I rather think from what I have heard that there may come a time when this bill will need friends; it is possible it may be scant of votes; and I also infer from what I hear and what has been revealed, not in one case only but less publicly revealed in two or three other cases, that there may be several Senators here who feel that if they are building piers or works of another sort—for it is not piers alone—for a railroad company or a coal company or a company engaged in getting out lumber or cord-wood, it may not make them any more animated than they would otherwise be in supporting this bill. Hence I believe in the interest of the bill that if my colleague or some other good lawyer in this body will take a little pains to perfect this amendment so that it will do no harm and so that in the estimation of some Senators it will guard some of those appropriations from being used for purposes which they believe to be wholly private purposes, and therefore in the sense of the Constitution unlawful purposes, he will be very likely to augment the chances of the bill. And therefore although, as I repeat, I did not prepare this amendment and probably should not have prepared it, but did offer it in the absence of Senators who did prepare it, I think he cannot devote a little time to any more useful or wholesome purpose touching this bill than to put in some safeguard which will prevent our receiving a report at the next session of Congress from the War Department and the Engineer Bureau that unless they are allowed to proceed under the war power by military force they cannot get enough possession of the piers which we have built up to repair them. I confess that every time I hear that proposition stated, or state it myself, it strikes me anew with some wonder that such a thing can be that a man, reducing it to the illustration of private ownership, who owns a work and has built it, says that without military force he cannot enjoy it himself for the uses for which it was built and cannot dispossess intruders and trespassers who monopolize it and devote it to their own use.

But, Mr. President, I have no interest in this amendment except that which I state, and certainly we should not pass an amendment going further than it ought to go; but I submit that if it is changed so as to be restricted to cases where they take continuous and permanent possession of public works for private purposes, it would be very difficult for any member of this body to object to that. Whether the statute will then be of enough vigor to enable you to apply it is a question which we must take the chance of; but it does seem to me that we ought to file some caveat, we ought to give some notice of some kind that this sort of proceeding shall stop.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Secretary read the proposition again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. It shall not be lawful for any person or corporation to continuously or permanently use or occupy any pier, breakwater, or other work of the United States for the improvement of rivers or harbors or navigation in the United States for purposes of business without the written consent of the Secretary of War and without compliance with such conditions as he shall prescribe; and such consent may be canceled at any time on one month's notice. And any person who, whether acting under the authority of a corporation or otherwise, shall willfully violate the foregoing provisions shall on conviction thereof be punished by imprisonment for not more than one year or by fine not greater than $500. This section shall take effect on the 1st day of October, 1876.

Mr. CONKLING. Is there any objection to that now?

Mr. KERNAN. It has been changed since I heard it before to "continuously or permanently."

Mr. CONKLING. Does my colleague see any objection to that?

Mr. KERNAN. I cannot see any objection to that. It may have some good effect now.

The question being put, a division was called for on the amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. I will modify my amendment. Let us take the question in the best form. I modified my amendment so as to incorporate these words, finding that other Senators approved of them——

Mr. ALLISON. It is not modified.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senate voted under a misapprehension.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I wish to ask the Senator from New York one question: How corporations are to be punished under the language of the amendment?

Mr. CONKLING. If my friend will look to the amendment he will see that it includes corporations. Then he puts to me very naturally how are you to reach corporations. It has been decided in Massachusetts, for example, that a corporation can be indicted for assault and battery. I rather think if that is the law, that a corporation can be treated as a trespasser for coming forbidden upon a close not their own.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Can they be imprisoned?

Mr. CONKLING. There is a subsequent part of the amendment which the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] has made a suggestion about. If the Senator thinks he had better strike out the imprisonment—I rather think, however, he had better not strike it out—that is a thing which can be done and the fine will go against the corporation. But a corporation not being a natural person acts only by its agents, and therefore if I, being the agent of a corporation, go upon a pier and take possession of it, I do it at my peril. In trespass all are principals, and in a misdemeanor or offense there is no agency, but I take my risk in my hand, and if they catch me doing this upon a pier I cannot answer this section by pleading that I am a conductor or ticket-seller of a steamboat company or a railway company. That would not answer the purpose with even a majority of whoever might try me as a court.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. To a certain extent the Senator is correct undoubtedly, but the penalty of imprisonment it is very plain cannot apply to a corporation.

Mr. CONKLING. Strictly to a corporation it might not; but inasmuch as a corporation must act through men, and it does apply to them, you have there the safeguard.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator from New York to remember, as he does no doubt, the condition of affairs at Chicago, and think how such a law as this would apply there. If I remember correctly there are immense elevators, the most important agencies of the great commerce of Chicago, built out alongside of these very piers, clear out far in the lake. They carry the railroad tracks, just as at Cleveland, alongside the piers to the other side of the elevator, and there the elevator built alongside the pier is using the pier every day; that is, all the wheat that goes to the city of New York from the city of Chicago is passed from the railroad to the elevator over the pier. It is used every day by everybody, especially by the owners of the elevator. It is not possible to carry on the business of the lakes otherwise. I suppose it is the same in Milwaukee.

Mr. CONKLING. I think the Senator's attention has been withdrawn a moment since the amendment was changed. As it is now it certainly would not act upon that, and I am free to say that I do not think it ought to. There may be force in what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] said that we ought to so change it that this would in some way be the subject of joint contribution; but this does not affect that, and I do not think it should. It simply provides now that if persons or corporations take permanent possession and continuous possession of this work, then they must have some understanding with the Secretary of War about it, and he has power to interfere when it gets to be a grievance and say "Now you must limit this to the use I prescribe," if they persevere then he can act under the statute.

Mr. SHERMAN. Here, on the other hand, these buildings that have been put there by the acquiescence of the Government, to say the least, to promote the public interest and promote commerce have cost perhaps half a million, I think some of them more than that, perhaps a million of dollars; I have heard of one costing a million and a half of dollars. That is a permanent thing, therefore. It may be said their occupation of the pier is a permanent occupation, a continuous occupation.

Mr. CONKLING. Not at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. They do it every day and every hour; and at any moment a Secretary of War who chose to abuse the power conferred on him might at once arrest the whole progress of this enormous business. It does seem to me that we ought not to interfere in this way with what has gone along without objection and without law and without complaint, except as to the amount of $8,000, and I do not care who is made to pay that. If the Senator or anybody will make a proposition that will compel the railroad companies at Cleveland to repair, or anybody who uses a Government pier to repair, any loss or damage done to the pier by reason of their use or occupation, I shall be perfectly willing to vote for that. Indeed, I say that it is right that the Government of the United States ought not to maintain piers for the benefit of wharves and where the wharfage use of these piers does injury to the Government, impairs the foundation of the piers, or causes damage, some provision of law ought to be made, carefully guarded, by which the corporation should be compelled to pay that loss. But the use of these piers continuously and permanently is a necessary use in order to carry on the business of the people, and is a necessary use to make the harbor available and the piers available. Look at Chicago and the enormous business that is done there; and in Buffalo it is the same. I saw the thing there with the honorable Senator from New York. A train of cars comes in on one side of a great elevator. The elevator is owned by an elevator company; the pier is owned by the Government; the river is public property. The use of all these different great agencies of modern civilization has been carried on for years to the advantage of the public at large. If the use by the elevator should be injurious to the pier, the Government ought to have the power to require the elevator company to repair any damage caused by it. If the railroad has caused any injury to the elevator, it ought to be required to repair that damage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The tenant ought to keep the landlord's property in repair. That is the general rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why do you not say so?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not regard it as landlord and tenant.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why do you not say that if in the use of a public pier any corporation or person shall injure the pier or do damage to the pier then there ought to be a remedy, and it ought to be a civil remedy, not a penitentiary remedy?

Mr. CONKLING. Why does not my honorable friend propose it?

Mr. SHERMAN. I did. I offered a proposition as an amendment to the very clause, so far as that particular case was concerned. I am willing to extend it to all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How would it do to add—would this agree with my friend's motion?

Any person who shall unlawfully injure or unlawfully occupy (except in case of stress of weather) any pier, property, or other work of the United States for the improvement of rivers or harbors or navigation in the United States, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, &c.

Or, if that is too much, a fine not exceeding what the violator is willing to pay. How would that do?

Mr. SHERMAN. I should say, on the contrary, that the remedy ought to be a civil remedy. He should be reqnired to repair the damage done, or in a suit to be brought by the United States to pay the damages. There is no trouble in dealing with this case. Wherever a company invests a million of dollars, or even $20,000, in the construction of a work alongside of a pier and does damage to that pier, it furnishes itself the security. I would make the property, as in the whisky cases, responsible for the damage done. Further than that it does not seem to me wise to go.

Mr. CONKLING. If I am not out of order, the Senator from Ohio has brought us to a time when I want to make one remark, and I wish I could get to it the attention of every Senator. Having a knowledge of river and harbor bills for a good many years, I believe if you might by an amendment such as we are discussing or in some other way separate from public works the idea that they can be used as private property, you would strike off a large percentage of all the applications for river and harbor improvements. To make plain my meaning, let me give an illustration. Wherever you find the terminus of a railroad, you find in that fact a great and pressing inducement to a harbor improvement. We can all see that for just and proper reasons inducements arise in such a case. But the particular thing to which I point is this: If there is a railway company that wishes to deliver coal in place of building a wharf to deliver coal, it wants if possible to have that wharf constructed at the public expense, and so with piers and with a variety of other works which can be found in this present report of the engineers. If you once establish the fact that they cannot occupy as their own that pier without paying for it as they would pay for any other wharf, that moment in many of these cases the great push for appropriations will cease.

Mr. President, it is not to touch a case like Buffalo, the local geography of which I think was not sharply present in the mind of my honorable friend from Ohio when he made his remarks. He will not find a case in Buffalo where the railroad runs, not on the land side of the elevator, but on the water side, a case where the railroad runs on the pier, but where the Erie Railroad or the New York Central runs its cars along the side of the elevator from which the legs go down into the hold of the vessel to snatch up the grain and put it in the elevator and deliver it over on the other side; but he will find elevators standing along normal to the basin or the water, and on the other side of those buildings is the railway track on which cars run underneath and over on the other side this cargo is delivered into them. They do not use the pier; they do not crush any masonry built by the Government. They are on the other side of the building. It stands between them and the water, down into which the Senator saw the long legs of the elevator put, taking out of the hold of a vessel and having disappeared beyond his view with almost incredible quickness the largest cargo that comes down in bulk.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was unfortunate if I described that at Chicago differently. The railroad is always on the left and the pier on the right.

Mr. CONKLING. Precisely.

Mr. SHERMAN. And the big building between.

Mr. CONKLING. Then my honorable friend will see that his case of an elevator is just the case that does not touch this. Why? Because by their own apparatus they connect the elevator with the hold of the vessel; the cargo passes off through the legs of the elevator, and my friend and a procession at the same time could march along on the pier, and he never would even know, unless he looked, that a great stream and torrent of grain was passing up from the hold of the vessel that lies outside into this tall building which becomes its receptacle. I do not wish, of course, anything which would interfere with that. I do wish if possible that we should come to a time when a man who wants to ship cord-wood or lumber will not come here and ask for an appropriation to build a pier or a wharf which will enable him to bring it conveniently up and load it from there into a vessel, and the same thing with corporations. I want it stopped, first because of what I conceive to be its illegality, and second because of what I believe to be the diminution of these appropriations many of which are applied, I will not say squandered, to such uses.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not know that I shall object to this amendment when perfected; but it seems to me that the debate has disclosed such a diversity of opinion with reference to the effect and scope of the amendment that it had better be eliminated from this bill. We have lived a great many years in this country improving harbors from year to year without any such provision.

Mr. CONKLING. Building wharves.

Mr. ALLISON. Building wharves or whatever. We have before us now a provision prepared by two or three eminent Senators and amended four or five times, and I have just seen the handy fingers of the honorable Senator from Michigan [Mr. CHRISTIANCY] at this amendment, and I have no doubt he will perfect it still more.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has it been amended oftener than the bill has been in other respects?

Mr. ALLISON. It does seem to me that a careful committee may take hold of this question and do the subject better justice than we are likely to do here by tinkering over it for an hour or two at the tail end of this bill. The provision itself does not take effect until the 1st of October, by the amendment, so that only two months will intervene between that time and the next session of the Senate, when the Judiciary Committee, or the Committee on Commerce, or some other standing committee of this House familiar with the subject, could prepare a bill just to the Government of the United States and just to all the people of this country, because I do fear that at many places this amendment, if adopted in any form that it is likely to take, will do injustice to very good people who are engaged in one way and another in transacting business at these different places where harbors and piers have been erected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question? Is it any part of the business of the people of the United States to furnish out of its Treasury places for private people to do business and take possession of?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not. The Senator does not need to ask me that question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is very opportune to the Senator's argument.

Mr. ALLISON. It does seem singular that this great abuse all over this country has lain dormant for forty or fifty years and only been discovered at the tail end of this river and harbor bill. Therefore I suggest that if this matter is so vital and so important that you must make penal provisions with reference to it, put people in the penitentiary and fine them a thousand dollars or more, it is sufficiently important to require the careful attention and consideration of the Judiciary Committee of this body.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I move to amend the amendment in the latter part so as to read:

And any person who, whether acting under the authority of a corporation or otherwise, shall willfully violate the foregoing provisions shall, on conviction thereof, be punished, if an individual, by imprisonment not more than one year, or by fine not greater than $500, and if a corporation by fine of not more than $5,000 nor less than $500.

Mr. CONKLING. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York, as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WEST. Let it be reported as it stands now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SECTION —. That it shall not be lawful for any person or corporation to continuously or permanently use or occupy any pier, breakwater, or other work of the United States for the improvement of rivers or harbors or navigation in the United States, for purposes of business, without the written consent of the Secretary of War, and without compliance with such conditions as he shall prescribe; and such consent may be canceled at any time on one month's notice. And any person who, whether acting under the authority of a corporation or otherwise, shall willfully violate the foregoing provisions shall, on conviction thereof, be punished, if an individual, by imprisonment not more than one year or by fine not greater than $500, and if a corporation, by fine not more than $5,000 nor less than $500. This section shall take effect on the 1st day of October, 1876.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conkling, Edmunds, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Kernan, Merrimon, Morrill, Oglesby, Thurman, and West—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Boutwell, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Key, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Randolph, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sherman, Windom, Withers, and Wright—28.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bogy, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Conover, Dawes, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Logan, Morton, Norwood, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Wadleigh, Wallace, and Whyte—29.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer the following amendment, to come in as a last section to the bill; and on it I ask for the yeas and nays:

Any person who shall unlawfully injure or unlawfully occupy—except in case of stress of weather—any pier, breakwater, or other work of the United States for the improvement of rivers or harbors, or navigation in the United States, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $100.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I would suggest to the Senator from Vermont to strike out "except in case of stress of weather." I do not think that would be an unlawful occupation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It might be unlawful in the sense of a trespass, and therefore I want to make it as acceptable as possible and ascertain if it is possible to put even the slightest check upon the sort of thing which seems to be going on at some places.

Mr. McMILLAN. I voted against the last amendment and I shall feel compelled to vote against this. I believe there is a wrong, perhaps, which requires some legislation, but I think the circumstances are such as to require any legislation proposed to be carefully considered by a committee, so that such legislation may be framed and placed upon the statute-book as will be certain to accomplish the purposes intended by it, and I think by legislating at this time and in this way great injury might be done to the interests of commerce where no such injury is intended. That is my only reason for opposing this amendment; but if a provision of this kind can be referred to a proper committee and receive the consideration of such a committee, I should very cheerfully support it.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 15, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cockrell, Conkling, Cragin, Edmunds, Hamlin, Howe, Kernan, Merrimon, Morrill, Oglesby, Thurman, Wadleigh, and West—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Boutwell, Cooper, Dennis, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Harvey, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Key, McCreery, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Randolph, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sherman, Windom, Withers, and Wright—26.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bogy, Booth Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Davis, Dawes, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Logan, Mitchell, Morton, Norwood, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Wallace, and Whyte—30.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see it has not got quite soft enough yet. I will try it again. I propose this amendment:

Any person who shall unlawfully injure—

Leaving out occupation entirely and confining it to mere injury—"any pier, breakwater," &c., "shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Any person who shall unlawfully injure any pier, breakwater, or other work of the United States for the improvement of rivers or harbors or navigation in the United States shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $100.

Mr. SHERMAN. I simply desire to say that this proposition and all propositions of this kind are general legislation. This is general legislation applying to a great multitude of cases, and it ought to be referred to the appropriate committee. I shall vote against it on that ground. I am told by the Senator who has the bill in charge that there is no legislation on this bill of a general character. There is legislation affecting and regulating the expenditure of particular sums named in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Ohio having no further objection to offer to the amendment itself, comes at last to the solid ground that this is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of a general character.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And legislation of a general character. What is the general character of this legislation? Its general character is just as general as the bill is, and not a bit more. The bill provides $5,000,000 to construct, improve, repair, and protect public works of internal improvement. This amendment proposes that if any person shall willfully and unlawfully injure one of these works of public improvement, he shall be subjected to the slight fine of $100, which will not send him to the penitentiary. Now, the Senator is struck with astonishment and says this is general legislation. It is not general legislation. It is specific legislation, applicable to the specific works that $5,000,000 of the money of the people of the United States is to be appropriated to build up and take care of. That is what it is, and nothing more. The objection that we have all or many of us made to legislating on appropriation bills that were merely to furnish money to carry on the Government according to the requisitions of existing law, is one thing; but when you sail out with a bill that has not in it any provision to carry out any existing law, but is absolutely fresh legislation though on an old subject, then in order to protect the uses to which we apply this money we propose that if any person commits an injury upon these works he shall be made responsible for it in a small penalty. That is the proposition.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have had no opportunity to look at the statutes of the United States. If this matter was referred to a committte, that committee probably would examine it. It seems to me very strange if in all the legislation there is not some provision, some statute against malicious mischief or against destroying the public works of the United States or the works for improving the navigation of the rivers. The effect of this proposed statute is to reduce all those penalties down to $100 and to make that the punishment for all this mischief. Therefore it seems to me that this statute may be doing great damage. It may be really repealing many of the penalties which exist now for the protection of these very works.

Besides, the Senate has several times by its vote indicated that it did not wish to legislate upon this subject without its being referred to a committee, and I do not think that any amendment can be so drawn that I would vote for it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I feel perfectly sure of that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. You may be assured of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have been sure of it for some time. I will modify my amendment by putting the penalty up to not exceeding a thousand dollars. I do not think that I shall lose any votes by it, and it will make it look a little more respectable. Now I wish to say to my friend from New Jersey that several gentlemen have examined the statutes of the United States to see if there was any earthly way under existing law to prohibit the willful violation of the rights of the United States against the protest of the engineers and where nothing but the Army could be brought to bear to protect our works from absolute injury and destruction. Now, whether on a bill to which it is perfectly germane and to protect the very objects of the bill, it is possible to get a majority of this Senate to say that for such a piece of misconduct, not occupation, not use, but mere willful injury, the persons who do that thing shall be brought under the penalty of law, is the question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not agree that the river and harbor bill is not like any other appropriation bill. It is a bill to carry on existing works and to commence new works, and it ought to be treated as and is in its nature an appropriation bill.

As to general legislation the Senator from Vermont made a very interesting speech here the other day, one of great ability, to show that the conduct of the House of Representatives in undertaking to legislate in a wholesale manner upon an appropriation bill was not right and that we might very fairly stand upon that position. Here is an attempt to legislate not as to the particular works but as to all works, not those that are embraced in this bill but as to all the works of the United States, and all the property of the United States, to protect them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. O, no, sir; only river and harbor works for which this bill provides.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are many hundreds of millions of dollars, I may say, invested in other rivers and other harbors in works completed; and yet this section extends to them all. It is a penal law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. And are you to put on a river and harbor bill all the laws that we pass, all the penal statutes that ought to be invented by the Judiciary Committee, all the commercial regulations that ought to be invented by the Committee on Commerce? If so, there is no virtue in the rule we have been acting on. If this amendment is adopted, what can we say to the House when they have undertaken to change the salaries of all officers of the Government from the President down, the salaries they provided for being appropriated for in the bill that they sent to us? If they cannot change the salaries that are provided for in those bills, how can we on this bill put a penal statute as to public improvements that have been finished fifty years ago? I am perfectly willing to do anything to protect the public property; but the suggestion made by the Senator from New Jersey is perfectly correct, that this matter ought to be referred to the proper committee to examine it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me ask the Senator if he has not himself moved to this very bill an amendment of legislation respecting the east pier in Cleveland Harbor?

Mr. SHERMAN. And that was perfectly proper, because the rule expressly authorizes where a particular sum of money is appropriated for a particular purpose an amendment of a legislative character to be offered in regard to that particular appropriation. The rule expressly provides for it, and that is perfectly germane always to every appropriation bill and is not controverted by any Senator whatever. That is where a particular appropriation is made, anything that directs the mode and manner of its expenditure is proper and pertinent to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is just what the House have done about salaries. They appropriate money for salaries and provide that what they appropriate shall be in full for all that the men do.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we are all astute enough to see the difference between a particular provision as to how a particular sum of money appropriated in a bill shall be expended and what results shall come from a general appropriation.

Mr. THURMAN. No one can deny the propriety of this proposition as an abstract proposition. The only objection to it is that it is proposed as a part of an appropriation bill. I leave it to those who have discussed that question whether it is proper on this bill or not. The Senator from Vermont says that the rule that no general legislation shall be had in appropriation bills applies only to those bills which appropriate money in pursuance of law for the necessary support of the Government, (and that is a very strong proposition,) and does not apply to a bill of this sort which is not necessary to maintain or support or carry on the Government. I leave that, however, to those who see fit to enter upon that discussion.

But what I have now to say is that my friend from Vermont has got down to what is a very fine point in this business, and that he might just as well give up. His amendment is not legislation that will get at the evil. The present proposition belongs to general legislation and does not at all touch the grievance which has been considered. I move, in hope that it will meet his assent and that of others, to strike out all after the word "that" in his amendment and insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby directed to report to Congress on the first Monday of December next what legislation is in his opinion necessary to protect the the breakwaters, piers, and other public works constructed by the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He will say that an appropriation of $10,000,000 is what is necessary to protect them. That is all we call upon him to do.

Mr. THURMAN. I mean against unlawful injury or occupation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would it not be a good thing to say it then, if that is what you mean?

Mr. THURMAN. Insert "against trespass upon or injury to the same."

Mr. CONKLING. I can see no objection to this amendment as it is modified now; except that it repeats inadequately what I take to be the existing law. It is manifestly under the statutes touching the Secretary of War, the Engineer Corps, and the doing of river and harbor work, the duty of the Secretary of War in his report to present any facts bearing upon that subject. It manifestly was his duty to do it on the several occasions when he sent here reports, some of which I have read, calling attention in one instance, and it is not the only one, to this very thing for which the Senator from Ohio now inquires, to wit: not only trespass upon the piers of the United States, but damage done to them. And it is the duty of the President of the United States in sending his message to us to send along with it the report of the Secretary of War and the report of the Engineer Department which the Secretary of War by appending makes a part of his report. All that is the law now. All that, for aught I see, will be the law if this amendment is adopted; but the Senator from Ohio will take no offense I hope when I say that I cannot discover that this will add one particle of weight to the duty now imposed by law upon the President, the Secretary of War, and the head of the Engineer Department.

If the honorable Senator from Ohio will take the trouble to turn over the leaves of the last report, or the report before that, or the report before that, he will find in one case in all of them, and in other cases in some of them, attention sharply called to the abuse at which these amendments have been aimed, some of them running through a series of reports; so that he understands that is his duty now. In one case there was a specific recommendation that a certain trespasser ought to be compelled to do certain things, and the words of the recommendation were "It is recommended to Congress to require that arrangement to be made." Now the honorable Senator puts at the end of this bill a little notice to the Secretary of War that he is expected to keep on telling this story to Congress. Well, the best of men will bear watching. I do not think it will hurt the Secretary of War any or do us any good.

Mr. THURMAN. I have a word to say. If it is the duty of the Secretary of War to report to Congress what my amendment proposes he shall report, and if he has not performed that duty in time past through all the long years that the law has existed it is time to waken him up. If this provision be adopted, then he will make the report.

Mr. CONKLING. But he has performed the duty. He has made the report, and it lies on our tables.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I cannot vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio. It seems to me that that is rather a severe measure. I felt at the outset of this debate as though I should like to do a little something to check these wrongs; but I have learned in the course of it already that this right to use the piers and breakwaters of the United States is one of the inalienable rights of our people. The only thing I think left for us to do is to amend the Declaration of Independence and include among those inalienable rights there set forth not merely the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, but the right to use the piers and breakwaters of the United States. But having recognized that as one of the inalienable rights, why do you wish to threaten the people with the deprivation of those rights? Shall we not lay ourselves liable to some sort of process for slandering their title? Here is an intimation, quite plain, quite specific, that the Secretary of War may possibly make a report which will incite us to trample on that right, to abrogate it, in point of fact to snatch it away from the people. I do not think it is worth while to hold out any threat of that sort, but leave the people in the quiet, the profitable enjoyment of this right.

Besides, it seems to me there is another objection to it. It throws the whole penalty, if there is a wrong in the use of this property, not upon those who commit the wrong, but upon the Secretary of War.

The Senator from Vermont has proposed a penalty of $100, not to exceed that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have modified it up to a thousand.

Mr. HOWE. To be imposed upon those who committed the wrong. The Senator could not vote for that; that was selfish. The Senator from Ohio concludes that, although we will not put $100 on those who will commit the wrong, we will put on the Secretary of War the penalty of making a report here which, when it comes in, will be how instructive to the Senate I will not undertake to say. But if we cannot come to the conclusion to protect this property without a report of the Secretary of War, I fear we shall not with a report. If we mean to protect this property, if we mean to secure it to the Government of the United States, if we mean to protect it against trespassers and against injury for private profit, I take it we know just as well how to do it to-day as we shall know after having heard from the Secretary of War.

Mr. THURMAN. These works are under the charge and control of the Secretary of War. I think it is well to hear from him whether any legislation is necessary for their protection. That is matter of detail of which this Senate cannot necessarily take notice, cannot have the information upon which to legislate without its being communicated to the Senate Here is an officer charged with the superintendence and control of these great public works. I think for one that we ought to hear from him whether legislation is necessary in the direction of the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has he not already reported to us over and over again that in one case in the Senator's own State wrong-doers have taken exclusive possession and exclude the authorities of the United States and that a military force is necessary to get possession?

Mr. THURMAN. A subordinate officer of the Engineer Department has made that report, and that is all.

Mr. CONKLING. O, no!

Mr. EDMUNDS. That the Secretary has transmitted to us.

Mr. CONKLING. The subordinate officer has made it to the chief; the chief has made it to the Secretary of War; the Secretary of War has made it to the President; and the President has sent it here with his message.

Mr. THURMAN. And after all that red-tape it is nothing but the report of Colonel Cram, the subordinate officer. I want to know from the responsible head of the Department whether or not the facts require that there should be legislation.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator expect the Secretary of War to go around in person and look at all these works?

Mr. THURMAN. No; but I do expect that if he is worthy to be Secretary of War, through all the agencies under his control and subject to his direction he will get such facts as any other minister in any other government in the world would submit to the legislature.

Mr. HOWE. I would suggest to the Senator from Vermont whether he had not better change the penalty imposed in his amendment so as to provide that whenever any person is convicted of a trespass upon any of the piers or breakwaters of the United States the Secretary of War shall be sentenced to make a report. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARVEY. If it be in order I wish to express the belief that whenever the Committee on the Judiciary or the Committee on Commerce shall bring forward a bill for the protection of this property it will receive the assent of nearly if not every Senator.

Mr. MORRILL. I think this last proposition of the Senator from Ohio is altogether too severe, and I move to amend by inserting after the words "Secretary of War" the words—

The railroad corporation now occupying the pier at Cleveland thereto consenting. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. Is that in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will look and see.

Mr. THURMAN. That implies that there is somebody on this floor representing that railroad interest. I have to say to the Senator from Vermont that if there is any such person it is not I. I have said again and again in this discussion that in my judgment that railroad company ought to maintain that pier. I have said again and again that that railroad company derives benefits from that pier that ought to be a sufficient ground for compelling it to maintain it, and I voted for the proposition of his colleague for the very purpose of compelling that company to maintain that pier, knowing at the same time that the use made of that pier by that railroad company was worth millions of dollars to the people of the United States, knowing that it is the sheerest and most narrow-minded idea in the world to condemn that use. But I am not here to say that that railroad company ought not to maintain that pier. What is it that I propose by my amendment? The Senator's colleague proposed an amendment that seemed to wake up nearly half the Senators on this floor. Every Senator who represented a State in which there was a work of public improvement was alarmed lest some interest might be interfered with, lest some fisherman, some schooner interest, some steamboat interest, some barge interest might be interfered with by the Senator's colleague's amendment. I thought the Senator's colleague's proposition was a wise provision and voted for it; but it was voted down, voted down in the Senate; and now the Senator seeks to turn into ridicule a proposition to obtain from the head of that Department that has charge of this whole subject the information on which we want to legislate by a particular fling at the port of Cleveland!

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, it was not my purpose to throw any imputation upon the Senator from Ohio or anybody else; but it seemed to me that we had spent almost the entire day upon this proposition beginning and setting out for some large reforming and that we had dwindled down so far that at the present time I regarded all the propositions in relation to this matter as entirely worthless and that we had better proceed and pass the bill without anything. It was for no other purpose than to show, as I thought, that there had been perhaps too much tenderness exercised toward this corporation that has usurped, as I understand, for twenty-three years the occupancy of this pier, and now that it was in a dilapidated state refused either to repair it or to allow the United States to do it. I thought there was a little too much tenderness to ward that corporation, and that after having spent this long time and coming down to so fine a point as this we might as well get rid of the whole subject as spend any more time upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont proposes an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio——

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have an amendment to that amendment which I trust the Senator from Ohio will accept. I move to add:

And the Secretary of War is hereby directed to report to Congress at its next session all the instances in the United States in which piers, breakwaters, or other structures or works built or made by the United States in aid of commerce or navigation are used, occupied, or injured by a corporation or an individual, and the extent and mode of such use, occupation, or injury, and the facts touching the same.

Mr. THURMAN. I accept that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio will be so modified.

Mr. KERNAN. I suggest to the Senator from Maine to put in "unlawfully" before "used."

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; let us find out all sorts of cases.

Mr. HAMLIN. I offer this amendment because at some subsequent time we may act on the subject, about which I have a great deal of doubt; but if that time should ever come, it would be desirable that we have full information. We have it not now.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. What becomes of the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is an amendment to it striking out and inserting.

Mr. THURMAN. A substitute for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio as a substitute for the proposition of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment as thus amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now offer the following amendment to come in at the end of the amendment just adopted, which is the last draught I sent to the Chair:

Any person who shall unlawfully injure any pier or breakwater, or other work of the United States for the improvement of rivers or harbors or navigation in the United States, shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It seems to me that that would be a bad amendment to adopt. While it may be that there is not on our statute-book any law imposing a penalty for these injuries to public works——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Unlawful injuries.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Unlawful injuries to public works, yet I suppose that if in the State of Illinois or Ohio, where these works are located, any person should take gunpowder and maliciously destroy them, it would be an offense that their statutes would certainly apply to, and a person so offending would be sent properly to the penitentiary, probably for life. It may be that our passing this law making the penalty a mere pecuniary fine of $1,000 would not affect that State law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does the Senator think about that point?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That may be so; I am not entirely certain; but whether it is or not, there is that comity existing between the Federal Government and the State government that I do not think a judge would impose a greater fine, unless he was compelled by the State statutes, than the United States had said should be imposed for that offense. This shows the impropriety of our legislating without referring these subjects to a committee; and my friend from Vermont, for the first time I think since I have known him, has departed from his rule of insisting that statutes of this character should take that direction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I have not departed from any rule of conduct at all. I have taken the liberty as other Senators have, when a bill is under discussion and a great abuse necessary to be corrected by legislation relating to the subject of that very bill comes to light, to propose in my humble way some redress against it. That is all; so that I believe I am within the line of my own precedents.

Now, the Senator says the objection to this is that it interferes with State comity. The Senator had better repeal all our laws against counterfeiting the coinage, for the States all have laws of that kind, and a great many others that operate upon the same persons and upon the same class of subjects and upon the very same acts. The United States and the States pass their independent laws without any reference to whether the penalty is great or small in either case. The statute-books are full of such cases; and I never heard before that legislation was asked even to be postponed on the ground that we were to inquire what is the condition of a State law about some public interest of the United States which by possibility might be protected under it. I do not think that argument will stand.

I do not want to occupy time; but in order to make the amendment I hope acceptable to everybody, before "unlawfully" I wish to insert the words "willfully and," so that it shall be a willful and unlawful injury of this particular class of public property mentioned in this bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I should like to ask my friend one question, whether he thinks that a court in Ohio, if we fix this penalty at a thousand dollars, would in any event impose a greater penalty under the State law than we had indicated?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do most certainly. I have that respect for the courts of the State of Ohio that leads me——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. They would have that respect for us to suppose that we would fix the right penalty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have forgotten which one of us it was who was speaking. I have that respect for the courts of the State of Ohio that leads me to believe those courts in executing their own laws will do it independently, on their own judgment, according to the justice of each particular case that is brought judicially before them, and I have no doubt they will do so; and so of the courts of New Jersey. If they think their penalties are adequate and the case requires their imposition, if they are five times what this is, if such a case could possibly occur, where they had jurisdiction over the question, as I do not believe there is one in the whole United States, then they would impose the penalty. There is nothing to be feared from that. Here is a clause that was put on about the Eads affair at the mouth of the Mississippi in the last river and harbor bill.

That any person maliciously or intentionally—

I have it "willfully"—

injuring said works, or interfering with the construction thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and may be tried for such offense before the district court of the United States for the district wherein such offense may be committed; and if found guilty he shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $1,000, or to imprisonment for not more than two years, or to both fine and imprisonment as aforesaid, for each offense.

I offer a measure in respect to this very class of public works mentioned in this bill and all of them that are mentioned in it. One section of this bill covers the other public works that are not named specifically and provides for their repair and improvement. So the Senator from Ohio is wrong in saying that there is a single work to which this bill does not apply and to which the amendment does not. I do hope that as now modified the Senate will agree to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Conkling, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Kernan, Key, McMillan, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Ransom, Sargent, Thurman, West, and Windom—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Frelinghuysen, Jones of Florida, Kelly, McCreery, Maxey, Norwood, Randolph, Sherman, Wadleigh, Withers, and Wright—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Bogy, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Harvey, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McDonald, Morton, Patterson, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Wallace, and Whyte—28.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would call the attention of my friend from Vermont to the amendment just adopted and ask whether it does not have the effect of repealing the act in reference to the protection of the work at the mouth of the Mississippi River. There the penalty is a fine or imprisonment or both. This is for the protection of all the works of the United States, and is only a fine, which I think is an illustration of this mode of legislation without laws going to a committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a very good illustration, inasmuch as we had the law before us and read it, and inasmuch as the Senator saw the point before and ought to have contributed his valuable experience to making it right. I beg to assure my distinguished friend that I do not think it would be very bad if it did. If it does repeal it, we have a new law for a thousand dollars fine instead of a law for fine and imprisonment, as it is; so that I think the public interest may possibly be protected to the extent of this small amendment in that case.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. But my impression was that the object of the Senator was to make the law more stringent for the protection of these works, instead of making it more lenient.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, it was not either fear of making it more stringent for the protection of the Eads work or making it more lenient. It was to apply the law to all the works of the United States, there being no law now against willful injuries by people who are unlawfully doing wrong to them. That was it. The Senator does not like that sort of law; I do; and so we have disposed of the subject.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask that one or two of the amendments of the committee be reserved. I will hunt them up. I had them marked on my bill.

Mr. HARVEY. I wish to reserve the amendment on page 13, beginning at line 309 and running to line 312.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask unanimous consent to give notice that as soon as this bill is disposed of I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee in respect to the Pacific Railroads.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to repeat a notice that I gave in advance of my friend from Ohio, that I shall ask the Senate to take up the post-route bill if I can get the floor.

Mr. SARGENT. If there is any virtue in notices, I desire to say that I wish to call before the Senate the important measure giving effect to the Hawaiian treaty.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to give notice that there are several bills on the Calendar which I shall endeavor to get the Senate to consider as soon as circumstances will permit.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that all the amendments not reserved be concurred in, so that we may make some progress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to reserve the amendment from line 162 to line 165. That is about the fallen trees in the Little Kanawha River. I think most of the others are in the text of the bill, and are not necessary to be reserved.

Mr. CONKLING. I am told it was said the other day in the Senate during my absence, which absence was not greater than five minutes, that the State of New York had managed in this last revision of the bill to profit about $100,000, I am told the statement was; I have not looked at the RECORD. I think it is worth my while to put on record the truth in that regard, which is that the committee struck out entirely from the State of New York appropriations amounting to $44,000. They reduced other appropriations. The whole addition made—for there were additions—amounts to exactly $95,000. Of that addition $90,000 concerns the removal of rocks at Hell Gate, and although I do not wish to repeat what I said once before about Hell Gate, I wish to be sure that the Senate does not forget that, although Hell Gate is in waters geographically within the limits of the State of New York, it has no more to do with the State of New York than with any and every other State on the Atlantic coast, except so far as the commerce of one State may be greater than that of another.

Mr. THURMAN. May I interrupt the Senator to ask what is the question under consideration?

Mr. CONKLING. The pending question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, and I am speaking to that question.

Mr. THURMAN. But on what particular amendment?

Mr. CONKLING. I am speaking on all of them now. They are all pending in gross.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They are not yet separated.

Mr. CONKLING. The rocks at Hell Gate are hidden rocks lying in an arm of the sea, in a great strait, which strait I want to remind the Senator from Ohio when it is cleared will shorten the trip of seagoing vessels to Europe three hundred miles.

Mr. THURMAN. My dear friend from New York, I beg now to say that I am for Hell Gate all the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONKLING. I know there is a certain affinity between the gate of hell and the Senator from Ohio. [Laughter.] I was not arguing to dispute that proposition; but speaking of this particular Hell Gate, I object to its being located, in the sense of a work local in character, in the State of New York and charged to her account in the river and harbor bill; and therefore I am observing that all the vessels which traverse Long Island Sound are exposed to the danger of these rocks. Therefore I am observing that these rocks lie at the bottom of an arm of the sea, of a great strait of national commerce, in no sense applicable to this bill and in no other sense known among men local in the State of New York. And now I say that dismissing Hell Gate the committee in its last revision has stricken down the appropriations for the State of New York $85,000—and I say it because I repeat that in my absence the other day it was intimated that in the harmony of this bill it had come to pass that $100,000 had been added to the benefits which the State of New York would have enjoyed under the original bill. I wish to correct that statement, and to say that this $85,000 taken from the bill has not been withdrawn from creeks, from rivers subject to the police power of the State of New York, and belonging to it, but withdrawn from great harbors on inland seas, thereby meaning Lake Erie and Lake Ontario. The harbor of Dunkirk, the terminus of the Erie Railway, has been striken out altogether, so that not a penny remains for it. So for four harbors on Lake Ontario, the shores of which are bold, the billows of which are stormy, the coast of which is little indented, the harbors of which are few and far between, all appropriation has been stricken from the bill. When I state these facts the Senate will be able to see to what extent New York as a State, in a local sense, has profited by the revision of the committee. In lieu of all these reductions and of all these obliterations nothing appears to compensate New York in the bill, except that for every State from Maine to Texas, for every State interested in the ocean commerce of this country, whether coastwise or not, to shorten the track of seagoing ships to Europe three hundred miles, and to remove a dangerous and lurking cluster of rocks invisible to the eye in a great arm of the sea, I repeat $90,000 has been added to the appropriations.

Mr. President, concluding these observations, and hearing Senators reserve special amendments, I wish I could have an arrangement, which would be very innocent and very little, by which I might have passed over in the Senate these amendments which in a row strike out everything for the harbors of New York, to the end that if I find that the Senate is going to overrule the committee in respect of other amendments I may have my opportunity, without being at the head of the class, of seeing whether I might not ask the Senate to do that for New York also. But I know it would be just like my friend from Iowa to object to this, and, therefore, I will not ask for it; but I wish to say that I shall feel at liberty to move to reconsider the action of the Senate, if the Senate concurs in the amendments of the committee striking out New York and then overrules them touching other States.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, when I was a very young boy my mother put into my hand Knickerbocker's History of New York, and I read in it the adventures of those who went up and met with great misfortunes at what was then called Hurl Gate, but is now called Hell Gate, and ever since that time I have longed for and desired to vote for an improvement of that strait. I therefore fully sympathize with the Senator from New York, and am willing to vote for almost any sum to improve Hell Gate, or Hurl Gate, or whatever is its proper name; and I agree with him that to talk of that strait as being within the limits of the State of New York, and limited by that circumstance, instead of being a great entrance to the whole Republic, is the silliest of all absurdities. But I submit to my friend that he had better take this bill as it is, because, while there is Hurl Gate, there is the improvement of Fort Madison, in Iowa; there is the improvement of the Raccoon fork of no-named creek in somewhere else that I never heard of. In other words, this bill is just like every other bill of this sort—a bill in which everybody seeks to get the most that he can for his own locality, without regard to the Constitution of the United States, or without regard to public utility. Therefore I would advise my friend from New York to let Hurl Gate go with what it has.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the statement that the Senate committee had increased the appropriations for the State of New York $110,000 was made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] upon the figures which I gave him. I propose now to show the correctness of that proposition. On page 1 $18,000 was stricken out for Dunkirk; on page 2 $6,000 was stricken out for Olcott; on page 2 $5,000 was stricken out for the improvement of the harbor at Pultneyville, New York; on page 2 $5,000 was stricken out for the improvement of the harbor at Great Sodus Bay; on page 11 $5,000 was stricken out for the improvement of the harbor at Waddington, New York; and on page 11 $15,000 was stricken out for the improvement of Harlem River. That makes a decrease of $54,000. On page 1 $10,000 is added for Buffalo; on page 2 $3,000 is added for Oak Orchard; on page 2 $90,000 is added for East River and Hell Gate, and on page 11 $20,000 is added for Oswego; and on the same page $41,000 is added for the Hudson River, in New York, making a total of $164,000; and when you deduct $54,000 of decrease from that, you leave a square increase of $110,000. It will not do for the distinguished Senator from New York to nod his ambrosial locks in this direction and say that the appropriation for Hell Gate is not in the State of New York. It is an appropriation to be expended in the improvement of that place, and the State of New York derives the benefit from it. It may be that ultimate benefits will be derived by other States and other communities; but the benefit is given directly to the State of New York. I think the assertion which was made by the Senator from Indiana is true, that the appropriations were increased by the Senate committee $110,000, and that New York reaps the benefit of that amount.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend, the Senator from the greatest State in the Union, and the brightest star in the radiant galaxy of States, if that was his description, has been perhaps imperfectly heard all over the Chamber, and therefore I beg to repeat first his statement that $110,000 has been added for the State of New York, and he makes it up by including this item "for the improvement of the Hudson River, New York, $25.000." It now stands $66,000, and he says that is an addition of $41,000. Let me show him how plain a tale will put him down. If he will turn over to page 17 he will find that there stood—

For dredging Hudson River in front of Jersey City $25,000.

That was stricken out. In other words, that appropriation and the other appropriation was lumped; and now, if my friend will take his pencil and deduct $25,000 from $41,000, he will find that he has fallen into one error. When the honorable Senator comes to prove as a geographical and commercial fact that Hell Gate is local to the State of New York, the demonstration is so plain that I have nothing to say about it. It is like the seventh proposition of Euclid which has been called the pons asinorum, thereby meaning the bridge of asses.

Mr. MCCREERY. I give notice that I reserve the amendment making an appropriation of $270,000 for the Great Kanawha in West Virginia, line 158 to line 161. I also reserve the proposition striking out $35,000 for the improvement of the Big Sandy River in Kentucky and West Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments except those that have been reserved for separate vote.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first reserved amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Page 13, line 309 to 312, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole struck out:

For the improvement of the Missouri River at the point where it is cutting into the Kansas shore above Saint Joseph, Missouri, for the protection of the city of Saint Joseph, $10,000.

Mr. HARVEY. I wish to say a few words on that, and I will begin by disclaiming any intention to disturb the harmony of this bill about which we heard so much yesterday and something to-day. Harmony in any sense of the word is a good thing to have about the house. In this connection I think the word is used in a musical sense. This bill is legislation set to music; and I have no disposition to disturb it, as I have said. I think it is a little too much neglected in this utilitarian age. I know of a poet who is skeptical about "the music of the spheres" because he never heard it; but the harmony of this bill is audible, I think, to the dullest ears, and I only desire to add if possible to the harmony of the bill by restoring the keynote of the symphony; and that I deem to be the little improvement provided for in this item.

This is for an improvement on the Missouri River between the States of Kansas and Missouri—two of the best States in the Union—and the improvement is upon the greatest river on the continent in the middle of its course. It is an improvement necessary to prevent the destruction of navigation upon that river; to prevent the destruction of the city of Saint Joseph on the Missouri River, and to prevent the destruction of the navigation of the river by the dispersion of the waters over a great space of ground on the Kansas side which will so shallow the stream as to make a permanent and insuperable obstacle to navigation. The navigation of this river is of great use to the whole country. It is of present immediate use in transporting supplies to the Army of the United States engaged in war with the hostile Sioux on the northwestern frontier. I think there should be no opposition to it. It is the only thing that is asked for in the whole central portion of the continent. It is true that it is located a long way from Hell Gate, and from McCargoe's Cove, Mackey's Ferry, and the eastern pier at Cleveland; but, sir, it is deserving of consideration nevertheless. I am in earnest about this matter, and I really believe that this appropriation should be restored.

Now, sir, what is the ground of the objection to it, if any? It must be because it is said that this bill must be limited to $5,000,000. Whence the necessity for that limit? The object of this bill is to provide for the improvement of facilities for commerce. The great mistake was in recommitting this bill with instructions to limit it to $5,000,000. The consequence of that vote has been that every Senator on the floor, when he comes to consider the improvements of which he has particular knowledge, admits that the appropriation is inadequate.

If it is legitimate and proper to make improvements for this purpose they should be made with a view to their adequacy. If it is illegitimate and improper, then making such a little bill will not be regarded as an excuse for it. I ask why the limit to five millions? It was only proposed when the bill passed the Senate before making it about a million and a half more. At this very session we appropriated for a great show at Philadelphia just about the amount of money that has been or will be saved by this cutting down. Have we placed ourselves in something like the position of the family that sold the cooking-stove to get money to go to the circus? Let us not on the question of the little sum of $10,000 obstruct the navigation of the great Missouri River, and leave the whole interior of this country without a single appropriation for the protection of its commercial interests.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment striking out this item.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole is in lines 156 and 157.

Mr. HARVEY. I believe I voted under a misapprehension on the last amendment. Was the vote to concur in the amendment of the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was. The Chair observed that the Senator from Kansas concurred. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARVEY. I ask that the vote be taken again. The Senate must certainly have been under a misapprehension, as I was.

Several SENATORS. No; we knew what it was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to taking the vote again? ["No."] The Chair will put the question again.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Kansas made a very pleasant speech indeed. I admired the speech very much, but I will not speak about the harmony of the bill.

Mr. HARVEY. Having voted so loud, I carried the amendment myself. [Laughter.] It is for that reason I ask for a reconsideration.

Mr. SARGENT. It shows that the instincts of the Senator were right if he was not exactly observing what he was doing. I trust, however, the Senate will stand by the votes it has given up to this time, at any rate so far as not to increase the appropriations in the bill.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was in lines 156 and 157, to insert:

And from Smith's Shoals to the Falls of the Cumberland, $2,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask my honored friend in charge of the bill to explain this business about "Smith's Shoals to the Falls of the Cumberland," what it is, who recommends it, &c.

Mr. ALLISON. I will do so with great pleasure. This Cumberland River extends through the States of Tennessee and Kentucky, and the people living along the river and in its neighborhood have no railway facilities whatever, and from information received by the committee we were satisfied that the expenditure of a small sum of money here would be of very great benefit to the people living along this stream in securing them a method of transportation for their crops.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where do they carry them?

Mr. ALLISON. All along down the Cumberland River.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a recommendation of the engineers for this?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; there is no recommendation of the engineers, I believe, for this particular expenditure. There is a recommendation for the general improvement of this river from Nashville to the falls of the Cumberland.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has there been public money spent on this section of the river before?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This appears to me to be entirely outside.

Mr. ALLISON. My friend from Virginia reminds me that this $2,000 is to remove certain obstructions in the Upper Cumberland by which the people can reach the coal-mines situated at the falls.

Mr. WITHERS. There are large deposits of coal which are located just above the falls, and the object is to remove these obstructions so as to utilize that coal and bring it down the river to Nashville and other points.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that this united appropriation for the Cumberland above Nashville appeals very strongly to the committee; and although no money has been expended hitherto upon the Cumberland above Nashville, we felt the force of the fact that there is no railway communication for all the good people who live along this river, and that by providing a small sum of money these people can secure a fair river navigation for a great many miles.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is just it. I sympathize with the people who live in that neighborhood as much as my friend from Iowa does; but my question is whether we have any right to tax the people of the United States for their local advantage because they have not a railroad and because they happen to live in an interior part of a State where the rivers are not navigable. That is the point.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not argue the question with the Senator. I will not occupy time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is not occupying time; I am occupying time, [laughter,] at least I thought I was entitled to the floor. I am not occupying time for the purpose of occupying time; but feeling some responsibility as a Senator of the United States not to vote for measures that seem to me to be plainly beyond the constitutional power of Congress, however strong my sympathy may be for a particular people in a particular neighborhood, I feel justified in half the time the Senator has taken in answer to my inquiry in stating my opposition to this measure.

It is not because I do not like the people. I do like them. It is not because I would not do everything in my power to aid them; but the public money of the United States is committed to my charge for one as a trust, under specific direction contained in the Constitution that I shall only appropriate it to national objects and in a particular way. Then the question is, Is this fairly within the true construction of the Constitution a national object? The Senator evidently confesses that it is not. It has never hitherto been thought to be by the Congress of the United States. It is the beginning of appropriations indefinite in extent and amount for the improvement of a river in a State that does not in any fair sense fall within national jurisdiction. That is my objection, and that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in this amendment.

The amendment was concurred in; there being on a division—ayes 30, noes 9.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted in the bill as lines 162, 163, 164, and 165 the following:

For removal of Beaver and Nailor Bend Rocks, and for cleaning out snags and fallen trees in the Little Kanawha, West Virginia, $7,300.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator in charge what the recommendation of the engineers is on that subject and whether there has been a former appropriation and whether this is a great national highway within the constitutional sense.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a great national highway, I will say to the Senator, known as the Little Kanawha. This expenditure is below Bulltown in West Virginia. [Laughter.] I will have the Secretary read what the engineer says upon this subject. Before doing so, however, I will call attention to the fact that this river has been surveyed for improvement on a much more extensive scale than that reported by the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is the skirmishing line of appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. The Clerk will read just what is said by the engineer in the report I send to the desk:

The Clerk read as follows:

Should the cost of extending the existing slack-water system be considered too great, it might be considered proper to appropriate a small sum for the removal of the Beaver Rocks and the rock in Nailor Bend, and for clearing out the snags and fallen trees. For this work I would estimate as follows:

Removal of Beaver and Nailor Bend Rocks:
Five hundred and fifty yards rock excavation, at $4	$2,200
Three months' snagging, at $1,700 per month	5,100
	7,300

Mr. ALLISON. That is just the amount appropriated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all it might be considered proper to give for two or three months' snagging.

The amendment was concurred in; there being on a division—ayes 30, noes 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reserved by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREERY] will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 160 the Senate, acting as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "300" and inserted "270;" so as to read:

For the improvement of the Great Kanawha River, West Virginia, including the purchase of sites for dams and locks, not exceeding $15,000, $270,000.

Mr. McCREERY. Mr. President, I wish to submit a proposition, the modest merit of which will commend it to the favorable consideration of the Senate if it is understood. My proposition will not increase the appropriation a single cent. I move to reduce the appropriation for the Great Kanawha River from $270,000 to $250,000, and, if I am successful in this, I shall ask the Senate to appropriate $20,000 for the improvement of Big Sandy River, the boundary line between Kentucky and West Virginia, so it will be observed that nothing is added to the expenditure.

Mr. MERRIMON. Where was the appropriation for the Big Sandy stricken out in the bill?

Mr. McCREERY. On page 14, lines 322 and 323. The region lying contiguous to the Big Sandy River is probably as rich or richer in mineral resources than any other portion of the United States. Its products are salt, coal, and iron, and the safe and easy transportation of these articles is not only a matter of importance to the people along that river, but would be equally beneficial to the people throughout the West and Southwest. I do not propose at this late hour to consume the time of the Senate in argument on this subject, but any man who is acquainted with these water-courses or any man who will take the trouble to look at a map will hardly fail to acknowledge that the Big Sandy is entitled to as much as the Great Kanawha.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it just as large on the map?

Mr. McCREERY. It is about as large on the map and about the same size when you come to see it.

Mr. WITHERS. O, no.

Mr. McCREERY. Yes, sir; that is my opinion, and I have seen them both. I will not contend, however, as to the relative dimensions of these rivers, but I do claim that if the Great Kanawha is entitled to a quarter of a million the Big Sandy should have as much as $20,000. It is so absurd and preposterous to grant these large amounts to the former and to deny anything to the latter that the mere statement almost impeaches the justice of the Senate. I hope, therefore, that my demand will receive your individual support.

Mr. DAVIS. As the Big Kanawha has been discussed sufficiently, I will not say a word about it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think it has been.

Mr. DAVIS. We may differ. As to the Big Sandy, I fully agree with what the Senator from Kentucky has said. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations, but not being a member of the subcommittee, I labored as hard as I knew how to persuade the committee that the Big Sandy ought to be retained as it was in the bill as it came from the House. I thought I did my whole duty there to have it retained. I failed in that as I did in the Elk River improvement, that was $20,000 as it came from the House, and as I did for the Monongahela with $25,000 as it came from the House. I will add but one word in regard to the Monongahela. Without my knowledge, or without any agency of mine, a few moments ago I received a telegram. I concluded to have nothing to say about the matter but let the bill pass as it came from the committee. The telegram is dated:

CINCINNATI, OHIO, August 3, 1876.

Senator DAVIS:

The engineer probably did not know my full name, for I have never met him but once that I know of in my life.

We need $10,000 for Upper Monongahela. Navigation will be stopped for a year without the appropriation is made. Letter by mail.

Yet I thought it was unnecessary to say one word about the Monongahela, though as the bill came from the House it appropriated $25,000 for its improvement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment of the committee to reduce the appropriation in line 160 from $270,000 to $250,000, with a view to appropriating $20,000 for the Big Sandy.

Mr. LOGAN. We can have a division of the question, I suppose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question will be on reducing the amount agreed to as in Committee of the Whole from $270,000 to $250,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I feel bound to say that if it is dangerous to swap horses while crossing a stream I think it is very dangerous to swap rivers at the close of this bill, because if we begin to transfer from one of these great rivers to the other I am afraid the harmony of the bill will be seriously disturbed the very moment the end is reached.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 22, noes 20.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays; and I give notice that in my judgment it is the end of the bill if the amendment is adopted.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Cockrell, Dennis, Eaton, Edmunds, Gordon, Hitchcock, Jones of Florida, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Thurman, and Wadleigh—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Booth, Boutwell, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Logan, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill, Norwood, Sargent, West, Windom, Withers, and Wright—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Barnum, Bogy, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Key, McDonald, Morton, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Wallace, and Whyte—29.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment in line 160, made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All the amendments of the committee have been concurred in. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer an amendment. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That the sum of $3,000,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended for the repair and preservation of works for the improvement of rivers and harbors under the direction of the Secretary of War: Provided, That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause such expenditures to be made so as best to subserve the interests of commerce; and he is required to report to Congress at the opening of its December session all the expenditures made under the provisions of this act up to that time in detail.

In support of this amendment I only have a single word to say. The Treasury is deficient in money. The commerce of the United States has gone on without the sum of money that is appropriated in the bill for a great many years. If there is any one object in respect of which we can economize safely, without doing essential injustice to anybody, it is not to launch out into these works at this time. My amendment proposes to appropriate $3,000,000 for the preservation and repair of all that we have and gives nothing for new works. Explaining it in that way, I ask for the yeas and nays on its adoption.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am practically in favor of reform and retrenchment, and I should like exceedingly to see the amount appropriated for rivers and harbors this year brought within the limits of $4,000,000. I think that would be enough. I would not object to the amount fixed by the Senator from Vermont, but I cannot vote for the manner in which it is to be expended. I think that the Senate with its committees is just as competent to decide where and in what sum this amount shall be expended as the Department to which it is proposed to intrust it. While I am in favor of reducing the present bill, I hope when the bill has reached its final stage and is in such a condition that the amounts can be reduced so that we can strike off 20 per cent. from every appropriation in it. Still I cannot support this amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to say one word in reply. I beg to call the attention of my honorable friend to the fact that this amendment commits no greater discretion to the Secretary of War than is committed by the bill itself. It does not authorize him to inaugurate any new works but it only requires him out of this money to preserve and repair the works we have. The commerce of the United States, as I have once said, has gone on with the works, and less than the works, that we have now, through times of prosperity and adversity, and peace and war. Now we come to a time when there is depression. We come to a time when the Treasury is scant of money, and when the income of the United States is greatly diminished. Then the question is whether we cannot in this instance and in this way save a few millions of dollars, and not lose anything, by taking what is necessary to preserve from decay and keep in repair the things we have. No new discretion is confided to the Secretary of War at all.

Mr. THURMAN. The amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont recognizes the fact that Congress has power to appropriate for the objects in this bill, for it proposes that a certain sum shall be put under the control of the Secretary of War to maintain works that have been ordered and constructed under act of Congress. It therefore recognizes in the fullest measure that Congress in ordering those works and providing for their construction has not violated or gone beyond the Constitution of the Republic.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does not recognize, I submit to my friend, any thing of the kind. It takes an existing fact. It goes into nothing new, but takes legislation for which I am not responsible, nor the Senate in particular, and just says what we have got, whether we have got it by right or wrong, we will keep from going to decay until we see what we will do with it.

Mr. THURMAN. I think if we have got per fas aut nefas what we have, we are not entitled to maintain that which we have got per nefas. Therefore I say that the proposition of the Senator from Vermont is a full recognition of the legislation on this subject that has preceded this Congress, and it proposes to maintain those works, but not to do anything in addition to those works. That is a simple question. It is not a question of constitutional law. It is not a question whether we should or should not provide for new works; but it is simply a question whether we should stop where we are and do nothing for the succeeding year. No man believes more than I do that these river and harbor bills have been great abuses. No man believes more than I do that the Constitution has been greatly stretched in river and harbor bills. But I do not know that at the end of a session of Congress it is the time to say that we will confirm everything that has been done and to say now at this session that we will do nothing more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 12, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Booth, Boutwell, Conkling, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Logan, Morrill, Oglesby, and Wadleigh—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell,

Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Harvey, Howe, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, McCreery, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Paddock, Patterson, Ransom, Sargent, Thurman, West, Windom, Withers, and Wright—31.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Barnum, Bogy, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Claytor., Conover, Dorsey, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, Mitchell, Morton, Randolph, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Wallace, and Whyte—28.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COCKRELL. I now move that 20 per cent. be stricken from each amount named in the bill, so that the aggregate amount appropriated by the bill shall be $4,000,000. That will be striking out one-fifth, and let each appropriation in the bill bear its proportion of the reduction.

Mr. CONKLING. That is not in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I guess that is in order.

Mr. HAMLIN. O, no.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate having agreed to the amendments, it is not in order. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to rise to this point of order if the Chair will allow me: It certainly appears to me it is in order. The only objection I have to it is that the reduction is not large enough. If it is in order I shall propose to amend by making it 30 per cent. instead of 20 per cent.; but I submit respectfully to the Chair that the bill being now perfected, a change which involves all, as well those items that have not been disturbed at all as those that have been fixed, in connection is an entirely different proposition. For instance, we have said here, by an amendment, for the improvement of the Cape Fear River, $150,000, over $100,000 as it was in the House bill. Then we have said:

For the construction of piers in Delaware Bay, near Lewes, Delaware, $30,000.

The proposition of the Senator from Missouri is, taking those two things together, to reduce them both 20 per cent. I submit with as much earnestness as I am capable of that that is clearly in order, because it is an entirely different proposition. It is not to make the $150,000 by itself less than it was before, but it takes everything, as well that which we have changed as that we have not changed, which makes an entire proposition that the Senate has not voted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has agreed to the bill as it now stands. Unless something is proposed to be added to it, or stricken out and added, it is not in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have not agreed to the bill as it now stands where no amendments have been made at all, and that is more than half of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair rules that the proposition is not in order. Does the Senator from Vermont appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am in favor of this proposition of the Senator from Missouri and I believe it to be in order. I mean I am in favor of it when it is properly corrected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate. Shall the proposition of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] be received?

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 8, noes 22.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I can make in order the substance of the proposition. I move an additional section in the following words:

SEC. 3. That 25 per cent. of each of the amounts hereinbefore appropriated shall be retained in the Treasury and not expended until after the 1st day of July, 1877.

Mr. WITHERS. That would be making an appropriation for the next fiscal year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment and the Chair will submit it to the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. HAMLIN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 33, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Booth, Boutwell, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Harvey, Howe, Kelly, Key, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Sargent, Thurman, West, Windom, Withers, and Wright—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Cockrell, Conkling, Eaton, Edmunds, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Jones of Florida, Logan, McCreery, Morrill, and Wadleigh—11.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Barnum, Bogy, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Goldthwaithe, Hamilton, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, McDonald, Morton, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Wallace, and Whyte—27.

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 866) to remove the political disabilities of Thomas H. Williams, of Maryland.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the adjournment of both Houses of Congress without day on Monday next, August 7, A. D. 1876, at twelve o'clock noon; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a resolution authorizing the Joint Committee on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses to correct an error in the bill (H R. No. 3963) to amend subsections 246 and 251 of section 12 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1874, and for other purposes, and also to amend section 3954 of the Revised Statutes; and by inserting the word "not" on the second page of the enrolled bill next to the last line between the words "shall" and "be."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 810) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1336) to establish a new land district in the Territory of Wyoming.

HAMBURGH RIOT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print 10,000 extra copies of the President's message in regard to the Hamburgh massacre, have directed me to report the same back without amendment. My colleague on the committee [Mr. SAULSBURY] is not in favor of it, and I will not ask that it be taken up in his absence.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3628) establishing post-roads.

Mr. THURMAN. Is that motion amendable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to take up a bill for present consideration is not amendable.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is not my intention to act upon the bill to-night but to let it remain the unfinished business for to-morrow.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I hope the motion will be voted down in order that we may take up the Pacific railroad bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. THURMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to say that I shall vote against taking up any other bill until I can get a chance to take up what is known as the southern claims bill; and I now appeal to the Senate and submit to the Senate whether they will take up this bill or the bill that I mention. I ask a vote of the Senate upon that question.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say one word. This is a bill affecting every section of the broad land. Twice we had it before the body for consideration and twice I yielded at the earnest importunity of other Senators. If the Senate do not deem the bill of importance enough to take it up, I shall not consider it my duty again to ask them to do so.

Mr. THURMAN. Is this motion debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not on the merits, but the question of taking it up is debatable.

Mr. THURMAN. If it is debatable on the question of preference of one bill over another, I will state that I hope the Senate instead of taking up a bill to establish post-routes for which there is no use will take up a bill to secure to this Government the repayment of more than $140,000,000.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to say one thing before the vote is taken, if I can have the attention of the Senate. On the 22d of June I reported the bill from the Committee on Claims to which I have referred. I have tried on three occasions to get it up. At one time I had the floor and made the motion, and yielded to the Senator having the pending appropriation bill in charge, and thus gave way. This bill is in the nature of an appropriation bill, and as such it ought to be considered by the Senate and ought to have preference. These claims were allowed and reported to Congress on the first day of the present session. For eight months these parties have been kept out of their money. The bill has passed the House, has been examined by the committee, and had had its careful attention. There are sums of money appropriated by it ranging from $10 to as many thousand and more. They are poor, needy parties. If they are to have this money it ought to be given to them and the matter ought to be decided. I do not wish to antagonize any bill, but I esteem it my duty to appeal to the Senate to give this bill an opportunity. We can pass the bill in my judgment in fifteen minutes if we take it up. I am certain we can pass it in that time unless the reading of it is asked for. There are but two or three amendments to the bill. I now appeal to the Senate to give me an opportunity to take up this bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to the Senator to take it up after the post-route bill is out of the way.

Mr. LOGAN. I am very certain that all of the bills the Senators desire to have taken up are very important bills, but I think I am in charge of one that is equally as important, and I want to know before the Senate adjourns this session whether there is a majority of the Senate in favor of it or not I have always found a majority in favor of it when there was no chance to take it up. Every time there is a majority for it when it cannot be taken up, and I want to know whether there will be a majority when it can be taken up or not. It is House bill No. 58. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] says he has a bill which will save several millions of dollars. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] has a bill which will pay some poor people some money. I hope they will get it if they deserve it. I have a bill here to pay the soldiers of this country a debt that the Government owes them and has owed them for fourteen years. I want to know, after this bill has passed the House five times and the Senate once, whether the Senate is now going to pay them a debt that the Government owes, which it can be demonstrated it owes. I ask that House bill No. 58 be taken up. I propose whenever the bill moved by the Senator from Maine is taken up to move to lay it aside in order to take up the bill I have named.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to take up the bill (H. R. No. 3628) establishing post-roads, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 30, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cockrell, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Key, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Norwood, Paddock, Patterson, Randolph, West, Windom, and Withers—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Booth, Christiancy, Harvey, Logan, McCreery, Oglesby, Sargent, Thurman, and Wright—9

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Barnum, Bogy, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Clayton, Conover, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, McMillan, Morrill, Morton, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Wadleigh, Wallace, and Whyte—32.

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate now adjourn.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator withdraw his motion for a moment?

Mr. SARGENT. For what purpose?

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to make a motion in reference to adjournment.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not wish to withdraw the motion to take up any other business.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not going to offer to take up any other business. I said I would move to lay aside the post-route bill after it was up and substitute House bill No. 58.

Mr. SARGENT. Then I insist on my motion to adjourn.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will hear me, I say I will not offer that now, but I want to offer a motion in reference to adjournment. I want to move that when the Senate adjourns it be to meet at twelve o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SARGENT. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that when the Senate adjourns it be to meet at twelve o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I now renew my motion that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at six o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, August 3, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

VINDICATION OF MR. KNOTT.

Mr. HURD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged report. Some weeks since a resolution was introduced into the House by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. Blaine,] relating to a telegram which had been received by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of this House, purporting to come from one Josiah Caldwell. This resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, with instructions to report immediately to the House. After considerable testimony had been taken by the committee relative to the receiving and the original preparation of the dispatch, a meeting of the whole committee was held to determine upon the character of the report which should be made to the House. By the unanimous vote of that committee I have been instructed to report to the House as follows; which report I will myself read, if there be no objection.

Mr. HURD proceeded to read the report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire whether this unanimous consent goes further than simply to allow the report to be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands this to be a privileged report, the committee being authorized to report at any time.

Mr. HURD resumed and concluded the reading of the report, which is as follows:

The Judiciary Committee, to whom was referred the resolution of the House, relating to a telegram received by Hon. J. PROCTOR KNOTT, its chairman, from one Josiah Caldwell, concerning an investigation authorized by a resolution introduced into the House by Mr. TARBOX, of Massachusetts, would report—

That while the investigation contemplated under that resolution was in progress it was developed that one Josiah Caldwell had made certain statements to parties as to the subject-matter of that inquiry. These statements were offered in evidence before the committee, but they were excluded upon the grounds, first, that they were irrelevant to the subject-matter of the Tarbox resolution and, second, that Caldwell was in Europe and therefore beyond the reach of the process of this House. Under these circumstances it was determined by the committee that a telegram should be sent by the chairman to Caldwell, asking him to appear before the committee to testify.

After the action of the committee, and before any communication had been had with Caldwell, a telegram purporting to come from him was delivered to the chairman, as follows:

"Have just read in New York papers Scott's evidence about our bond transaction and can fully corroborate it. I never gave Blaine any Fort Smith bonds, directly or otherwise. I have three foreign railway contracts on my hands, which makes it impossible for me to leave without great pecuniary loss or would gladly, voluntarily come home and so testify. Can make affidavit to this effect and mail it if desired."

The resolution referred to your committee in substance demands that this telegram be made part of the testimony taken by the subcommittee engaged in the investigation under the Tarbox resolution.

If this demand is to be complied with, it must be upon the ground that such telegram is competent evidence in this investigation; for otherwise the proposition would be that incompetent testimony might be introduced to establish facts before a tribunal constituted by this House.

The sole question in this view of the case is, is this telegram competent evidence?

It is impossible to conceive upon what ground such a proposition can be maintained.

In the first place, with the concession that the telegram came from Mr. Caldwell, its statements cannot be received as evidence, because not made under oath. It would be singular, indeed, if in an investigation where witnesses actually present before the committee are required to be sworn, the unsworn statements of an absent person should be admitted as testimony. Such a rule would make too uncertain proceedings before an investigating committee, proceedings which require limit and definiteness rather than wider latitude.

But in the second place, when the telegram was received by the chairman, there was not the slightest evidence that it had been sent by Mr. Caldwell. As it stood then, it simply appeared that a message with Mr. Caldwell's name subscribed to it had been delivered to the chairman of the committee.

But no one will pretend that this establishes the fact that Mr. Caldwell sent the message. In every case, when the contents of a telegram are to be proven, or its authenticity is to be established, the original message written by the sender must be produced. It is true, that secondary evidence may be admitted, but then, only after such proof of the loss or destruction of the original as is required to make such evidence admissible in other cases.

In Matteson vs. Noyes, 25 Illinois, page 59, it is said:

"The paper filed at the office from which the message is sent is of course the original, and that which is received by the person to whom it was sent purports to be a copy. If the dispatch is sought to be used in evidence the original must be produced and its execution proved precisely as any other instrument or its absence accounted for in the same mode before the copy can be received."

The same doctrine is maintained in Williams vs. Buckell, 37 Mississippi, 682; Durkee vs. The Vermont Central Railroad Company, 29 Vermont, 59; and Howley vs. Whipple, 48 New Hampshire, 487.

In the third place it may be said that, while the message received is not evidence, yet its receipt gave rise to a presumption that it was sent by Mr. Caldwell and that its contents are his statements. As to this it may be remarked that it had already been decided by the Judiciary Committee, in this very investigation, that statements made by Mr. Caldwell to others who were present before the committee to testify as to them were not admissible in evidence. The rule established by the committee, by that action, seems decisive of the present question, for the same reasons which required the rejection of the oral statements of Mr. Caldwell should exclude his written statements, and certainly such statements as are contained in what is only a copy of his writing. But it has been repeatedly decided that a copy of a message raises no presumption as to the original. In Howley vs. Whipple, 48 New Hampshire, 487, it was held that "the fact that a telegram was sent to a person at a particular place, and an answer received by telegraph at the office from which the original telegram was sent, purporting to come from that person at that place, is no proof he was there at that time." If an answer to a telegram afford no presumption that the person sending such answer was at the place from which it purports to be sent, a fortiori no such presumption can arise where the message is not in answer to another previously sent; and if no presumption could arise (to speak of the present case) that Caldwell was in London on the 31st of May, certainly none will be claimed to arise that the message received was a copy of an original deposited in London.

It has been charged that the withholding by the chairman of this message from the subcommittee conducting this inquiry was a suppression of evidence, and that the ordinary presumptions arising from such suppression could be claimed as against him, so far as they would relate to persons interested in the result of the investigation. The unreasonableness of such a claim is manifest when the principles of law established upon this point are considered. It is the suppression of instruments of evidence that is condemned by the rule of law. But in this case the message received was not an instrument of evidence; and therefore withholding it is not suppression of evidence.

It must be recollected, in this connection, that the chairman of the committee was not a member of the committee conducting the investigation. His only duty in reference to that inquiry was that imposed upon him by the general committee, of securing the attendance of Mr. Caldwell to testify. Suppose Caldwell had been within the United States where process could have been served upon him; would any one pretend that a message from him upon the subject-matter of the investigation, before a subpœna had been served, should be presented to the subcommittee as evidence? If not, then, how does Caldwell's absence from the country change the rules of evidence as to his telegram? Such a message from a witness might be of use in enabling the chairman to get service upon him in the one case, or to communicate with him in the other; but in both cases it should be regarded as a message for the chairman only, to be used as he should determine, not as evidence in the inquiry, but to accomplish the object contemplated by the committee, namely, to bring the person before it to testify. In the accomplishment of that result it is manifest that by the action of the committee the whole discretion was intrusted to the chairman. No person ought to complain, providing that discretion were exercised in good faith. If the object were to procure the attendance of Caldwell, it is manifest that it could be better accomplished by withholding the telegram from the committee than by spreading it upon the records as evidence; for if Caldwell could testify by a telegraphic dispatch, there would be little likelihood of his crossing the Atlantic to appear before the committee.

Other considerations seem to have occasioned doubts in the mind of the chairman as to whether the telegram really originated with Mr. Caldwell or not, which doubts, from the testimony since taken, he appears to have been justified in entertaining. That testimony, however, shows that while a telegram of which this was substantially a copy was sent by Mr. Reed, a former clerk of Caldwell, to him, it was in fact adopted and forwarded to the chairman by Mr. Caldwell. From these considerations the chairman felt warranted in withholding the telegram from the committee until an inquiry could be made as to the circumstances attending its origination.

Your committee therefore would report (1) that the telegram received by the chairman from Mr. Caldwell was not evidence and could not have been received as such without a violation of the rule before that time, established by the committee; (2) that withholding it was not a suppression of an instrument of evidence; (3) and that the whole subject as to procuring the attendance of Mr. Caldwell to testify had been referred to the chairman of the committee, and that all communications with or from Caldwell in reference to such subject were in the hands of the chairman, to be used according to his discretion in accomplishing the object of the committee, and that no just complaint can be made of any use of such communications, providing the discretion were fairly and reasonably exercised.

Your committee would further report that they are satisfied from all the circumstances that the chairman in withholding the dispatch from the committee acted in good faith and without any purpose to injure any person involved in the investigation, and would recommend that the further consideration of the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. HURD. I move the previous question upon the adoption of this report.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HURD. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, who desires to make a statement to the House.

Mr. KNOTT. Mr. Speaker, satisfied, so far as I was personally, with the unanimous report of the Committee on the Judiciary which has just been read, completely exonerating me from any suspicion, either of a mistake in judgment or of having been actuated by any unworthy motive in relation to the matter reported upon, I had determined not to tax the patience of the House with a single word of my own until my attention was called to the following paragraph in a recent issue of the Philadelphia North American:

Josiah Caldwell has written a letter to the wife of General Sherman reiterating his entire procedure in the matter of his previous correspondence concerning Mr. Blaine's connection with the Fort Smith Railroad bonds. Re-asserting the validity of the dispatch purposely and infamously suppressed by Mr. PROCTOR KNOTT, this letter will freshly awaken the contempt of the country for a man who holding one of the highest positions in Congress could so debase himself as to seek to conceal positive evidence of the innocence of a political foe. Mr. KNOTT and his allies succeeded in keeping Mr. Blaine from the Presidency, but KNOTT at least covered himself with ineffaceable dishonor.

Since I have seen the utter and inexcusable ignorance or palpable disregard of the facts as well as the unprovoked malignity displayed in this and similar paragraphs in other papers, I feel impelled by an inexorable sense of duty to myself as well as to certain other gentlemen of the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman to ask the attention of the House to a few remarks in relation to the subject under present consideration. I do so, however, sir, under the most painful feeling of embarrassment. It is always extremely distasteful to me to be compelled to allude to myself in any manner or under any circumstauces whatever, and it is peculiarly so at this time. Especially in the absence of the late member from Maine, [Mr. Blaine,] who for the promotion of his own personal ends, and, as I shall always believe, with a full knowledge of all the facts, found it necessary to make upon this floor the unjustifiable and disingenuous imputations embodied in the resolution which has given occasion for the report just submitted. Notwithstanding the erroneous impressions with which the public mind was filled by the sublime piece of acting exhibited by the late member from Maine when this matter was for the first time and so theatrically brought to the attention of the House and the country; notwithstanding the floods of calumny and vituperation which were poured out upon me by the press of his party, and which from the paragraph I have just read it seems have not yet subsided; conscious of the correctness of my own judgment and of the rectitude of my own intentions; conscious that I had done nothing more nor less than my simple duty; conscious that I had done precisely what I ought to have done and what I would do again under similar circumstances, I waited long and patiently for his re-appearance upon this floor before opening my lips in my own vindication to be disappointed at last by the announcement of his resignation; for, sir, I had many things to say concerning his connection with this matter which I was anxious to say in his hearing here upon this floor, face to face and eye to eye, where he could have the amplest possible opportunity to be heard in reply, but which I could not and cannot now afford to say in his absence.

But, sir, he is not here. It is said that the hand of God is upon him; that he is sick; that he has found it necessary for the recuperation of his overtaxed and shattered energies, physical as well as mental, to abandon the arena in which he had so frequently displayed the most marvelous skill as a parliamentary gladiator before vindicating his personal and political integrity, which had been so fiercely assailed by members of his own political party.

However that may be, it is entirely immaterial to what I now propose to say. Whether he be really afflicted either in body or mind or only simulating disease; whether he has been actually prostrated by a protracted attack of "brain fag" or has been merely playing the part of the "old soldier" in order to postpone investigation until the popular interest in his personal concerns shall have somewhat abated, I do not know or pretend to know. I only know he is not here and does not intend to be. I shall therefore allude to him only so far as may be absolutely necessary to a proper understanding of the simple statement of facts which I propose at this time to submit solely for my own vindication upon the face of the record, in which my reputation for integrity and fairness has been wantonly and causelessly assailed.

And, sir, I desire in the very outset to call the attention of the House and the country to the pregnant fact that not a single one of the many damaging and disgraceful charges and insinuations which have been made against Mr. Blaine can be truthfully attributed to the partisan zeal or personal malignity of his political opponents. In every solitary instance they have emanated from the bosom of his own political household. In every instance they have originated with members of his own party organization. In proof of this I need not trouble the House by referring to the numerous damaging articles and letters which from time to time appeared in some of the newspapers of his own party connecting his name in no very reputable manner with various railroad corporations, and which he sought to countervail by repeatedly rising to personal explanations upon this floor instead of promptly and defiantly demanding an investigation, as he did on the occasion of the memorable Credit Mobilier scandal. I will merely call attention to the following article which appeared in the Cincinnati Gazette, a leading and influential republican newspaper, on the 27th of April; and I do so because it has a direct and immediate connection with the matter in hand:

CINCINNATI, April 26.

The Gazette to-morrow morning will publish an interview with Mr. John C. S. Harrison, of Indianapolis. Mr. Harrison makes the following statement: At the September (1872) meeting of the board of directors of the Union Pacific Railroad, at which I was present, the president of the board, Mr. Horace F. Clark, called the attention of the directors to a letter from the president of the Fort Smith and Little Rock Land Grant Railroad with reference to some bonds of that road held by the Union Pacific company. Desiring to know something more about these bonds, I made a motion to appoint a committee of three to investigate and report before the adjournment of the board as to how they came into its possession, and all matters connected therewith. Thereupon E. H. Rollins, the secretary took me to one side and told me that I must withdraw that motion for an investigation of the bond transaction as it would involve James G. Blaine. He said the fall elections were near at hand, and Blaine was a candidate for re-election to Congress in Maine. An exposure of the transaction just at that time would be sure to defeat him. With that I withdrew the motion. Subsequently I took J. H. Millard, of Omaha, who was and still remains a Government director, to Mr. Rollins, and in his presence asked Rollins if I understood him correctly in relation to the bond transaction involving Mr. Blaine. He repeated that I did, and that an investigation would be sure to kill off Mr. Blaine at the approaching election. Afterward, when the investigating committee of which Jeremiah M. Wilson was chairman was in session, and E. H. Rollins was on the stand, I telegraphed Wilson to ask the witness certain questions concerning the Fort Smith and Little Rock bonds, but in noticing the daily reports of the committee afterward I saw that no such questions were asked. On the 3d of February, 1873, I wrote to Wilson, chairman of the committee, more fully about the matter, detailing the facts that I have just stated, but I did not mention Blaine's name. I stated that the transaction implicated a prominent member of the republican party. That letter was copied into my regular letter-book at Indianapolis, and can be referred to at any time. I never received any answer to the letter to Wilson, but on the 26th of February, just twenty-three days later, Mr. Delano, Secretary of the Interior, wrote a letter to a prominent republican official, saying it was deemed best on the part of the Government to change the entire board of directors of the Union Pacific Railroad, and that he therefore proposed to appoint some one from Indiana in the place of J. S. C. Harrison. This proposition of Delano met with such strong opposition that it was abandoned and none of the directors were removed. We were engaged at that time in making an active fight against the Wyoming Coal Company, which was swindling the United States out of $500,000 or $600,000 a year.

If the committee want that letter of Delano's they can find a copy of it in the Interior Department. Bear in mind that this action on my part as a Government director, and the correspondence to which I have referred, and the effort on the part of Secretary Delano to have me removed from the board of directors occurred in 1872, and early in 1873, just about the time of the re-election of President Grant, and when neither Mr. Blaine nor any other man was spoken of in connection with the Presidency of 1876. It is therefore unreasonable to suppose that anybody at that stage of the proceedings was interested in defeating Mr. Blaine's presidential aspirations. This whole Little Rock bond matter would have been investigated by the United States court at the time but for the killing off of the Credit Mobilier suits. I showed to Mr. Jenks, the Government's special attorney, who, with three others, was charged with investigating the affair, this order of the executive committee:

"NEW YORK, December 16, 1871.

"Ordered, That Morton, Bliss & Co. be authorized to draw on the treasurer of this company for $64,000 payable at forty days from date, and hold as collateral security for the company seventy-five land-grant bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad Company's bonds, $1,000 each."

He made a copy of it in my presence and would have entered suit upon it at once had not all these Credit Mobilier suits failed in the courts, being ruled out on demurrer. In conclusion I have to say that I am ready and willing at any time to go before the Judiciary Committee of the House and make oath to the facts in this statement.

After this article had appeared and been extensively copied in the newspapers throughout the country, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TARBOX] submitted the following resolution, which was agreed to:

Whereas it is publicly alleged, and is not denied by the officers of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, that that corporation did, in the year 1871 or 1872, become the owner of certain bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad Company, for which bonds the said Union Pacific Railroad Company paid a consideration largely in excess of their actual or market value, and that the board of directors of said Union Pacific Railroad Company, though urged, have neglected to investigate said transaction: Therefore

Be it resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire if any such transaction took place, and, if so, what were the circumstances and inducements thereto, from what person or persons said bonds were obtained and upon what consideration, and whether the transaction was from corrupt design or in furtherance of any corrupt object; and that the committtee have power to send for persons and papers.

This resolution was adopted on the 2d of May, and at once referred to a subcommittee consisting of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. ASHE,] and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] which had been appointed some time previously to investigate the transactions of the various Pacific railroad companies as required by a resolution introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] and agreed to January 31.

This subcommittee was selected, as I have stated on a former occasion, without the slightest reference to Mr. Blaine whatever, and long before I had an intimation, or a suspicion even, that he would turn out to be "the man under the hay," or that the proposed investigation into the condition and transactions of those corporations would disclose anything affecting his reputation in the least possible degree. The gentlemen composing that subcommittee proceeded at once and in good faith to the inquiry committed to them with the honest intention of concluding the investigation so far as Mr. Blaine might be involved in it if possible before the meeting of the republican convention at Cincinnati, before which it was understood he would be a prominent candidate for the presidential nomination.

Among the numerous witnesses summoned was Mr. John C. S. Harrison, of Indianapolis, who was sworn and examined on the 15th of May, and who reiterated upon his oath in the most unequivocal and emphatic manner the statements I have already read from the Cincinnati Gazette, accompanied by a solemn asseveration of the kindest possible feeling toward Mr. Blaine and an earnestly expressed hope that he would come out of the investigation, to use his own language, "clear and bright."

This, as a natural matter, of course led at once to the necessity of calling Mr. E. A. Rollins, the secretary and treasurer of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, a prominent citizen of New Hampshire, and at present the Senator-elect from that State. Whether this witness was himself suffering from a recent attack of "brain fag," or was afflicted with that sudden and convenient dereliction of memory which frequently characterizes the average congressional witness, or whether he was simply endeavoring to tax the patience or test the ingenuity of the gentlemen who were examining him, I will not undertake to determine; but I will say, sir, that no unprejudiced mind, I care not what may be the cast of its political convictions, can read the record of his testimony without feeling fully satisfied that he considered himself under no legal obligation to remember anything that could not be proven by some other witness. And I will say, moreover, that nothing could more closely resemble the tedious and painful process of extracting from him what little he did see proper to remember than the unsatisfactory and vexatious operation of twisting a "possum" out of a hollow log.

The delivery of his testimony afforded a beautiful example of what the doctors would call "a breech presentation," and the accouchement was consequently a very protracted as well as an exceedingly delicate undertaking. Read his testimony, sir, and you will be convinced that the hundred eyes of Argus never watched the "Golden Fleece" more vigilantly than this doubled-and-twisted railroad official was disposed to guard the interests of his company. With regard to the purchase of the bonds in question, he says:

> If he (Mr. Blaine) had sold the bonds to the company I should think it must have been a questionable transaction. I don't know why the company should buy them of anybody. It was a transaction that I did not approve. As treasurer of the company I felt in duty bound to protect its treasury against all comers, and I did not want to pay out $64,000 or any other sum of money unless it was absolutely necessary.

Yet, sir, according to his own statement, he patiently and silently permitted this "questionable transaction" to hang like an incubus upon his pious conscience from December 19, 1871, till the 11th day of September, 1872, without saying a word about it. He "let concealment, like a worm i' the bud, feed on his damask cheek" for nearly nine long months, and never breathed his disapprobation to mortal man. On the contrary, as he admits himself, when one of the Government directors discovered for the first time that the transaction—this "questionable transaction"—had taken place, and as in duty bound moved that it should be inquired into, the honest treasurer appealed to him to withdraw the motion, that an investigation would involve Mr. Blaine, that those were Mr. Blaine's bonds, or that he had heard they were the bonds of Mr. Blaine. Yet from whom he heard it, how he heard it, when he heard it, or precisely what he did hear he could not for the life of him recollect.

Notwithstanding all of his "backing and filling," however, his testimony, taken as a whole, not only corroborated the leading statements of Mr. Harrison, but was calculated to leave the impression upon any unprejudiced mind that there was "something rotten in the state of Denmark," something perhaps, as Lord Dundreary says, "that no fellah could find out." Nor did the subsequent statements of Mr. Millard and Mr. Wilson tend in any great degree to dispel the mist in which the evidence of Mr. Rollins left the matter involved, as the House will see when the record of their testimony comes to be examined.

On the same day, May 15, Colonel Thomas A. Scott was called and examined, who testified substantially that he was president of the Union Pacific Railroad Company from the 7th of March, 1871, till the 6th of March, 1872; that he had purchased the bonds in question from Josiah Caldwell at eighty cents on the dollar, and paid him for them in money; that the Union Pacific Railroad Company took them off his hands at eighty cents on the dollar at a time when if he could have sold them at all in the market he could not probably have realized over fifty or sixty cents to the dollar on them, and that this favor was extended to him by the company in consideration of extraordinary services which he had rendered to the company as its president. But what those extraordinary services were, what he did during the first nine months of his term as president of the company to entitle him to any sum, from fifteen to twenty-two thousand dollars, over and above his regular fixed salary he did not explain. He did say, however, that he got the bonds from Josiah Caldwell and paid him eighty cents on the dollar for them, and that he sold them to the company at the same price, and that he had no knowledge or belief that Mr. Blaine was connected with them in any manner whatever, "so far as his (Scott's) connection with the transaction was concerned."

Now, sir, whether Colonel Scott knew anything about it or not, it was perfectly manifest that, if Mr. Blaine really had any connection with these bonds or was in any manner interested in or benefited by the transaction, Josiah Caldwell could explain it if he would; and it so happened that several witnesses had been summoned, who it was understood had repeatedly heard Mr. Caldwell make statements with reference perhaps to that very point. Among them was Mr. John McClure, of Arkansas, who was sworn and stated that all he knew with regard to the possession of the $75,000 in the bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad Company by the Union Pacific Railroad Company he got from Mr. Caldwell. Objection having been made, however, on the part of Mr. Blaine, to any evidence of the statements of Mr. Caldwell, because among other reasons it would be but hearsay, the point was submitted to the full committee and the objection sustained, on the ground that Mr. Caldwell was beyond the reach of the process of the House, and, as such evidence could answer no other purpose than to indicate what might possibly be proven by him, it would be unnecessary if not unjust to Mr. Blaine to take it unless there was some reasonable assurance that Caldwell's presence could be procured. It was thereupon moved by some member of the committee that a dispatch should be sent to Mr. Caldwell in Europe simply asking if he would appear and testify. But that proposition was earnestly and strenuously resisted on behalf of Mr. Blaine on the alleged ground that Caldwell would not appear even if dispatched for in the manner indicated. The force of that objection I have never been able to appreciate. It seemed to me that of all men in the world Mr. Blaine should have been the very one to demand that Caldwell should be called to testify and his attendance procured if possible. If he was innocent he must have known that the evidence of Caldwell would vindicate instead of convicting him, even if he should consent to come; and on the other hand, if he should refuse to come, that would be the end of it, and he would occupy the attitude of challenging instead of resisting the production of any testimony against him whatever, even if it had to be procured by the most extraordinary means. The objection prevailed, however, and the motion was lost, I believe, by one vote.

But, sir, viewed in the light of subsequent developments, there may have been some reason why Mr. Blaine did not desire that Mr. Caldwell should be disturbed in the quiet seclusion of his foreign residence. On the 25th of May one A. P. Robinson, an old acquaintance and intimate friend of Mr. Blaine, was called to the stand and examined with relation to his having delivered a package of Little Rock and Fort Smith bonds to Mr. Blaine from Josiah Caldwell. He admitted having delivered a package, but denied all knowledge or information from Caldwell or any one else as to its contents. He was asked if he had not stated to Mr. Curry that the package contained twenty Fort Smith and Little Rock Railroad bonds, but he positively and emphatically denied that he had made any such statement to Mr. Curry or any one else. Well, Mr. Curry was next called, and swore as positively and emphatically that Robinson had, about five weeks before that time, told him that he had carried a package containing $20,000 in bonds from Caldwell to Blaine; that he (Robinson) was certain the package contained that much, and it was Robinson's understanding that that was but an installment of the bonds that Blaine was to receive. On these conflicting statements being telegraphed to the country through the Associated Press, Mrs. Curry sent the following telegram to her husband, which was admitted by Mr. Blaine as evidence to save the necessity of calling her as a witness:

> To A. P. CURRY:
>
> Have seen your testimony as published in Associated Press dispatches, and heard Robinson tell you just what you said he did, that he gave Blaine the bonds. Price and Wheeler said Robinson told them the same.
>
> BELLE CURRY.

And, sir, it is a somewhat singular fact that Mr. Mulligan who testified some days afterward said, in speaking of a certain package of letters which Mr. Blaine had procured from him in a manner perhaps entirely peculiar to himself, "There was one letter in the package where he told Mr. Fisher how much was due on these bonds. He told him that he had received $55,000 in bonds from him and $20,000 from Caldwell on an outside matter;" but I fail to find any such statement in any of the letters as read by Mr. Blaine to the House. Perhaps Mr. Caldwell could explain this "outside matter" and tell precisely what was in the package sent by Robinson. Perhaps he might be able also to shed some light upon that mysterious conundrum which has for some time puzzled the American mind, why it is that Mr. Blaine would rather hear Gabriel blow his final trump than have Mulligan testify any further about the contents of that somewhat famous package of letters. However that may be I do not know, but so it is, the glaring conflict between the statements of Robinson and Curry and the remarkable sensitiveness of Mr. Robinson, who it will be remem bered found it necessary to sit down and write a letter to Mr. Blaine simply because the gentleman from Virginia had ventured to ask him what facts pertinent to the inquiry were within his knowledge, and who for some unexplained reason deemed it prudent to deny that he had had an interview with Mr. Blaine before he gave his testimony until the fact was dragged out of him by dint of protracted interrogation, made it evident that Mr. Caldwell's testimony would be vitally important either for or against Mr. Blaine if it could be procured; that it would exonerate him entirely or show how and to what extent he was implicated in the transaction under investigation.

The question of dispatching to Caldwell to ascertain whether he would appear and testify before the committee was accordingly brought up again in the committee on the 26th of May, and the proposition again earnestly opposed in behalf of Mr. Blaine. The motion nevertheless prevailed, and an order was entered that the chairman of the committee should telegraph Caldwell asking him if he would come. It is perhaps proper for me to add that at that time I had not been informed, and I am not aware that any of my colleagues had been informed, that Mr. Caldwell had been driven by the questionable character of some of his business transactions to the alternative of choosing between a residence in foreign climes and a temporary abode in some Massachusetts prison. I was consequently not apprised of the obstacles that might lie in the way of procuring his return to the land of his nativity, or the possible difficulty of getting the truth out of him if he should come. I accordingly set to work in good faith, and with all proper diligence, to ascertain his address, in order that I might send him the dispatch as directed. With all the inquiry I could make, however, I was unable to do so. All who were able to give me any information at all as to his whereabouts said he was somewhere on the continent of Europe, in Italy perhaps, building a railroad; but his address, or where a dispatch would reach him, no one seemed to know. On the morning of the 1st of June, before I had ever ascertained Caldwell's address, or anything with reference to his residence further than I have stated, the following dispatch was left at my room, by whom I never knew, as I was out at the time and found it lying on my table on my return:

LONDON.

To CHAIRMAN HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE, Washn.:

Have just read in New York papers Scott's evidence about our bond transaction and can fully corroborate it. I never gave Blaine any Fort Smith Railroad bonds, directly or otherwise. I have three foreign railway contracts on my hands, which makes it impossible for me to leave without great pecuniary loss, or would gladly voluntarily come home and so testify. Can make affidavit to this effect and mail it if desired.

JOSIAH CALDWELL.

The reading of this dispatch, sir, instantly and I think quite naturally suggested to my mind a variety of questions. Here was a telegram addressed from London without date, with no number, house, street, or place designated, purporting to come from a man who, as all seemed to agree, was engaged in building a railroad somewhere on the continent. How did he happen to be in London so opportunely as to read the New York papers instantly on their arrival? But supposing he was there, why should he instantly rush to a telegraph office upon reading Scott's evidence and send me a prepaid dispatch of seventy-seven words, which, as I had understood, cost a dollar in gold for every word? Though I have since learned the rates were seventy-five or seventy-eight cents in gold. Why should he propose to corroborate Scott's testimony before it was ever suggested to him that it needed any corroboration? Why should he be suddenly seized with such a morbid impulse to do so that he would not only "voluntarily" but "gladly" face the perils of the briny deep and fly to the committee-room with the alacrity of a lover to his lady's chamber in order to give his testimony but for those vile foreign railway contracts? Why should he volunteer to send over his affidavit before it was suggested to him that the committee or any one else desired his evidence in that or any other possible shape whatever? The whole thing, sir, had an extremely fishy flavor. It seemed to my mind to be the result of a scheme concocted on this side of the Atlantic to make the Judiciary Committee the instrument through which a fraud was to be palmed off upon the House and the country; for had the person most interested in having Scott's testimony indorsed sat by and dictated every word of the dispatch he could not possibly have made it more pat to the purpose.

Immediately upon reading this dispatch I carried it with me to the room where the managers of the impeachment of General Belknap were that morning to have a meeting, and on entering the room I at once communicated the fact that I had received the dispatch and its contents to those who were present. My friend, Judge LYNDE, upon reading it seemed instantly impressed with the same suspicion which was upon my own mind, and without hesitation suggested that I should not give it publicity until I had verified its authenticity, as he has since publicly stated, or I should not even now allude to the circumstance.

While we were in the managers' room James Mulligan, of Boston, was before the subcommittee on the judiciary detailing the particulars of a scene which were repeated to me before I left the room, and which I will now read in his own language:

The WITNESS. I wish to ask the indulgence of the committee for a few moments to make a personal, and to me a painful, statement. When I first arrived in this city, and within about fifteen minutes after my arrival, there came a communication from Mr. Blaine to Mr. Fisher. Of course I wish it understood that I am stating this under oath.

Mr. HUNTON. We so understand it.

The WITNESS. There came a communication from Mr. Blaine inviting Mr. Fisher and me up to his residence. I declined to go, for the reason that I did not want to have it said that I had gone to see Mr. Blaine. I wanted to come into this committee-room untrammeled by any influence. Mr. Fisher went up to Mr. Blaine's house, or at least he so reported to me; and he told Mr. Blaine about certain facts that I could prove and certain letters that I had got. Mr. Blaine said that if I should publish them they would ruin him for life, or that if this committee should get hold of them they would ruin him for life, and wanted to know if I would not surrender them. I told him "No," and that I would not give them to the committee unless it should turn out that it was necessary for me to produce them. After my examination here yesterday, Mr. Blaine came up to the hotel, the Riggs House, and there had a conference with Mr. Atkins, Mr. Fisher, and myself. He wanted to see these letters that I had. I declined to let him see them. He prayed, almost went on his knees—I would say on his knees—and implored me to think of his six children and his wife, and that if the committee should get hold of this communication it would sink him immediately and ruin him forever. I told him I should not give them to him. He asked me if I would let him read them. I said I would if he would promise me on the word of a gentleman that he would return them to me. I did let him read them over. He read them over once, and called for them again and read them over again. He still importuned me to give those papers up. I declined to do it. I retired to my own room, and he followed me up and went over the same history about his family and his children, and implored me to give them up to him, and even contemplated suicide. He asked me if I wanted to see his children left in that state, and he then asked me again if I would not let him look over these papers consecutively, (I had them numbered.) I told him I would if he would return them to me. He took the papers, read them all over, and among them I had a memorandum that I had made by way of synopsis of the letters and referring to the numbers of the letters—a synopsis containing the points of the letters. I had made that memorandum so as to be able to refer to here when questioned. He asked me to let him read the letters, and I showed him this statement too. After he had them read he asked me what I wanted to do with those papers; if I wanted to use them. I told him I never wanted to use the papers nor would not show them to the committee unless when I was called upon to do so. Then he asked me if I would not give them to him. There was one letter in particular that he wanted me to give him. I told him I would not do it, and the only reason I would not do it was because I saw it stated in one of the evening papers here (the Star, I think) that the Blaine party were going to completely break down the testimony that I had given yesterday, that they were satisfied about that. I said I should not publish these letters unless my testimony was impeached or impugned. That was the only reason that I wanted to keep them, but I wanted to keep them for that purpose. These are the facts, gentlemen, and I leave them to you. If I understand the order under which this committee meets, this committee has power to send for persons and papers, and I want this committee to get for me those papers. Mr. Blaine has got them and would not give them up to me.

These statements, as I have said, were repeated to me almost verbatim before I left the room, and again within a few minutes after I reached the floor of the House.

When I heard these things; when I heard that Mr. Blaine had been so extremely solicitous to have an interview with this witness that within fifteen minutes after his arrival in Washington he had sent him a pressing invitation to meet him at his own house; when I heard of the painful panic under which he labored when he ascertained that Mulligan had possession of certain of his letters; when I heard of his going down upon his knees and groveling abjectly in the dust before the witness, whining about the impending ruin of his wife and six children, imploring him to surrender these letters, and sniveling about suicide if he should refuse to do so; when I heard that he had finally obtained them upon an express pledge of his personal honor as a gentleman that he would return them, and that in the face of that sacred pledge, which as a gentleman he ought to have redeemed at the expense of his life if necessary, he had coolly put them in his pocket and refused to deliver them up, I submit that I had ample reason to suspect that he would not scruple a moment to concoct a fraudulent telegraphic dispatch, or hesitate to do anything else that might tend in his judgment to promote his own private or political ends. And, sir, when on the following Monday—the 6th of June last—in the climax of one of the most extraordinary exhibitions of histrionic skill, one of the most consummate pieces of acting that ever occurred upon any stage on earth, he disclosed such an accurate knowledge not only of the fact that I had received a dispatch purporting to have come from Josiah Caldwell, but of its contents and of the very hour at which it had been delivered at my house, I was as morally certain as I am at this moment that the dispatch had been concocted on this side of the Atlantic for his benefit and at his suggestion and by his procurement. He was then asked to explain how he derived that knowledge, but declined to do so. He has had ample opportunities to explain it since, but he never has; and, sir, he never will! All possible doubt upon this point was removed from my mind two days afterward when he said to me in the chamber of the Committee on the Judiciary that he had heard that I had been rummaging the telegraph offices for evidence that he had been in communication with Caldwell, when in point of fact I had not only not done so, but had not even intimated the intention of doing so to a living being on earth. Ah! sir, I saw from his very manner and the tremor in his voice that the cranes of Ibycus had appeared to a guilty and troubled conscience.

Now, sir, let us see how these conclusions of my own mind have been verified by the facts subsequently developed. At my suggestion, the managers of the Western Union Telegraph offices at Washington, Philadelphia, and New York were summoned to testify before the committee.

Mr. Whitney, the manager of the Washington office, produced the following dispatch, which he swore was received at the office at six o'clock and twenty minutes in the afternoon of the 26th of May, and sent to New York for transmission five minutes thereafter:

WASHINGTON, May 26.

To JOSIAH CALDWELL,
115 Cannon street, London, E. C., England:

See Scott's testimony, papers 16th. Telegraph Scott, Philadelphia, as you truthfully can, the strongest indorsement of his statement.

A. P. ROBINSON.

But, sir, it may be asked what evidence is there that Mr. Blaine had anything to do with sending this dispatch? His name is not signed to it! Certainly not, sir; and I never for a moment supposed nor do I imagine that any one who ever knew him would suppose that he was fool enough to put his own signature to any dispatch to Josiah Caldwell or to any one else touching this subject. O no, sir; I knew he was entirely too sharp for anything so perfectly shallow as that would have been. And I must confess that I was somewhat surprised to find that any dispatch had been sent from this city at all; for an old fox, unless he is unusually hungry, rarely robs a hen-roost close to his own hole.

But there was a considerable stress of weather about that time as we shall presently see. I felt perfectly confident from the very beginning that he had selected some willing and convenient "cat's-paw" for the purpose, and one, too, who would not hesitate to swear, if necessary, that Mr. Blaine had nothing to do with it, and no knowledge of it whatever; and, sir, when the House comes to consider his conduct before the committee, his relations to Mr. Blaine, and the light in which he is placed by the statements of Mr. and Mrs. Curry, I think they will agree with me that had Mr. Blaine started every constable and bailiff in Washington City with a search-warrant he could not have found an instrument more admirably suited to all the purposes in view than his old and intimate friend, Mr. A. P. Robinson.

But, sir, let us examine this dispatch a little and see if its "fleshmarks" indicate anything as to its paternity. It is dated May 26. On that morning the committee had directed that Mr. Caldwell should be asked by telegraph if he would appear and testify. That fact was known. Something had to be done and done quickly. Unless Caldwell was posted he might "blow" something that would ruin the whole kettle of fish. Accordingly, this dispatch is sent at six o'clock and twenty minutes that very afternoon. But why should Mr. A. P. Robinson send it? "What was he to Hecuba, or Hecuba to him?" How did Scott's testimony concern him? Why should he rush to the telegraph office and pay $25.74 in gold to have it corroborated? For that is precisely what Mr. Whitney swears this message cost. But he says, "telegraph Scott." Why Scott? Scott did not seem to have interest enough in the matter to ask that his testimony should be indorsed in such an extraordinary manner. Why not telegraph Robinson? Why not telegraph anybody else? Sir, the question can be solved only upon the hypothesis that Caldwell's answer, if favorable, was to be given to the public for the benefit of Mr. Blaine, and should consequently have an air of spontaneity about it; while if unfavorable it was never to see the light at all; the inference naturally being that if it should corroborate Scott he would be glad to publish it, while if it should not, he would be certain to be the last man on earth to say anything about it!

There seems to have been a wonderful solicitude, sir, upon the mind of somebody that Mr. Scott should be the exclusive recipient of telegraphic favors from Mr. Caldwell upon this subject; for Mr. Hicks, the clerk from the New York office, when placed upon the stand produced the following telegram, without signature, which he swore was received at the office in New York and dispatched at one o'clock and fifty minutes on the morning of May 30:

To FAVO, London:

Cable nobody excepting Scott.

Here, sir, is evidently another automaton obeying the behests of the same directing mind and echoing the earnest request that only Scott should be addressed upon this delicate subject. Nay, a third, sir; and a fourth! For here is another dispatch, which Mr. Hicks swears was dated May 31, but sent at two oclock and eighteen minutes on the morning of the 1st of June:

To JOSIAH CALDWELL—

Not Favo this time—

Tunbridge Wells, England:

Don't permit newspaper men or others to interview you.

R——.

This dispatch bore upon its face unmistakable evidences of being the joint production of at least two giant intellects, the combined labor of two or more separate and distinct hands, neither of which, according to the testimony of Mr. Whiteley, an expert in the Treasury Department, penned the message signed "A. P. Robinson." Who the person was who was most interested in this remarkable correspondence, who was the one, and the only one, immediately and vitally interested in it, and who was the moving spirit, the commander-in-chief of this troop of active and enterprising telegraphic correspondents, all animated by precisely the same motive and desiring to attain precisely the same object, I imagine it will be difficult for no fair and unprejudiced mind to infer.

But let us return to Mr. Robinson's dispatch. He says, "telegraph Scott, Philadelphia, (as you truthfully can,) the strongest indorsement of his statements." Why so solicitous, Mr. Robinson? Why so anxious? Why so superlative? Would not a mere modest indorsement suffice? Why should you ask the "strongest" indorsement of Scott's statements? But, sir, observe the parenthetical expression "as you truthfully can." Pray, Mr. Robinson, how did you know whether Caldwell could truthfully indorse Scott's statements or not? You were sworn and examined touching that very point only two days before, and what did you say then?"

Your statements, as taken down and printed, are as follows:

Question. Do you know anything of the ownership, on the part of Mr. Blaine, of any bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad Company; have you ever heard from anybody of his ownership of any such bonds?

Answer. I never have.

Q. You know absolutely nothing of his ownership or possession of any Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad bonds?

A. Absolutely nothing.

Q. Ei y your own knowledge or by information derived from others?

A. No, sir.

There you swear that you knew absolutely nothing, either of your own knowledge or from information derived from others, concerning the ownership or possession of any of these bonds by Mr. Blaine, absolutely nothing! You were as ignorant upon that subject as an oyster is of the Darwinian theory of the descent of man, yet you undertake to assure Mr. Caldwell that he can truthfully telegraph the strongest indorsement of Scott's statements without reservation or exception. How is this sir?

Had you—

Unto truth, by telling of it,
Made such a sinner of your memory
To credit your own lie?

Or were you a mere Dutch toy that squeaked when your master's hand touched the spring?

But, sir, it is useless to dwell upon this point. To those who have long been familiar with Mr. Blaine's style of expression, the paternity of this Robinson dispatch is as plainly indicated on its face as the legitimacy of his eldest born.

Well, sir, it seems that Mr. Caldwell, in pursuance of the request conveyed in this telegram, dispatched the following on the 31st of May to Colonel Scott, one of the shrewdest and most cautious, clear-sighted men in America, and withal, as I am informed, and would certainly infer from his testimony, a very warm personal friend of Mr. Blaine's:

LONDON, May 31

Your statement to the congressional committee on the 16th relating to the Fort Smith Railway bonds which you purchased of me is perfectly correct. I can more fully substantiate it if necessary.

And what did he do, sir? Did he unhesitatingly accept this as a genuine dispatch from Josiah Caldwell and rush off to some newspaper office and blazon it to the world without taking a single step to verify its authenticity? Did he ever say a word or do a single act that would give the world the slightest suspicion of the vital fact that such a telegram ever had an existence until it was brought out by the committee, or did he maliciously and nefariously put it in his pocket and say nothing whatever about it? He has been sworn and examined upon that point; let him speak for himself. He says:

So strange did it seem that before I sent my reply to Caldwell I sent one of my clerks over to the telegraph office to verify that cable from him and see whether it was all right. This matter created an impression on my mind that there might be something wrong about the whole movement; but the telegraph company assured me that it was all perfectly regular and legal, and that it had been sent from London a direct message of thirty-four words. There was no question about the genuineness of the cable.

Is it any more remarkable that I should have suspected the genuineness of the dispatch received by me and sought to verify its authenticity before giving it publicity than that Colonel Scott, the warm personal friend of Mr. Blaine, should suspect the good faith of the one sent to him, or that he should never have breathed a syllable of its contents to mortal man until he had verified it? Why, then, has he not been gibbeted by the republican press throughout the country as a malicious and hell-deserving miscreant for having suppressed its existence until it was unearthed by the committee in its examination of the telegraphic officials?

But, sir, it seems that Colonel Scott's suspicions were excited or at least heightened by the appearance in his office almost simultaneously with this telegram of a young man calling himself Reed, who represented himself as the former clerk of Caldwell, who was extremely solicitous that the committee should have all the light that could possibly be procured, and who had prepared for that purpose a dispatch which he proposed to telegraph to Caldwell at Scott's expense, to be echoed back to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, to be by them accepted with good, easy-minded, unsuspecting credulity, and given to the world as evidence of the innocence of Mr. Blaine. Colonel Scott, however, declined either to furnish the money or to have anything to do with the matter whatever, as any honorable man would.

The exigency was pressing, however, so this enterprising and public-spirited youth determined to send the dispatch at all hazards and at his own expense. The committee was suffering for additional evidence, and the public good demanded it, and what was the paltry sum of $57.72 to him in a great popular emergency like that? He accordingly went over to the telegraph office in Philadelphia, and sent the following at three o'clock and fifty-one minutes in the afternoon of May 31:

"To Favo," which turns out to be the mellifluous pseudonym of Mr. Josiah Caldwell. My acquaintance with foreign languages is extremely limited, sir, but I am informed that favo is the Italian word for "honey-comb," and I have no doubt that to many a citizen of Maine there appears to be a beautiful and poetic propriety in this delicious nom de plume when they think of the thousands of their hard-earned dollars which went to line the pockets of the sweet-scented Mr. Caldwell through the instrumentality of his enterprising bond-broker, Mr. Blaine. Sweet Favo! Thou gushing receptacle of the luscious treasures extracted from many a modest flower by the disinterested and indefatigable Bee!

Dispatch received. Cable this immediately to chairman House Judiciary Committee, Washington: Have just read Scott's evidence about our bond transaction in New York newspapers and can fully corroborate it. I never gave Blaine any Little Rock bonds, directly or otherwise. Am now building three European railroads and cannot leave without great pecuniary loss or would gladly voluntarily come home and so testify. Can make affidavit to this effect and mail it if desired.

And straightway the echo answered:

CHAIRMAN HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE, Washington:

Have just read in New York papers Scott's evidence about our bond transaction and can fully corroborate it. I never gave Blaine any Fort Smith Railroad bonds directly or otherwise. I have three foreign railway contracts on my hands which makes it impossible for me to leave without great pecuniary loss or would gladly voluntarily come home and so testify. Can make affidavit to this effect and mail it if desired.

JOSIAH CALDWELL.

How excessively ardent and impatient this enthusiastic young patriot was, to be sure. There is no time to be lost. The Judiciary Committee is after your address. "Cable this immediately." What marvelous powers of clairvoyance he possessed! As a "mind-reader" the universe never has and never will behold his parallel. Far over the wide waste of waters, full three thousand miles away, he knew as infallibly what was hidden away in the innermost chambers of Caldwell's intellect as if he had been his animating spirit. He knew to an everlasting certainty that he had read the New York papers of the 16th. He knew that Caldwell could not only corroborate, but "fully' corroborate every statement Scott had made, to the very last dot. He knew that Caldwell never did in his life, at any time or under any circumstances, let Blaine have any Little Rock bonds. He knew that Caldwell was building three European railroads and that he would suffer great pecuniary loss if he should leave. He knew that the sole reason which could by any possibility restrain Caldwell from rushing home to give his testimony was the apprehension of that very pecuniary loss. He knew he would come, and come gladly; that he would come with his heart bounding and his face radiant with joy; that he would come not only gladly but voluntarily, even if the coast were lined with bumbailiffs from the Bay of Fundy to Cape Sable and a thousand prisons yawned to receive him deeper and darker than the gloomy cavern of Avernus. And he knew he would make an affidavit to that effect and mail it if necessary. He knew that whatever mess of hell-broth he might concoct he simply had to say "gape, sinner, and swallow" and Mr. Caldwell would shut his eyes and blindly gulp it down. There was one thing, however, which I presume he did not know, or if he did he omitted to instruct Mr. Caldwell what to say about it. While he knew that Caldwell did not let Blaine have the bonds, he did not know whether Blaine let Caldwell have them, and whether Caldwell was or was not the intermediary through which the bonds passed from Blaine to Scott and the money from Scott to Blaine; nor do I know.

But, sir, it is said that Mr. Caldwell in the exuberance of his philanthropy has adopted this dispatch, this illegitimate vagrant, begotten, conceived, and born on this side of the Atlantic three thousand miles away from its generous benefactor. Certainly he has. Nobody denies that. And, sir, in my opinion he would just as readily adopt a telegram requesting him to state that to his personal knowledge Mr. Blaine stood by and gave directions while the Creator wheeled the dirt out of which the world was made, and "make affidavit to that effect and mail it if required" besides. But that is not the point. The question is, Who was the father of that bastard foundling? Was it Reed? Or did he only carry the basket and lay it at Caldwell's door and ring the bell, and ask the benevolent soul to take the little stranger in? Who is Reed anyhow that he should take such a lively interest in this matter? Where does he reside? Has he really "a local habitation and a name?" If he has a name he was careful not to subscribe it to this dispatch. And moreover, Mr. Heber Robinson, the telegraphic manager at Philadelphia, swears that when he delivered the dispatch for transmission he not only refused to disclose his name but the place of his residence also. It would seem from Scott's testimony that he was extremely anxious that the committee should have all the evidence possible; yet there has been a subpœna for him in the hands of the Sergeant-at-Arms from the 26th day of last May requiring his attendance before that same committee, and the cities of New York and Philadelphia, and I believe some others, have been searched time after time by the officers of this House in the diligent, vain endeavor to find him. If his attendance could have been procured however, I have no doubt he would have sworn that the telegram sent by him to Caldwell was the emanation of his own unassisted intellect, neither suggested nor procured by another. He was no doubt employed with special reference to his ability as well as his willingness to swear to that or anything else that might be necessary in an emergency. But, sir, were he to swear it until his head became as white as the eternal snow that crowns the summit of Mont Blanc, there is not an unprejudiced mind on the continent that would believe him for a single moment in the light of all the facts and circumstances I have stated.

Sir, if Mr. Reed was acting simply and solely upon his own suggestion, if there was no one behind him for whom he was acting the part of the pliant tool or the hired emissary, why the necessity of so much mystery? Why did he so persistently refuse to disclose his name to Mr. Heber Robinson, the manager of the telegraph office in Philadelphia, from which he sent his dispatch? Why did he conceal his place of residence when Mr. Robinson's clerk desired to know it? If this was a perfectly straight, fair, and honorable transaction surely no gentleman need to be ashamed of his participation in it. Why then all this mystery? If Mr. Caldwell knew nothing damaging to Mr. Blaine why the necessity of urging him through the media of costly telegraphic dispatches "to cable nobody but Scott" and not to suffer himself to be interviewed by newspaper men or others? If there was no conspiracy in the matter, directed by one interested and superintending genius, how did it happen that so many persons, some in Washington, some in Philadelphia, and others in New York, should be animated by the identical, same motive, at precisely the same time, and at that particular time of all others, to effect the very same object; and that, too, an object in which neither of them could have had as much interest personally as they would in a diamond mine in the crater of some extinct volcano in the moon?

But, sir, it is unnecessary for me to dwell further upon the facts I have arrayed here. To do so it occurs to me would seem like a premeditated insult to the intelligence of this House. They need no comment. They speak for themselves. They show to the exclusion of a reasonable doubt precisely what I suspected the moment I read the dispatch purporting to have come from Caldwell, that it was concocted in this country, telegraphed to London, and echoed back in order that the Judiciary Committee might be made the unwitting instrument through which a fraud might be perpetrated upon the House and the country, and that the whole scheme originated in the fertile brain of Mr. James G. Blaine.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. Speaker, I do not know when I have been more pained than I have been to-day, when my feelings have been so wounded or when in my life I have so suddenly lost a confidence which had slowly but surely been builded up.

An attempt by me to review the testimony taken under the Tarbox resolution is entirely unnecessary now. The attempt to review it and to pronounce judgment by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] when the Committee on the Judiciary have postponed the further consideration of the case until next December, was without the slightest justification in honor or in parliamentary law. I will simply say, in regard to that testimony, that when it is reported to this House it will convince beyond any question or doubt every honest, sincere seeker after the truth that Hon. James G. Blaine never had aught to do with the $70,000 of Little Rock and Fort Smith bonds that were purchased of Mr. Caldwell and sold to the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

And further, I dare assert that no member of the subcommittee of the judiciary who has listened to that testimony has remaining in his mind to-day a single suspicion that Hon Mr. Blaine ever had aught to do with the bonds which the House ordered the committee to investigate. None but a mind filled with jealousy, filled with malice, filled with wicked purpose, would dare pronounce judgment against a peer of his on the floor of this House on any such testimony as that.

And, sir, I do not propose to review the testimony in regard to the Caldwell dispatch. That testimony was taken by the Committee on the Judiciary in their committee-room, to be passed upon by the Judiciary Committee as such, and then, by them, if they desired to do it, to be reported to this House; and there is no justification for the chairman of that committee to rise here as chairman or as a member of that committee and report to this House that testimony and his conclusions thereon.

The committee has reported this morning and their report has been read to the House. I submit that on the testimony in that case, when the whole of it shall have been printed and brought before the House, it will be found that it fails to show in any way whatsoever that Mr. Blaine inspired or sent or sought or asked that any dispatches should be sent to Mr. Caldwell; and I now say to the chairman of the committee what I have said to him again and again, that neither Mr. Blaine nor I had the slightest interest in the matter; that I would not appear as counsel, nor would Mr. Blaine appear as a party in that investigation, and that he might pursue it to the very bitter end, and at that end he would not find Hon. James G. Blaine.

And I say that no mind that was not made reckless by bitterness, by malice, by wicked purpose, would ever dare assert in this House, before the completion of the testimony and its printing for the use of the House, that Hon. Mr. Blaine "instigated," "stood over," helped on Mr. Reed, the clerk of Mr. Caldwell, in the sending to his employer in London the dispatch which has been read by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Now in the progress of this investigation, as the gentleman from Kentucky says, he was directed by the Judiciary Committee to telegraph to Caldwell. Every man around here—Mr. Sickles, who was with the chairman of the Judiciary Committee every day, Mr. Robinson, who was here—a half a dozen gentlemen found ways and means to communicate with Mr. Caldwell forthwith. The gentleman from Kentucky, whose duty it was to communicate with him, failed utterly and entirely to do so until days after the instructions were given and after he received a telegram from Mr. Caldwell. Why?

Again, when Mr. Blaine was preparing his defense he learns that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, a colleague of his in the Fortieth Congress, I believe, a colleague of his in the Forty-fourth Congress, had received a telegram from Josiah Caldwell in London completely exonerating him, Mr. Blaine, from even a suspicion of connection with the bonds sold by Caldwell to Mr. Scott and by Mr. Scott to the Pacific Railroad Company. Reporter after reporter was sent to the gentleman from Kentucky after June 1, when he had received the dispatch, to inquire of him whether or not he had received any such telegram. And each one of them came away with the impression that Mr. KNOTT had not heard anything from Mr. Caldwell in London.

Finally, on the morning before Mr. Blaine made his explanation in this House he learned conclusively that Mr. KNOTT had received the dispatch on the 1st of June; that he had kept it in his pocket up to that day at any rate without showing it, so far as he could learn, to any member of the Judiciary Committee and certainly not to Mr. Blaine's friend on that committee, Mr. FRYE, who was also on terms of friendship with the gentleman from Kentucky.

Now I submit, and I say it boldly, that on that statement alone my colleague, Mr. Blaine, was justified beyond any question in the charge he made upon the gentleman from Kentucky on that memorable Monday on the floor of the House. The gentleman may say, "You have signed the report or agreed to the report exculpating me." I am sorry to say that I did.

Mr. KNOTT. You can take your name off the report, so far as I am concerned, if you desire to do so.

Mr. FRYE. I am obliged to the gentleman; I will do so with the greatest pleasure.

Now as to this report: After that attack was made upon the gentleman from Kentucky he did not feel so brilliant as he evidently does to-day. While Mr. Blaine was on the floor of the House the gentleman from Kentucky did not undertake to make any attack upon him; but he did when Mr. Blaine charged him with the suppression, make a feeble and unworthy defense. While I was acting as a member of the Judiciary Committee, and not as counsel for Mr. Blaine, gentlemen who were friends of the gentleman from Kentucky were asking at my hands that I should agree to a report which should exculpate that gentleman. His friends were saying to me, "He desires exculpation because he has received unfriendly looks and unfriendly criticisms from his own side of the House." And when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] drew this carefully worded report and in his room submitted it to me for inspection, I saw that it was drawn with a care which is seldom bestowed upon an ordinary report. I saw that it treated the matter as a legal proposition entirely. The first proposition discussed was whether or not the Caldwell telegram was evidence. Now there is no lawyer in Christendom who would not stultify himself by undertaking to declare that that Caldwell telegram was evidence. When that was submitted to me as a lawyer as the report of the committee, what was there for me to do except to say, "Not guilty, if you put it upon legal technicalities." The second proposition of the gentleman from Ohio was that not being evidence, it follows logically that the dispatch could not be a suppressed instrument of evidence. Any lawyer in Christendom would stultify himself if he should vote "no" on that proposition; and I was not prepared to vote "no."

Then he carefully takes a step further and says that legally this telegram was a matter for the chairman of the committee; that he was not instructed to report it to any committee; that it was a matter in his own discretion. The only thing in which I did wrong was in concurring in the statement of that report that he exercised this discretion in good faith. Why do I say that? I started out by saying that I was pained beyond words to express with a loss of confidence to-day in a gentleman in whom that confidence has been growing slowly but surely during this whole session of Congress. I have boarded with the gentleman from Kentucky, he and I have sat at the same table, and lived on terms of intimacy which up to this time nothing has disturbed. I have admired him socially; I have admired him intellectually. In private life, his powers of mind naturally brilliant, thoroughly cultivated, have made him to me a delightful companion. I have learned to love the gentleman from Kentucky as I seldom learn to love men. Impelled by that love, I dared to take the ground in the committee, and I dared to take the ground at home in Maine, in spite of sharp criticisms, that the gentleman from Kentucky had not malice in his heart when he suppressed that telegram. I dared to take the ground that living down in Kentucky in an agricultural district, remote from any knowledge of cable telegrams, he was excusable for his ignorance in not knowing when he received that telegram that he could have learned in five minutes' time whether Caldwell had sent it from London and where Caldwell was in that city; that he was excusable for his ignorance of the fact that he could have telegraphed for Caldwell's affidavit in five minutes and in an hour's time could have received an affidavit which would have exculpated my colleague, Mr. Blaine, from even a suspicion in this matter. I say that with the affection I had learned to have for the gentleman and with the knowledge which I had gained in respect to him and the circumstances surrounding him, I did honestly, happily, gladly exculpate him and did say that he kept back that telegram in good faith.

But, sir, the exhibition of malice that the gentleman from Kentucky has dared to make on the floor of this House to-day in the absence of the gentleman from Maine satisfies me that I had not sounded the deep recesses of his heart. A gentleman who will stand here in his place when he knows as he knows himself that God struck down Mr. Blaine and that for two days and a half he never uttered one word, never recognized wife or children, that for two days and a half his eyes were not closed—a gentleman, I say, who knowing this dares to stand on the floor of this House, in the presence of its members, in the absence of Mr. Blaine, and insinuate that that was all a part of the play in which he was a great and leading character, and that he plays his part admirably—shows a malice filling his whole heart driving out discretion, driving out justice, driving out affection, driving out all that is good and pure and holy, and filling it entirely with its own devilish and wicked form. If that feeling is there to-day in full growth, in vigorous life, then it was there when the telegram from Caldwell was originally received; and if it was there then, I say for the republican members of this House that they will be justified in voting to a man that this report from the Judiciary Committee is not a fair, a just, a righteous report, and that it ought to be recommitted.

I yield to my colleague, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman from Maine allow me one minute?

Mr. HALE. For what purpose?

Mr. HUNTON. There was a remark which fell from the gentleman from Maine who has just addressed the House that I should probably say something in response to. He stated, in the course of his remarks, that he dare assert that there was not one member of that subcommittee who had a lingering suspicion that Mr. Blaine had anything to do with those Little Rock and Fort Smith bonds. I believe I repeat you correctly?

Mr. FRYE. Did I not say any gentleman with an honest, unprejudiced mind? (Laughter and applause on the republican side.)

Mr. HUNTON. Does the gentleman mean to say that I am not of that list? Answer.

Several MEMBERS. Make him answer.

Mr. FRYE. You must draw your own inference.

Mr. HUNTON. If he does, I pronounce——

Mr. HALE rose.

Several MEMBERS. Let him answer.

Mr. HUNTON. What does the gentleman from Maine say?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Let him answer.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire an answer from the gentleman from Maine. Does he mean to say I am not honest?

Mr. FRYE. You heard the remark I made. If you necessarily draw the inference——

Mr. HUNTON. Do you intend that inference to be drawn?

Mr. FRYE. I intended——

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CLYMER in the chair.) The gentleman from Massachusetts rises to a point of order, and will state it.

Mr. HOAR. I make the point of order that it is not in order for one member of the House to ask another member whether he is or is not honest, a reply to which in the negative would clearly be unparliamentary.

Several MEMBERS. Let him answer the question categorically.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask the gentleman from Maine to answer me categorically if he meant by that remark any personal——

Mr. FRYE. The one hour which was given to this side is being consumed by the gentleman from Virginia, who has no right to the floor.

Mr. HUNTON. I trust this time will not be taken from the other side. I desire to call the attention again of the gentleman from Maine to the fact that before I had answered him, before I had completed my sentence, he interposed a remark here from which an improper inference in regard to my character might be drawn.

Mr. FRYE. What does the gentleman desire me to say?

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to ask you categorically whether you meant to reflect upon my character in that remark?

Mr. FRYE. I meant to say, sir, that, in my honest opinion, from the commencement of that investigation of Mr. Blaine down to Mr. Blaine's attack upon you there was perhaps no more than the ordinary prejudice in your mind resulting from the attack which Mr. Blaine had made on the floor of this House against the democratic side. I meant to say further that after Mr. Blaine made the attack in this House on a Monday, and after Mr. Blaine read the letter of Robinson in which he said that he had been called by you into your room and had been questioned for a long time to find out what he knew and your reply to the gentleman from Maine, I do not believe from that time to this your mind has been without prejudice against my colleague.

Mr. HUNTON. That is all you meant to say, then?

Mr. FRYE. That is all I meant to say.

Mr. HUNTON. Very well; then I desire to go on and finish what I rose to state.

Mr. FRYE. I cannot yield any more time.

Mr. HUNTON. But I have not made my response to your remark.

Mr. FRYE. Does it come out of our time?

Mr. HUNTON. Not at all.

The gentleman stated he dare assert that there was not a member of that subcommittee who had a lingering suspicion in his mind that Mr. Blaine had the remotest connection with these Little Rock and Fort Smith bonds.

Mr. FRYE. Which went into the Union Pacific Railroad?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, sir. All I desire to say is this: With that remark of the gentleman from Maine going to the country, and not responded to by me, it would seem to be an indorsement that I had come to the conclusion he gave. I desire to say, sir, that I had endeavored from the start to keep my mind clear of conclusions until the testimony was all in. That testimony is not all in. The taking of it has been interrupted by a motion to postpone it on the part of Mr. Blaine, and the testimony not being all in, I for one have not come to any conclusion on the subject.

Mr. FRYE. Let me ask the gentleman, then, if that is so, do you justify the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary in bringing that matter before this House?

Mr. HUNTON. The chairman acts for himself and I for myself.

Mr. FRYE. Answer me categorically; do you justify the chairman of the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. TUCKER. I call the gentleman from Maine to order. He has no right to address my colleague in that way.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us have fair play.

Mr. FRYE. I now yield to my colleague, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there left of the hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One-half hour.

Mr. HALE. There have been during this winter some animosities excited and asperities have at times been keen upon this floor. Between the two parties represented here combat has been almost incessantly waged. There has grown out of these conflicts more or less of personal feeling. My former colleague, Mr. Blaine, was not infrequently foremost. He gave and he took hard blows. He never smote in the back. His combats were always open and manly and everybody opposed to him knew his ground and had fair opportunity for thrust and parry.

By common consent, Mr. Speaker, all of this strife, insofar as he was concerned, it has been agreed shall be considered as a matter of the past. The Judiciary Committee has determined, after full deliberation, the gentleman from Kentucky as chairman participating, that the subject-matters upon which my colleague was more than once impelled upon this floor should be taken from the field of investigation and for the time being should cease to be discussed. The committee voted unanimously that they should go over until the next session of this House in December. I have failed to hear on this side of the House or on that side of the House until to-day any murmur of dissent from that conclusion of the Law Committee of the House. For at the time when it was reached my former colleague lay upon his bed of sickness. He had been struck down on that memorable Sunday when devoted friends in a city near where the gentleman from Kentucky lives were maintaining his cause and presenting him for the highest honors of the American Republic. There had supervened a lingering and dangerous illness, from which he has only until very lately been hopefully partially relieved. At the time when the committee arrived at this conclusion, it was agreed that in consideration of all the circumstances of the case my colleague should have what any person in any court would always have accorded to him, an order of continuance.

The Committee on the Judiciary has also since then agreed to a report unanimously giving its exoneration to the gentlemen from Kentucky in relation to the suppression of the Caldwell dispatch; and, Mr. Speaker, that report would have passed unchallenged this morning but for the remarkable exhibition of the gentleman from Kentucky. I wish to say here that my colleague from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] a member of the Judiciary Committee, in agreeing to that report, although he may have been blamed for it by party friends here or by friends at home in the State of Maine, did it in full consultation with me; and, although I am not a member of that committee, any blame that has been laid at his door, any censure that falls upon him here or elsewhere, should equally fall upon me, for I joined with him in believing that no injustice would be done to any one by gratifying the fervent desire of a gentleman who believed himself aggrieved and wanted to be righted.

I did not think the gentleman from Kentucky free from blame in keeping the dispatch, but I was willing to be persuaded that he had not been swayed by malicious motives. The gentleman from Kentucky has chosen to open the whole matter. If by this opening he has gained or any friend of his has gained anything or Mr. Blaine has lost anything, I have failed to appreciate the occasion. We have had a most remarkable manifestation, such as is not often seen here; a manifestation of combined deliberation and passion; the passion that does not choose it words, but thrusts them forth recklessly, without regard to facts and testimony; the deliberation that lies masked until a dreaded enemy has disappeared from the field before it steps forth for a public expression. We have had the two combined in a manner that in my experience has never been presented here before. And I doubt not, sir, that I am justified in saying that it will never be presented here again.

Sir, the gentleman from Kentucky is chairman of the Law Committee of the House of Representatives. To that committee is intrusted a legal investigation. Every member of that committee sits and acts as a judge in a semi-judicial capacity. The investigation is arrested midway. It lies over by the unanimous consent of the committee; and the minds of the judges who are holding this question in abeyance should be as free and as clear from prejudice and passion as the minds of the judges who sit in our highest courts. But the gentleman from Kentucky, the chairman of this legal committee, with this investigation pending and a final report put off, dares to come into this House and not only to discuss the matter covered in this report, and I believe he did it without any knowledge on the part of the gentleman presenting it of what he proposed to do; dares not only to discuss the report upon which no other member of the committee proposed to say a single word, but vehemently and with malignity in every breath goes into the whole relations of my former colleague with the entire investigation. Why, sir, what would be thought of a judge who during an adjournment of court should mount the stand and in public proceed to argue one side of the case committed to him? Nay, sir; more than this, it is a breach of the good faith that was entered into by that committee such as no member on this floor has ever been disgraced by participation in or even beholding. There is nothing in the records of congressional proceedings since I have been here that at all compares with the enormity of this deliberate breach of faith that had been entered into by the Committee on the Judiciary that this whole affair should be postponed until next December. I charge this directly upon the gentleman from Kentucky.

Whether the gentleman from Kentucky has, in the turbulence of his inflamed passion, realized the full position that he occupied here in this remarkable speech of his before the members of this House and before the country, is not for me to judge. But if anything should be depended upon, if anything should be considered sacred in this House, it is the conclusion of a committee like the Judiciary Committee, that the minds of its members should remain undisturbed by warrings and passions, and that an important, perhaps exciting, subject-matter pending before them should be laid away in peace only to be taken up at a time agreed upon. Mr. Blaine relied upon this; my colleague [Mr. FRYE] relied upon it; I relied upon it; the country expected it.

I have had heretofore a confidence in the Law Committee such as would justify me in feeling that the course invariably pursued in such cases would be pursued here; but the gentleman has chosen to break through all agreements and to come here and to argue this case.

Mr. Speaker, there is no man here who has not been pained at the exhibition of to-day. The report would have been probably passed without question. Now, in what I say here I do not address the republican members alone but gentlemen upon the other side. This report, Mr. Speaker, proceeds largely upon a technical ground, which is undoubtedly good law, and no man could express it better than the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] who presented the report. That the bare telegram of Caldwell was not legal testimony, and that therefore there was technically no suppression of legal evidence, nobody will deny. My former colleague never claimed that it was legal testimony when he made that memorable assault which the gentleman from Kentucky at least has not forgotten. What he claimed was that the faith was bad, that there had not been given the same publicity to that dispatch that would have been given had its contents been different and borne hardly upon him instead of wholly exonerating him as it did. He believed and he charged that in this last case the dispatch would have been heralded upon every flashing wire throughout the land to his detriment. He did not claim that technically it was a suppression of legal evidence, and so the report standing upon legal propositions is justified and is good law. There is the further point to which my colleague has so well adverted that I need not say more than a word upon it. The report does negative the proposition that there was malice in the heart of the gentleman from Kentucky. I think there is no man here who has listened to the outpourings of his "limed soul" who does not feel that envenomed malice moves him now. No man can doubt it, and, Mr. Speaker, this enters into the whole question of that part of the resolution which grounds the conduct of the gentleman from Kentucky upon good faith and freedom from malicious motives. For, Mr. Speaker, the malice that held this House for an hour and a quarter to-day actuating and impelling almost every sentence that the gentleman uttered was not a malice that has just been born. It has lain imbedded in the gentleman's heart for weeks and for months.

It is the malice that "lieth in wait;" it is the "long gallop that never tires;" it shows conclusively that my colleague was wrong and that I was wrong in counseling him as I did to join in that report, believing that it had been a mistake and an error, but not with a malicious purpose. No member here is called upon to vote for this resolution if it is pressed, as it should not be.

And with this I dismiss the gentleman from Kentucky, saying only this as I close: This discussion has been opened by the gentleman, choosing, as he did, his own time and choosing well; for I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and I say it to him, that had my late colleague sat here in his seat as we all remember him, the gentleman from Kentucky would no more have made his speech than the mousing owl would venture forth when the "eagle is in the sky, towering in his pride of place." [Great applause on the floor and in the galleries."]

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hopes that there will be no demonstrations, either of applause or of dissent, made on the floor of the House. Gentlemen certainly understand that it is entirely out of order.

Mr. McCRARY. I was not present with the Committee on the Judiciary when the report now under consideration was agreed to, being at that time absent from the city; and therefore of course I did not agree to it.

I regret as much as any gentleman upon this floor can regret that the chairman of the committee should have seen fit to take advantage of this opportunity afforded him by the magnanimity of his colleagues upon the committee to discuss the whole subject of the investigation which has been for some time pending before us and is yet unfinished. The impropriety of such a course is manifest.

Sir, if there is a tribunal anywhere on the face of the earth that ought to proceed with deliberation, that ought to proceed with fairness, that ought to adhere to those rules of law and of evidence which the experience of a thousand years has shown to be necessary to the protection of innocence and the punishment of guilt, it is a committee of Congress charged, not with settling questions involving paltry dollars and cents, but charged with the duty of making an investigation which affects the honor, the reputation, the character of a fellow-member. And surely, even if other committees might disregard these great and important principles, the Law Committee of this House ought never to lose sight of them.

I was disposed to agree to the report of the committee, because it is founded upon a correct principle of law, but I was not prepared to find that in the midst of this investigation the merits of it would be brought before the House and the whole case from beginning to end be discussed here by one of the judges who is finally to decide it.

Holding the views I do touching the duty of each member of a committee charged with an inquiry involving personal character, I much regret that what has fallen from the lips of the chairman of the committee seems to require a statement in reply concerning the merits of this unfinished investigation. I should have preferred to remain silent for the present, as I think becomes every gentleman on the committee. But the chairman of the committee has chosen to express an opinion at this time, and as I cannot by my silence accept his conclusions I have no alternative but to state my own.

I have no time now to review the evidence; I have no heart to do it. But this much I desire to say; that after the first day of the investigation, when three witnesses testified to their absolute and personal knowledge concerning the facts that the committee were charged to ascertain, there has really been nothing for that committee to investigate; nothing for it to do but to report the facts. If I am called upon here and now to express an opinion, that is the only opinion I can express.

The committee were charged to inquire how the Union Pacific Railroad Company had come into the possession of certain bonds, from whom it had obtained them, and for what consideration. On the first day of the investigation three witnesses were called, Colonel Thomas A. Scott, Mr. Carnagie, and Mr. Morton, a banker in New York, all of whom testified to their personal knowledge of the manner in which the bonds were obtained. The testimony of these witnesses showed conclusively that the Union Pacific Railroad purchased said bonds from Colonel Thomas A. Scott, and that Colonel Scott purchased them from Mr. Caldwell, and that Mr. Blaine was in no way, shape, or manner connected with the transaction, either directly or indirectly. Why were not these facts reported?

Sir, I cannot but call to mind another investigation by a committee of this House, and I cannot but contrast here the course taken by the two committees. In one case the gentleman accused was an honored Ex-Speaker of this House; in the other, the accused party was the Speaker of the House. Both were men of the highest character; one was a republican, the other a democrat. When the testimony concerning the Ex-Speaker was complete and overwhelming in his vindication, the Judiciary Committee refused to report and continued the investigation, sending out for further testimony and seeking to find somebody who perchance might contradict some one of those witnesses who had testified in his vindication. Month after month the inquiry went on after, as I have said, three witnesses of the highest character had testified to their personal knowledge that the Ex-Speaker had no connection whatever with the transaction in question, and after he on his oath had asserted the same thing.

How different was the course of the committee in the case of the Speaker of the House. When he was accused by the testimony of a witness on the stand, how swift was the committee to send for other witnesses to impeach his accuser and how prompt was the committee to come in with their report vindicating entirely the Speaker from these charges. And how ready and generous was every member upon this side of the House in joining with one voice, without dissent, in vindicating him against what we all believed to be a false charge. Fully believing as I do in the entire innocence of the Speaker, truth compels me to say that his vindication was not so complete, was not so thorough, was not so overwhelming as the vindication of James G. Blaine by the testimony adduced on the very first day of the investigation concerning him. Is that fair, is that impartial? Sir, if James G. Blaine had been our democratic Speaker instead of a republican Ex-Speaker, how prompt, how complete, how emphatic, and how unanimous would have been his vindication at the hands of this House.

The report now made to the House is based upon the ground that the telegram from Caldwell was not evidence under the law. I cannot but remark another thing, and that is that upon the other side of the House there are gentlemen who are exceedingly technical in demanding legal evidence when it is convenient for them and for the interest of democracy to be so, but who utterly disregard the rules of evidence when a republican is charged and may be smirched by admitting that which is not evidence.

I have here the testimony in an investigation in which a republican ex-member of this House, a late minister to England, General Schenck, was concerned. In hurriedly looking over these pages, I have counted some thirty dispatches, some of them cable dispatches, not one signed by the party accused, nor by anybody authorized by him, no more competent as evidence than the Caldwell dispatch, all which are spread upon this record and published abroad as evidence in the investigation and for the purpose of smirching him. And you must secrete, you must suppress, you must keep out of the record a dispatch which exonorates and vindicates a republican member of this House, because it is not evidence.

Sir, I cannot go further into this discussion now. I say, however, that if the rule which has been followed when a democrat was to be investigated, if the policy which has been pursued when a democrat was concerned, had been followed in the case of James G. Blaine, we long ago would have had a report exonerating him and vindicating his good name.

Mr. FRYE. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. HOAR. I assented to the report which has been read to the House, not on any technical ground, but because I deemed the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] incapable of the act of suppression charged against him. I thought so, because his high position as a Representative of the honorable State of Kentucky and as the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of this House outweighed any suspicions which grew out of the facts which were before the committee. I had not then heard the speech which the gentleman from Kentucky has made this morning. I listened to that speech with the profoundest sorrow and shame. If I had heard it before, I should not have assented to that report.

Mr. FRYE. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.]

Mr. LAWRENCE. No member of this House and no member of the Judiciary Committee can more sincerely regret the exhibition which we have witnessed this day than I do. My relations with all the members of the Judiciary Committee have been of the most pleasant character. I have received marks of kindness from the chairman of that committee which I shall never forget. It is, therefore, with extreme reluctance that I rise to say what I conceive my duty requires on this occasion, and it is with extreme regret that I find myself compelled to believe that the occasion makes it necessary.

This report which is now submitted to the House was drawn by my esteemed colleague from Ohio [Mr. HURD] and was read to the members of the Judiciary Committee. It was arranged that it should be again submitted to him and to my colleague on the Judiciary Committee from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] that they might revise it and make such changes as they deemed proper after the consultations which had been had in the committee-room. I shall not disclose anything that occurred in the committee, certainly nothing to which any member will object. But I had so much confidence in those gentlemen, as I yet have, that I did assent that the report which was made, and which they were to revise and submit to the House, should be submitted to the House as the report of the committee.

We have heard the report read. It embraces three essential propositions: First, that the Caldwell telegram was not strictly legal evidence; second, that as a legal proposition it would not be a suppression of evidence to withhold from the committee that which in law was not evidence; and, as my colleague on the committee has well said, no lawyer would refuse assent to these propositions. The third point embraced in the report relates to the circumstances or purpose of retaining possession of the telegram.

I am admonished by a friend who sits near me that the hour on which I am speaking has nearly expired, and I find therefore that I have not time to finish all that I desired to say. Embarrassed by this want of time I can only now say that in view of what has been said and of what has occurred I must now insist that this report shall be recommitted, that the committee may review it, and I must now withhold my assent from the report.

Mr. FRYE. I now yield the balance of my time—two minutes—to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. HURD.]

Mr. HURD. Mr. Speaker, the minority of the Judiciary Committee, whose representatives have just spoken on this floor, do not more regret what has transpired to-day than I do. I had presented to this House the report of the Committee on the Judiciary unanimously agreed to, as to which I had supposed there would be no discussion nor debate. I had given, in conversation, my word of honor to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] that there was to be no discussion of the report. I had supposed that all that was intended to be said was that which related merely to what involved the chairman of our committee, and what was necessary to his individual and personal exculpation.

I regret the debate because it has compelled those gentlemen who so kindly and generously signed the report and agreed to its being brought to the House, to withdraw from it, their approval. I am not here to express any opinion as to what has been said by the chairman of the committee upon the different propositions he has discussed. I merely regret the fact that the discussion was thought necessary when there was presented to the House a report which afforded him the most abundant exculpation and which enabled the committee to give it with cheerfulness and friendliness.

I am here still to maintain that the report is true. I maintain that the propositions, both of law and of fact, which the report contains are abundantly sustained. I maintain, in opposition to what has been asserted by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE,] that nothing that can be said by the chairman of the committee this day should change the opinion of the committee as to what the chairman did months ago. I am here to say that there is not the slightest evidence to show either a willful purpose to withhold the dispatch or a disposition to injure any person who was involved in that investigation. I am therefore prepared to vote in favor of the report as I voted for it when it was considered by the committee. But six members of the committee, making a majority, have requested of me that the report be recommitted for further action, and I now desire to make the necessary motion which shall enable that proposition to be submitted to the House. I move to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. KNOTT. I would like to say a few words.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] is entitled to five minutes of his time which he did not use.

Mr. KNOTT. Mr. Speaker, "one by one the roses fade;" and simply because they have been touched by the wand of truth. Sir, after the ship-of-the-line had struck its colors and hauled off, I little expected that I would be compelled to continue the conflict with the yawls; it nevertheless seems that such is the case.

As to the speech that I have delivered and which has caused so much "pain" to gentlemen on the other side, I have merely to say that I would not alter one single word that I uttered. I have neither explanation nor apology to make.

The man who supposes that I will sit tamely by and submit to a brutal, outrageous, disingenuous, and false assault such as was made upon me on this floor, reiterated in ten thousand different shapes and through ten thousand channels, and not say a word in my own defense or vindication, mistakes the man. Abandon me if you will. Vote as you please. I stand here upon every utterance that I have made and I reiterate it, much as I may regret to lose the friendship of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. FRYE.] If he can surrender the regard which he professes to have entertained for me upon such slight pretexts, it certainly was not worth the having. If we must part, all that I can say to the gentleman, is—

> Fare thee well! and if forever,
> Still, forever fare thee well.

[Laughter and applause.]

Now what is the "head and front of my offending" that the gentleman should be suddenly inspired with such pious indignation? It is said that I have prejudged the case under investigation by the committee. I trust that such imputations were inadvertently made, because they are not justified by a syllable I have uttered. I might perhaps, if I were not afraid of being accused of having "plantation manners," say that all such insinuations are absolutely and unqualifiedly false. I have only brought to the attention of the House certain facts which led to the necessity of dispatching to Caldwell, without expressing any opinion at all upon those facts, and without having prejudged in the least any matter whatever under investigation. But how do these suddenly virtuous gentlemen deport themselves? They are as much judges of the subject-matter of the investigation as I am; yet they can rise in their seats with impunity and say that Mr. Blaine is as immaculate as the driven snow; that he is purer than

> The icicle
> That's curded by the frost from purest snow,
> And hangs on Dian's temple.

But there is no harm in that, there is no prejudging the case in that. I have not said whether Mr. Blaine is guilty or innocent of the charges still before the committee nor intimated an opinion upon the question. But upon the subject-matter of this report, upon the authenticity of this Caldwell telegram, I have asserted and I reiterate here—I would reiterate it in the courts of heaven—that I believed it originated in the fertile brain and to subserve the purposes of James G. Blaine, of Maine. And in that belief I am fully justified by the proof.

It has been said that I would not have dared to make the speech I have made to-day had Mr. Blaine been here; that I would "in a bondman's key, with bated breath and whispering humbleness," have spoken very differently. That may perhaps be the opinion of the gentleman, and may go for what it is worth. I am not responsible for the absence of the late member from Maine. I did not bring about his resignation. The floor was free to him, as it is to me; he could have remained here had he chosen to do so, but he saw proper to withdraw from this arena where he had been assailed by his own party friends; and that, too, before he had vindicated his reputation for integrity as a man and as a leader of his party, and I was in no way responsible for it, and whether he was acting upon the suggestion of the old English verse that—

> He who fights and runs away
> May live to fight another day;
> But he who is in battle slain
> Will never rise to fight again—

I do not know nor do I care; but he has gone from our midst, and more than that, never to return during the present Congress, and that without any procurement of mine

Now, sir, the whole gist of the pending question is simply as to the authenticity of the Caldwell dispatch and whether or not I acted in good faith in my connection in that matter. There is the whole thing. These gentlemen have said I was not blameworthy in that matter. If they see proper now to recall it so be it, they have my consent to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HURD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that in making the motion to recommit this report to the Committee on the Judiciary I do it with the object that the minority of the committee who have expressed opinions on the floor hostile to the recommendations of the committee may have an opportunity of presenting to the House a minority report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio moves to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

The House divided; and there were ayes 114——

Mr. ATKINS. I demand the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. O, no!

Mr. ATKINS. I withdraw it.

In the negative were 57.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the vote ordering the main question was reconsidered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to recommit the report to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HURD. And on that motion I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 131, noes 49.

So the report was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HURD moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 1021) allowing the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to carry the mails in their new iron steamships;

A bill (S. No. 917) to enable O. T. Bussell, of Indianapolis, Indiana, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for extension of letters-patent for a combined rubber and spiral steel spring; and

A bill (S. No. 731) to limit and fix the Signal Service.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON. I rise to a privileged question and submit a report from a conference committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

> The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.
>
> OTHO R. SINGLETON,
> WILLIAM M. SPRINGER,
> JAMES MONROE,
> Managers on the part of the House.
>
> FREDERICK T. FRELINGHUYSEN,
> GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
> R. E. WITHERS,
> Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Speaker, I move the House insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and ask for further conference. But before the question is put, my colleague upon the committee [Mr. SPRINGER] wishes to make a few remarks in explanation of the position occupied by the committee of conference, and I yield the floor to him for that purpose.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I would not ask the attention of the House at this time in reference to this report were it not for the fact that the conferees on the part of the Senate when they submitted their report on the subject did injustice, I think, to the House conferees in stating the position we had assumed in reference to this bill.

It was stated that we had declined a number of propositions in regard to this bill and had persistently demanded, without giving any reason therefor, that there should be a reduction of the salaries of consular and diplomatic officers. It is true that the conferees on the part of the House did insist there should be a reduction of the salaries of certain consular and diplomatic officers. We insisted upon that, and we thought we gave good reasons to that committee, and reasons which ought to be sufficient to the country, for insisting that the Senate should consent to reduction of salaries below what is denominated "the existing law."

For instance, the first subject discussed was as to the salaries of ministers plenipotentiary to Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia, which by existing law are $17,500 each per annum, and which by the bill passed by the House are placed at $14,000 each per annum. Your conferees thought that salary was sufficient in view of the general reduction of salaries all over the country and the necessity on the part of all classes of people to economize in all their expenditures.

Other reductions were pointed out which we deemed it necessary to make at this time. But the conferees on the part of the Senate insisted that we must make appropriations that conformed to the law as it now stands, and they would not consent to any reduction of such salaries. We offered many reasons why they should be reduced below existing law, which reasons were quite satisfactory to us, but they did not so regard them.

And I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that it has been asserted at the other end of the Capitol that the attitude of this House in respect to this bill is a threat to the Senate of the United States; that we stand here in the attitude of coercing that body into arbitrary and unreasonable measures. Such is not the case. We only ask that the Senate will respond to the reasonable demand of the people of the country that there shall be a reduction in all the departments of the Government, in the salaries of high as well as low officials; and we know of no place in the public service where the rule of economy can be so properly applied as to the salaries of our foreign ministers. I can see no reason for paying a foreign minister $17,500 a year for his services, and at the same time paying Cabinet officials $8,000 a year and members of Congress $4,500 or $5,000 a year.

Every gentleman who has examined into the question thoroughly must know that it costs every member of the Cabinet of the President of the United States more to live in the city of Washington than it costs any foreign minister to live in a becoming manner in any foreign court in the world. We are asked to pay these foreign embassadors, who have but little to do compared with the onerous duties of a member of the Cabinet or a member of Congress—we are asked to pay them exorbitant salaries. And when we insist that the Senate shall agree to that, we are told that we are standing in an attitude of threatening a co-ordinate branch of legislation.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would ask the gentleman if the salary now under a republican administration is any more exorbitant than under a democratic administration when it was inaugurated?

Mr. SPRINGER. That does not make any difference so far as the fact is concerned. If salaries were too high then, they should have been reduced. If too high now, they should be reduced. I care nothing for the argumentum ad hominem. I want gentlemen to realize the condition in which this country is to-day and the necessity there is on the part of every branch of the Government to economize their expenditures. But the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] will find that the salary of $17,500 a year for foreign ministers was not fixed by a democratic administration. In that he is mistaken. And I claim that every foreign minister can live in a manner befitting his station as a representative of this great Government in any of the courts of the world upon $14,000 a year, the amount allowed by the House bill. The idea that our foreign ministers must give court balls and receptions, must have liveried servants, must drive with gorgeous equipages on the boulevards, and ape the prodigality of princes in order to be deemed respectable, is the sheerest nonsense imaginable. Our embassadors will honor themselves and merit the respect of the world by assuming in all foreign courts the same simplicity of manner which characterizes their countrymen at home. If they do this there will be no complaint that the salaries fixed by this House are insufficient.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, fixing the salaries of consular and diplomatic representatives of this country was passed by this House with perfect unanimity. I believe there were but two votes recorded against it upon the call of the yeas and nays. To be accurate, the yeas were 190, and the nays were 2. I regret, therefore, to see by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that in another place this bill has been denounced as "an enormity." That the action of this House, composed of a body of intelligent men as anxious to subserve the public interest as any gentlemen can be in the other end of this Capitol, after deliberating upon this measure for several weeks, and having passed it with the full knowledge of its contents—that that action and that this bill should be denounced as "an enormity" is something quite unaccountable to me. Sir, I know of no "enormity" that has passed this House at this session under the denomination of an appropriation bill. Is it "an enormity" to enact that the consul-general at Cairo shall have $3,000 a year instead of $4,000? From the creation of this office down to the appointment of the present incumbent it has been disgraced from year to year by the venality of those who have filled it. Is it "an enormity" to say that the salary of that office shall be reduced a thousand dollars a year? There are other "enormities" of that kind in this bill; but they are all in the interest of economy; they are all in the interest of the tax-payers of this country. And I believe that this House in passing this bill has represented the true sentiments of the people.

It has been said that the Senate would agree to another conference on this bill in the hope that "a better and truer sentiment" of the House of Representatives would be represented upon another conference committee. I cannot understand why such a statement should have been made. I supposed that, in taking the attitude that was taken by my colleague [Mr. SINGLETON] and myself, we were representing the House of Representatives on this subject, and, as I believe, also the people of this country. And if the Senate expect to find in this House of Representatives any other or different sentiment with regard to these bills, it has not been developed heretofore.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that another conference committee will be appointed upon this bill, and I hope also that the same sentiment that has been represented on previous conference committees will be represented again; and that this House, standing upon its right as the immediate representative of the people of this country, will from week to week and from month to month insist that the Senate of the United States must respond to the demand of the people in favor of reduction of expenditures in all the departments of the Government. The high-toned officials in foreign countries as well as the clerks in the various Departments in this city must submit to the inevitable demands of public economy.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Will my colleague yield to me for a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I wish to ask the gentleman if the conferees on the part of the House made the claim that was made by him upon the floor of the House, that the Senate had no right either to originate appropriation bills or to make amendments? Was that one of the points of difference?

Mr. SPRINGER. We discussed at some length the constitutional provisions on this subject. As we were of different political views on that committee, and as I thought the gentlemen representing the Senate would perhaps prefer republican authority upon that point, I took the liberty in that discussion to call the attention of the Senators in the conference committee to the view of the late Charles Sumner upon this question, in which he took the position now assumed by the House upon these bills; and also the position taken by Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, when a member of this House, when he stated that the people must look to this House and not to the Executive Departments of the Government or the President of the United States for reforms which they demanded.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Then the right to originate and amend appropriation bills was one of the points of difference?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMPSON rose.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to discuss this bill?

Mr. THOMPSON. I do.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have not the floor to yield. It belongs to the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. SINGLETON.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Has not the previous question been demanded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Mississippi before demanding the previous question yielded the floor to me. I have been speaking in his hour, but have said all I desire to say on this question. I thought it due to the House and the conferees on the part of the House that some explanation should have been made, in view of the attitude of the Senate and our failure to come to an agreement upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman from Mississippi will lose his right to the floor at the expiration of one hour and the Chair is sure that that is not what the gentleman from Mississippi desires. Does the gentleman from Mississippi demand the previous question?

Mr. SINGLETON. I do, sir; it will not cut off debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will cut it off at the expiration of one hour.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What does the gentleman call the previous question on?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the motion to insist and ask a further conference.

Mr. BLAND. I give notice now that I shall call for the regular order as soon as the hour expires.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri can call the regular order when it is not excluded by a privileged question. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Mississippi that it seems evident that three or four gentlemen desire to make remarks upon this subject and that it is evident from what the Chair knows that it is the desire of the gentleman himself to close debate. By the consent of the gentleman from Mississippi the Chair will therefore recognize other gentlemen until such time as the gentleman from Mississippi desires to call the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL. It must be within the hour.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the previous question will be called at once on this report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Mississippi yields the floor without calling the previous question, debate may run on interminably.

Mr. RANDALL. As I understand it the gentleman from Mississippi who called up this report was entitled to one hour before his right to call the previous question expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will readily understand that if the gentleman from Mississippi occupies the hour or controls it, whether he occupies it himself or gives it to others, he loses his right to the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. He has not yet occupied it, and he wants to call the previous question now, and I hope he will be allowed to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The only desire of the Chair is to promote the business of the House; he has no personal feeling in the matter.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The gentleman would be entitled to one hour after he calls the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I propose after the previous question is seconded to raise a point of order upon that question.

Mr. SINGLETON. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. SINGLETON obtained the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now raise a question of order, and it is that under the rules a member is only entitled to one hour after the previous question is seconded when he reports a bill from a standing or select committee of the House. I believe that that rule does not apply to reports from committees of conference.

Mr. RANDALL. Is not this a report from a committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a report from a committee, but the rule relates only to reports from standing or special committees, and does not apply to reports from conference committees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana certainly does not dispute that the gentleman from Mississippi is entitled to an hour after the previous question shall be seconded.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think he is not under the rules entitled to the hour. I may be mistaken as to the rule but that is my understanding of it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has just told us that he was talking in the hour of the gentleman from Mississippi. Now, that being the case, the gentleman from Mississippi after demanding the previous question in his first hour has only a right to occupy the remainder of that hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is so. That is what the Chair has ruled. The gentleman from Mississippi has occupied a portion of his hour in advance and during that hour has called the previous question, and he is only entitled to the remaining portion of the hour. But at the same the Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not the rule before me, but perhaps the Clerk can turn to it. I do not think it relates to reports of committees of conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will be glad to have the gentleman from Indiana examine the rule, but for the present he overrules the point of order.

Mr. SINGLETON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MONROE] for ten minutes.

Mr. MONROE. Am I entitled to the floor or is the question of order still under discussion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has decided the question of order and the gentleman from Ohio is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MONROE. I do not desire, sir, to occupy any length of time in the discussion of this question of the disagreements of the committees of conference to the various questions in issue between the House and the Senate in connection with the several appropriation bills. Those questions have been so much discussed on this floor and at the other end of the Capitol, and so thoroughly reported and discussed in the newspapers, the House would perhaps weary if an attempt were made to extend this discussion to much length, and I have no desire to do so. But as a member of the committee of conference I should hardly do justice to myself if I did not say a word in regard to this case.

The great causes of disagreement have been substantially stated by gentlemen who have already occupied the floor, but I ought perhaps to add in justice to the Senate committee that there was one cause for disagreement which frequently came up in which offers were made on both sides but on which there seemed to be no possibility of agreement on the part of the committee of conference.

The committee on the part of the Senate offered to accept and pass this House bill, or any House bill, reducing appropriations for our ministers and consuls abroad just as much as the House should think proper. They offered to receive and pass such a bill, and let it become a law, on condition that the House bill should contain nothing which amounted to a repeal of existing legislation upon the subject. But the Senate committee, on behalf of the Senate, declined to pass favorably on any appropriation bill on this subject which should repeal existing law. They offered to pass any bill making just such appropriations as the House should think proper, provided there was no such repealing clause in it.

On the other hand, the House committee insisted that the appropriation bill should contain some clause repealing existing law, such a clause as this, for instance: That the appropriations herein made shall be held to be payment in full for the salaries of these officers for the current fiscal year. Here was an issue between the two committees which could not be reconciled; and it was on this point substantially that we despaired of coming to an agreement.

Now, without discussing the propriety of the positions thus taken, I desire to say for myself, simply that I may be properly understood, that my difficulty may be regarded as even deeper, if possible, than that which the Senate committee expressed. One might say it lies a little further back, although perhaps it amounts to the same thing. The difficulty which I have always felt, as I had occasion to express to the House early in this session, is this: that having resided some time abroad, having some knowledge of the manner in which our consuls and ministers abroad are paid, having known something of the expense of living abroad, and in many cases of the difficulty of making the ends meet—having had some knowledge, I say, and experience of this kind, I cannot honestly take the ground that the salaries of our consuls and ministers abroad will fairly admit of much reduction. That is my difficulty.

My opinion is that, as a general thing, we have cut them down about as low as they ought to be; and I cannot help thinking that they are about as low as the people of the United States would wish them to be. That is the question at issue between the House and the Senate. For myself, I do not think that we, as well-wishers of the country, as careful of its credit abroad as those who desire that the business of the country abroad should be creditably, efficiently, and honestly done—I do not think that as persons having this feeling we should vote for much reduction of their salaries.

I do not say that there may not be individual cases, that there may be a minister here and there who has more than is necessary; and perhaps a more careful scrutiny into cases of this kind would be desirable. There may be a consul here and there, a case now and then, where too much is paid; there may be such cases. But I venture to say that they are few. My opinion is, that if we should go into a very careful examination of the salaries paid in all these cases, and should hear evidence in regard to them, we should perhaps as often find that it would be necessary to raise the salary of a consul or minister as it would be to refuse it. I could perhaps name one or two places abroad where too much is paid, but as a general rule I would say that our representatives abroad in both of these great departments receive no more than is necessary for them to live upon fairly and decently, and I do not believe the American people desire to reduce them below that.

As a general thing, then, admitting that there may be exceptional cases where I would vote for a reduction, as a general rule I am opposed to the reduction of the salary of consuls and ministers abroad below the point at which the law now fixes them. And, further, I am opposed to a reduction of the number of our consuls abroad. I am opposed to abolishing any of our consulates except in two or three exceptional cases that might be named. As a general thing I am opposed to reducing the number of our ministers abroad. I do not think our foreign representation is any stronger, any more numerous, or more efficient than it ought to be. Having that feeling, of course I could not agree on this question with my colleagues on the conference committee on the part of the House.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] yield to me for five minutes, in order that I may submit some statistics for the use of the next conference committee?

Mr. SINGLETON. I will after a little while. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDERS] has asked me to yield to him for a few minutes.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and have referred Senate bill No. 917.

Mr. HOAR. What is the bill?

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. It is a bill for the renewal of a patent, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Patents?

Several members objected.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. Who objects?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CLYMER in the chair.) Objections were heard by the Chair from several members.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think that members understood it was merely for reference.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I merely ask that the bill be referred.

Many members objected.

Mr. SINGLETON. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise mainly to place upon record certain statistical information which I think will be of use to gentlemen who may not have obtained it from the Departments and who may require it in the succeeding conference. We have two branches of our foreign service: the consular and the diplomatic. The consular service is not paid out of the ordinary funds of the Treasury. It is paid by fees collected upon foreign mercantile transactions, and should be expended for the benefit of the commerce of the country. The first statement I submit is a comparison of the appropriations for consular salaries from the year 1856 to 1875, showing also how the revenue from fees has grown with the increase of the consular service; the fees, however, in the larger ratio. In 1856 the salaries amounted to $280,000 in round numbers, with no report of fees. The next year the salaries amounted to $273,750 and the fees to $110,802. From that small beginning the consular service appropriation rose in 1872 to $477,000 as the highest figure, while the fees have increased to over $700,000. [See table foot of next page.]

This statement is important as showing that the facilities we afford to commerce by consular appointments are actually increasing the revenue to the Treasury; and the effort to abolish those consular appointments where the fees are small is like a telegraph company abolishing every office on its line that does not pay the expenses of its maintenance.

Last year we reduced the payments from the figures of 1872 $333,000, while the fees are about $700,000. Hence I maintain that the destruction of the consular service proposed in this bill is a destruction pro tanto of the commercial interests of the country. I desire that the next committee of conference may bear in mind that the consular service is one which merchants pay for and that they have a right to demand its vigorous support, while they also pay in part for the diplomatic service.

I submit also the following statement of contingent expenses showing a yearly average from 1869 to 1873 of $109,759, about the same they were prior to 1860, in Buchanan's administration:

Expenses foreign intercourse, 1853 to 1873.

On the 30th of June, 1853, there were unexpended balances carried to the appropriations for the year ending 1854, as follows:

Contingent expenses of missions	$47,540 44
Contingent expenses of foreign intercourse	9,757 48
		$57,297 92
Amount of appropriations for four years, (1853 to 1857)		489,263 78
		546,561 70
Unexpended balances on June 30, 1857:
Contingent expenses of missions	$82,319 00
Contingent expenses of foreign intercourse	25,000 00
		107,319 00
Expended during four years, (1853 to 1857)		439,242 70
Average per year during Pierce's administration, (1853 to 1857)		109,810 67
Unexpended balance on June 30, 1857, (as above)		107,319 00
Amount of appropriations for four years, (1857 to 1861)		415,000 00
		522,319 00
Unexpended balances June 30, 1861:
Contingent expenses of missions	$228 79
Contingent expenses of foreign intercourse	40,742 40
		40,971 19
Expended during years 1857 to 1861		481,347 81
Average per year during Buchanan's administration, (1857 to 1861)		120,336 95
Unexpended balance on June 30, 1861, (as above)		40,971 19
Amount of appropriation for four years, (1861 to 1865)		510,000 00
		550,971 19
Unexpended balances on June 30, 1865:
Contingent expenses of missions	$6,097 14
Contingent expenses of foreign intercourse	15,739 04
		21,836 18
Expended during the years 1861 to 1865		529,135 01
Average per year during Lincoln's administration, (1861 to 1865)		132,283 75
Unexpended balance on June 20, 1865, (as above)		21,836 18
Amount appropriated for four years, (1865 to 1869)		680,000 00
		701,836 18
Unexpended balance June 30, 1869:
Contingent expenses of missions	$8,186 78
Contingent expenses of foreign intercourse	130,722 61
		138,909 39
Expended during the years 1865 to 1869		562,926 79
Average per year during Johnson's administration, (1865 to 1869)		140,731 69
Unexpended balance on June 30, 1869, (as above)		138,926 39
Amount of appropriations for four years, (1869 to 1873)		400,000 00
		538,926 39
Unexpended balance remaining in Treasury June 30, 1873		101,886 75
		437,039 64
Average per year during Grant's administration, (1869 to 1873)		109,759 91

The expenditure has not materially changed since 1873.

I also submit a statement of diplomatic salaries in the aggregate, including both secretaries of legation and ministers, showing that the amount appropriated in 1860 for this purpose was $347,500, while last year our appropriations for same objects were only $343,500, being less than in Buchanan's period; thus correcting the errors which have appeared in statements by gentlemen touching the increased expenses of the service under republican administrations.

Diplomatic salaries in 1860 and now:

In 1860 the appropriations for salaries of ministers was	$296,500
Salaries of secretaries of legations	51,000
Total	347,500
In 1874 and 1875:
Salaries of ministers	310,500
Salaries of secretaries of legation	33,000
Total	343,500

This amount the House bill proposes to cut down to $235,000.

Expenses diplomatic intercourse—Contingent expenses:

Average per year, President Pierce, 1853 to 1857	$109,810 67
Average per year, President Buchanan, 1857 to 1861	120,336 95
Average per year, President Lincoln, 1861 to 1865	132,283 75
Average per year, President Johnson, 1865 to 1869	140,731 69
Average per year, President Grant, 1869 to 1873	109,759 91

Comparison of amounts appropriated for consular salaries with the amounts of fees collected and returned to the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury for the fiscal years named.

Appropriations.	Salaries.	Fees returned.
August 1, 1856	$280,750 00	No report.
February 7, 1857	273,750 00	$110,802 89
July 5, 1858	273,750 00	110,896 78
March 3, 1859	235,000 00	99,113 23
May 26, 1860	268,750 00	77,590 21
February 28, 1861	*329,261 97
February 4, 1862	351,550 00	152,982 54
February 4, 1863	†416,354 34	254,218 34
June 20, 1864	†477,500 00	287,108 00
January 24, 1865	†450,000 00	442,477 56
July 25, 1866	†425,000 00	424,099 17
February 28, 1867	†431,500 00	435,179 73
March 30, 1868	†400,000 00	459,722 43
March 3, 1869	†400,000 00	534,670 79
July 11, 1870	†376,663 00	632,258 22
February 21, 1871	†391,200 00	706,907 95
May 22, 1872	†416,000 00	746,594 80
February 22, 1873	†409,000 00	715,202 94
June 11, 1874	364,500 00	607,988 49
February 18, 1875	333,200 00	‡700,000 00

*This includes a deficiency of $54,571.97.
†This includes loss by exchange, estimated at $45,000 to $48,000. The House bill proposes to reduce the appropriation for consular salaries to $294,900.
‡Estimated.

Mr. SINGLETON. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. THOMPSON.]

[Mr. THOMPSON addressed the House. His speech is published elsewhere in this issue of the RECORD.]

During the delivery of Mr. THOMPSON's remarks the following proceedings took place:

Mr. SINGLETON. I cannot yield to the gentleman further. There are other gentlemen who desire to be heard.

Mr. THOMPSON. I seldom trespass upon the attention of the House, and I hope I may be allowed to conclude my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] that he has but eight minutes of his hour left.

Mr. SINGLETON. I yield half of that time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. THOMPSON] may be permitted to finish his remarks, and that the time thus occupied shall not be taken from the time of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. BLAND. I cannot agree to that.

Mr. KASSON. Then I move that the gentleman have leave to print the remainder of his remarks.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not want to trespass upon the time of the House; but this is a subject of great importance.

Mr. RANDALL. I appeal to the House to allow the gentleman from Massachusetts additional time which shall not come out of the time of any one else.

Mr. BLAND. I gave notice some time ago that I would not yield my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the objection of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND.] How much time did the gentleman from Mississippi allot to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. SINGLETON. Ten minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ten minutes have expired.

Mr. SINGLETON. Some time ago. I dislike very much to interrupt the gentleman; but there are others who desire to be heard.

Mr. RANDALL. I renew the request that the gentleman from Massachusetts may have the additional time he desires without taking it from the time of any other member.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to that proposition?

Mr. BLAND. I object.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then I ask unanimous consent to have my remarks printed in their complete form.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, there are but two material points in the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THOMPSON] to which I desire to refer in reply. The first point is as to a seeming charge that this House has neglected its duty in respect to this bill. The bill was passed by this House as long ago as the 11th of February; and I submit therefore that no blame whatever attaches to this House in that respect.

The next point in the objections of the dissenting gentleman from Massachusetts to which I wish to refer is that relating to the change of rule. Prior to this session the rule, under its practical construction, has been that any amendment increasing salaries could be placed upon an appropriation bill, but no amendment changing law which decreased salaries could be. That rule we changed so as to admit upon an appropriation bill any proposition which, being germane to the subject-matter, reduced salaries or expenses. I admit that in this step the House effected a revolution of former rules. It was a revolution in the direction of economy and away from the path of past extravagance.

The gentleman from Massachusetts talks about the rights of the people. Sir, it is the right of the people by means of frequent elections to send to this House representatives who shall scrutinize the manner in which the people's money is expended. And I say here to-day deliberately that the effect of that rule will be to reduce the appropriations of this year from those of last year, both Houses assenting thereto, whether with or without coercion, to the amount of $30,000,000. I say further that without any interference with harmony in administration those expenses might have been reduced $40,000,000. Nay, more; I say that next year we can add to the reductions of this year the ten millions which an obstructive and a persevering Senate in behalf of extravagance prevented. And we can go further. We can go ten millions further without any doubt. And I hope, as it has been the mission of this session of Congress to reduce thirty millions, we will be able in the next session, with the light before us derived from the operations of the year, to reduce twenty millions more; so that when this Congress shall reach its conclusion it will have the right to claim the merit of having reduced the expenditures of this Government between this Congress and the past Congress to an extent of $50,000,000.

And now, Mr. Speaker, in the present condition of things, with every industry prostrated and every individual doing business, whether of a manufacturing or a commercial character, reducing his expenditures and discharging his supernumerary employés, I ask is there any other ground for this House to tread than that path which it has been treading in favor of economy and against corrupting and extravagant expenditures by the Administration in power?

The gentleman from Massachusetts has made a defense of the ground taken at the other end of the Capitol. There is not any justification whatever for any such defense, nor is there any light he can shed upon the subject which bears him out in the discharge truthfully and faithfully of his duties as a Representative, whose first duty it is to guard the money of the people.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the gentleman pause there for a question? Is it not the first duty of a Representative to keep that oath which he solemnly takes to support the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. RANDALL. The Constitution of the United States guarantees an honest administration of the Government, and that is what we are trying to bring about. But the gentleman is captious. He tells you that we have no right to make a change of this law upon an appropriation bill. The gentleman is sadly ignorant; for if he had gone back but two years he would have found a republican Congress in both branches absolutely incorporating in the corresponding appropriation bill of that year an entire change of the diplomatic and consular service under the guidance of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Orth] then chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of this House.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wisk to ask the gentleman if he does not suppose I would condemn that in the one side as quickly as in the other?

Mr. RANDALL. Well, sir, we are simply in the interest of economy doing what the republican party did in behalf of extravagance. For while we were promised that that bill would reduce expenditures, it absolutely increased them. And we only ask now that the extravagance of that act shall be traversed and reduced, and that these foreign representatives be brought down to adequate and just salaries.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KASSON. I hope the gentleman will look at the figures as submitted by me to-day, comparing the expenditures under this Administration with those under the democratic administration of Buchanan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Will the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate?

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MORRISON. I rise to make a privileged report. The Committee of Ways and Means have directed me to report the resolution which I send to the desk and recommend its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to adjourn their respective Houses without day on Monday next, August the 7th, 1876, at twelve o'clock noon.

Mr. MORRISON. Upon that resolution I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WADDELL. I call for the yeas and nays on adopting that resolution.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 24, noes 129.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The affirmative is not one-fifth of the whole vote.

Mr. POPPLETON. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering tellers, there were ayes 18; not one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were not ordered, the yeas and nays were not ordered, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CORRECTION OF ERROR IN ENROLLMENT.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to offer the resolution which I send to the desk, correcting an error in enrollment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the Joint Committee on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses be authorized to correct an error in the bill (H. R. No. 3963) by inserting the word "not" on the second page of the enrolled bill next to the last line, between the words "shall" and "be;" so that the same shall read, "there shall not be a contractor," &c.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I will state to the House, in explanation of that resolution, that the error spoken of occurred in an act that was passed by this House a few days ago to amend the postal laws so as to prevent the vicious system of "straw bidding." The error was in leaving out the word "not" where it should be inserted. I will state in this connection that the enrolling clerks of this House are not to blame in this matter, as the error must have occurred before the clerks enrolled the bill.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PATRICK H. JONES.

Mr. COCHRANE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Claims, reported adversely on the bill (H. R. No. 2173) for the relief of Patrick H. Jones, late postmaster of New York City; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several MEMBERS. Let us have the regular order of business.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman in the face of the general demand for the regular order of business. The morning hour now begins at four o'clock and five minutes p. m., and the pending business is the consideration of a bill reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining, being the bill (H. R. No. 3635) to utilize the product of gold and silver mines, and for other purposes, on which the previous question has been demanded by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND.]

THOMAS H. WILLIAMS.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a bill (S. No. 866) to remove the political disabilities of Thomas H. Williams, of Maryland, in order that it may be put on its passage at this time. It will take but a few minutes. It was passed by the Senate some time since.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will be taken from the Speaker's table.

The bill was read a first and second time, and ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds concurring therein.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask, by unanimous consent, that there may be some arrangement by which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] shall have an opportunity of replying to the speech of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] delivered on yesterday. The other side of the House were liberal in giving the gentleman from Mississippi as much time as he desired, and I think it no more than right the same courtesy should be extended to the gentleman from Ohio. Whether the gentleman from Ohio shall take the floor now is for the House to determine. I understand the gentleman from Ohio is ready to go on this evening.

Mr. GARFIELD. Although it is a late hour of the day, I am willing to proceed.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BLAND. That motion cannot be made, as we are now in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ruling in regard to the matter is very plain.

Mr. RANDALL. My motion is in order, and I hope it will be put to the House.

Mr. BLAND. That cannot be done until after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A majority of the House can at any time suspend the rules and go into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLAND. Let me make a statement. To-morrow I cannot have the floor because it is private-bill day, and the gentleman from Ohio can go on with his speech then. I am willing to yield him all the time he desires to-morrow, but I hope the House will go on with the regular order in the morning hour instead of going into Committee of the Whole at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to go into Committee of the Whole can be made at any time; and when made and agreed to it necessarily supersedes the morning hour for the time being. The question will be first put on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WARD. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow the morning hour to proceed. Evidently it will bring about a state of feeling which will not allow the gentleman from Ohio to go on this evening or to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is not a matter of discussion. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to go into Committee of the Whole.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 104, noes 58.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent, for the benefit of the gentleman from Ohio, that he be permitted to go on this evening, with the understanding that to-morrow morning the morning hour shall be given to the current business now pending in the morning hour.

Mr. KASSON. Does the gentleman from Indiana refuse the courtesy extended by this side of the House yesterday?

Mr. HOLMAN. We propose to extend that courtesy to the gentleman from Ohio.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order of business!

Mr. HOAR. The gentleman from Indiana evidently does not mean that there shall be an evening session.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to give the gentleman from Ohio the whole evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This discussion, members must recognize, is entirely out of order. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent, and there are a dozen cries for the regular order. The regular order is the call of the roll on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the unanimous consent asked by me may be put to the House. We desire to give the gentleman from Ohio an opportunity to be heard to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There were a dozen calls for the regular order while the gentleman was asking for unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think my proposition was not understood.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the House go into Committee of the Whole without calling the yeas and nays—at once—so the gentleman from Ohio may proceed with his speech. I think that is fair and right; but with the understanding that to-morrow morning the morning hour shall be devoted to the regular, current business.

Mr. PIERCE. I object.

Mr. MILLS. I move to change the order so that the gentleman from Ohio shall have the floor to-morrow morning. [Cries of "Regular order."]

Mr. STONE. I move that the House do now adjourn; and upon that motion I call the yeas and nays.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 810) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877; and

An act (H. R. No. 1336) to establish a new land district in the Territory of Wyoming.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. GUNTER, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Charles Agliff, of Pulaski County, Arkansas.

Mr. CONGER. I did not hear the statement made that there had been no adverse report in that case, and unless that is so I should have objected to the withdrawal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has given instructions that no papers shall ever be withdrawn unless the statement is made that there has been no adverse report in the case. The Chair thinks the statement was made in this case at the Clerk's desk, and it was a mere omission to make the statement.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WALLACE, of South Carolina, was granted an extension of the leave of absence heretofore granted him, for ten days.

Mr. HENDEE was granted leave of absence for ten days.

Mr. HAYS was granted leave of absence for ten days.

Mr. GLOVER was granted leave of absence for ten days from Saturday next.

Mr. JENKS was granted leave of absence indefinitely from Friday next.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the House insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill Mr. SINGLETON, Mr. HOLMAN, and Mr. FOSTER.

ANNA ELLA CARROLL AND CHARLES W. SCOTT.

Mr. MACDOUGALL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported the testimony taken by that committee in support of the claim of Anna Ella Carroll and Charles W. Scott, relative to the military operations on the Tennessee River in the years 1861 and 1862; which was recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MACDOUGALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the testimony was recommitted to the committee; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I now demand the regular order, so that we may see if we will have a chance to be heard upon this side of the House, or not.

Mr. BANNING. You will have a chance to be heard.

The question was put upon the motion of Mr. STONE that the House adjourn; and on a division, there were—ayes 114, noes 44.

Mr. RANDALL. Before the result of the vote is announced I desire to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] shall be heard on Saturday immediately after the reading of the Journal. [Cries of "Regular order."]

Mr. MILLS. That is in accordance with an agreement the other day, and I trust there will be no objection to it on this side of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask leave that the gentleman be allowed to-morrow morning after the morning hour.

Mr. MILLS. I am willing to agree to that. [Renewed cries of "Regular order."]

The result of the vote on the motion of Mr. STONE was then announced as above recorded; and accordingly (at four o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, August 4, 1876.

The Senate met at twelve o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

On motion of Mr. BOUTWELL, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

CORRECTION OF ERROR IN ENROLLMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the Joint Committee on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses be authorized to correct an error in the bill (H. R. No. 3963) by inserting the word "not" on the second page of the enrolled bill next to the last line, between the words "shall" and "be;" so that the same shall read, "there shall not be a contractor," &c.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope the Senate will act upon the resolution at this time. It is right. In the enrolling of the bill, by some process or other, the word "not" got knocked out. It should be restored, and the bill will then state precisely what it should do.

Mr. ANTHONY. I concur, of course, in what the Senator from Maine says. This is the second instance we have had this week of an error in enrollment. I introduced a resolution some time ago requiring enrolled bills to be in print. They would be much less liable to error. It would take no longer to print them than to enroll them, and then they could not be altered after they were enrolled.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator has not called up his resolution.

Mr. ANTHONY. It was referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SARGENT. If the Senator will couple it with another condition, and that is that no bill shall pass the respective Houses later than two days before the adjournment, it will be possible for it to operate.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the rule now.

Mr. SARGENT. But it is always suspended. If you make the rule effective, then the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island would have force. That was the objection that I made before. The rule stands all through the session but is suspended near the close. When you come to the last night of the session you cannot print the bills.

The resolution was concurred in.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, directed to adjourn their respective Houses without day on Monday next, August the 7th, 1876, at twelve o'clock noon.

Mr. WINDOM. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KERNAN. I suggest to the Senator whether it is necessary to refer it to a committee.

Mr. WINDOM. I think that has been usual.

Mr. MORRILL. Always.

Mr. KERNAN. The time is so short that I think we ought to act on it now. If we do not hurry up, I am afraid we shall never get away.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota to refer the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

OSAGE LANDS IN KANSAS.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3625) providing for the sale of Osage ceded lands in Kansas to actual settlers, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. INGALLS, Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. KERNAN as the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented a memorial of a committee of the Massachusetts Medical Society, in favor of the metric system of weights and measures; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, presented the petition of John Hayes, Louis Rheb, Edward P. Walsh, and others, citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3435) providing for the adjustment of claims against the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the memorial of George M. Weston, remonstrating against any alteration in the amount of pure silver in the one-dollar coin, as established by the original Mint act of 1792, and in favor of the repeal of all laws which now obstruct its coinage; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BRUCE presented the petition of O. S. B. Wall and others, citizens of the District of Columbia, praying a grant of public land for the purpose of endowing a home for the indigent poor of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. THURMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 534) for the relief of Rosetta Hert, (late Rosetta Scoville,) Charles C. Benoist, Emily Benoist, and Logan Fanfan, half-breed Indians, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The reference to the Committee on Private Land Claims was plainly a mistake.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1997) to grant title to certain lands to the heirs of Caleb L. Brayton, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 96) to provide for the protection of the Texas frontier on the Lower Rio Grande, reported it with amendments.

INDIAN SCOUTS.

Mr. LOGAN. The bill (S. No. 1007) concerning the employment of Indian scouts was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. There has been no meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs since the reference, and on account of the importance of the bill, and in order that it may be considered at this time, I move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I now ask for its present consideration; it will take but a moment to pass it. I will explain that it is recommended by the Secretary of War and by the General of the Army. The Paymaster-General wrote me a letter saying it will need no new appropriation. There is money enough now in the appropriation bill to pay these scouts, for the reason that of the thousand men provided for in the Revised Statutes which this bill asks to re-instate there were never more than three hundred, as many as are provided for in the Army bill, employed at any one time. Therefore the appropriation will be entirely sufficient to cover this bill if it passes. The necessity of it is that they may all the time be gathering these scouts. They are killed off, and many serve but a short time. In that way they will not keep more than the number that is provided for in the appropriation bill at any one time. The Revised Statutes in providing for the organization of the Army, section 1094, provide for "a force of Indian scouts not exceeding one thousand." Then in section 1112:

The President is authorized to enlist a force of Indians, not exceeding one thousand, who shall act as scouts in the Territories and Indian country. They shall be discharged when the necessity for their service shall cease or at the discretion of the department commander.

The Army appropriation bill provides for only three hundred, and the bill provides without making an appropriation that the number shall not be restricted. The Paymaster-General, as stated, says in his letter that there is a sufficient appropriation to pay them. I only state what is asked for and the necessity for its passage by the Secretary of War and the Commander of the Army in reference to the restoration of these scouts; and that is what is provided for in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not rise to oppose this, because my friend knows all about it and I do not, but I only want to make this observation: that taking up matters at the time they are reported is unjust to the other matters that have been before reported and are on the Calendar, and it takes up the time of the morning hour that would be left to get up those cases to which there would be no objection if they could have a chance. I will not object in this instance, but I do not think as a general rule it is quite just to the cases that have been already reported.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree that it is not just to cases that have been already reported, and if other Senators would refrain from calling up their bills I should certainly do so, but I see the Senators all around me doing it. There has not been a bill reported from the Military Committee called up for several days and I might say for weeks almost. I think this is a most important bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not objected, I beg the Senator to understand, but after this I shall object.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1007) concerning the employment of Indian scouts. It repeals so much of the Army appropriation act of July 24, 1876, as limits the number of Indian scouts to three hundred and continues in force sections 1094 and 1112 of the Revised Statutes, authorizing the employment of one thousand Indian scouts. It also provides that a proportionate number of non-commissioned officers may be appointed. The scouts, when they furnish their own horses and horse equipments, are to be entitled to receive forty cents per day for their use and risk so long as thus employed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORTH CAROLINA STATE RECORDS.

Mr. LOGAN. The joint resolution (H. R. No. 152) instructing the Secretary of War to forward to the State of North Carolina authenticated copies of certain State records captured in 1865 has been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and then I shall move its indefinite postponement, having a letter of the Secretary of War on the subject.

The motion to discharge the committee was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that the letter of the Secretary of War be read and go in the RECORD to show the reason why the joint resolution is not passed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, July 27, 1876.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 20th instant, inclosing copy of House resolution No. 152, instructing the Secretary of War to forward to the State of North Carolina authenticated copies of certain State records captured in 1865, and requesting information thereon, I have the honor to state there are in the archive office of the Department two letter books of the executive of North Carolina, one of six hundred and forty pages (demy) of closely written matter, another of sixty-nine pages same size.

A copyist could not, it is thought, copy and compare more than ten pages a day. With the amount of work on hand, it is doubtful whether a clerk could well be spared for seventy consecutive days for this work, particularly if the clerical force should be reduced.

It is respectfully suggested that if the resolution should pass provision be made for defraying the expense of copying these records.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. D. CAMERON.
Secretary of War.

Hon. JOHN A. LOGAN,
Chairman of Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I move on that ground the indefinite postponement of the joint resolution.

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask the Senator from Illinois to allow this resolution to go upon the Calendar.

Mr. LOGAN. For what purpose?

Mr. MERRIMON. I would rather it should go there for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. Why not amend the resolution by providing for the payment of this expense?

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to its going on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. LOGAN. But let it go with my report as an individual against its adoption. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that inasmuch as it is of interest to these people to have the records, if they have a mind to propose an appropriation for that purpose there would be some reason for passing the resolution; but inasmuch as the appropriations are being cut down and the number of clerks cut down, I do not feel it my duty to propose appropriations for the purpose of copying letter-books for the benefit of a governor, and that is all the benefit I can see to be derived from it. It is for the benefit of some individual.

Mr. CONKLING. Has not objection been made to this resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has gone on the Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am authorized by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2736) to remove the political disabilities of N. H. Van Zandt, of Virginia, to report it favorably, with an amendment. This applicant was dismissed from the Navy, and would not therefore ordinarily fall within the rule which the committee have adopted, in order to do justice to all alike, about removing disabilities; but it appears to us that he, not being in employment at the time, resigned and all his accounts were settled, and he did everything that an honorable man could be expected to do, and waited for two or three months before he entered the confederate service in order that there might be ample time for the Department to accept his resignation. They would not do so, but dismissed him. He would not fall within the rule, but still there are special circumstances which make an exception. The evidence before us satisfies me, and would the other members of the committee if they had seen it, that this gentleman took special and extraordinary pains to be of service by acts of kindness to Union prisoners in the confederacy when they were in great need and distress, and that leads me (as we have passed one or two exceptional cases on the same ground) to believe, as I am sure all the committee agree, that under the peculiar circumstances of this gentleman's case it is fair that his disabilities should be removed, although he was dismissed from the Navy. The bill requires an amendment, which is marked in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of C. M. Wilcox, of Maryland, praying the removal of his political disabilities, to report a bill for his relief. His petition is entirely regular and proper, shows a life of personal propriety, and we recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill (S. No. 1027) to remove the political disabilities of C. M. Wilcox, of Maryland, was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3962) to provide means to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia until December 1, 1876, to report it without amendment and recommend its passage. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that had better go over, and my reason for asking it is to call the attention of the Senate to this point: We now have a law which absolutely limits, as I think it ought to do, (and the Senate thought so, and the other House thought so, and the President thought so,) the maximum of the indebtedness of this District. This bill authorizes going beyond it; and when we come to consider it, which I cannot now look into, if the bill is as it passed the House——

Mr. WINDOM. It is the same bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is open to a good deal of objection even in that point of view in respect of its not providing for this temporary indebtedness being speedily liquidated, but the general effect is to enlarge the indebtedness of the District and from year to year it will continue in the same way. But I will not take up the time of the Senate for the present. Of course it will go over.

Mr. WINDOM. Certainly, if objected to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to say one word, if my friend will allow me, before this bill passes away. It does not touch particularly this bill but I would rather say it now. We have come very nearly to the end of the session. I see several Senators about to ask to take up bills, and as I do not like to make objection to any particular Senator after he has risen I ask that when the morning business is concluded we may proceed to the Calendar of unobjected cases so that all may have an opportunity without striving with each other for the ear of the Chair. As I say, although I do not like to make objection, I wish the Senators who have bills in which they are interested (there are a number here that I think ought to be acted upon) would allow us to take up the Calendar and run along morning after morning, and I think in that way they could secure the consideration of their bills.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a very good idea.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is their objection to the proposition of the Senator from New York?

Mr. SARGENT. It is a very good rule to dispose of unobjected cases, but suppose we should come to a case which was partially discussed in the morning hour, as the De Haven bill yesterday, which was laid over. Some one makes an objection and wants to consider it. I do not know how we are to get up a bill of that kind unless by some broader arrangement than that proposed by the Senator from New York. I should like to show, if I had an opportunity, that the committee were right in their view of the law upon which the report in that case was made. I have examined it with considerable care since yesterday, and I am prepared to satisfy the Senate that not only the facts and the equity are clear in favor of the case, but the strict law also.

Mr. CONKLING. If my friend will allow me to suggest that if this rule should run through a fraction of the morning hour and a case is objected to it loses nothing, because the Senator can move at any time to take it up. Simply the residue of the morning hour would be given to the unobjected cases on the Calendar for two or three mornings. If the Senator will pardon me one moment, take as an example the case of one claimant who wants a patent extended. It is simply an exceptional case. He is a blind man, entirely blind, and the Senate and House have both passed his bill at a previous session, and it has failed for want of time. I understand there is no objection to it, and very likely in the game of bounce here I might succeed by and by in getting an opportunity to take up that bill; but if it can be reached on the Calendar nobody would object to it, if the merits are as I understand them to be. So of other bills; and the Senator from California loses nothing in reference to contested bills by letting us have a fraction of the morning hour every day for the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposition of the Senator from New York?

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to understand it. Do I understand that the proposition of the Senator from New York negatives the idea of the right of any Senator to move to take up any particular bill?

Mr. CONKLING. Not at all. It is what we have acted under so often under the name of the Anthony rule, and it is that during the fraction of the morning hour after the morning business is completed, to-day and to-morrow possibly, we shall run along and dispose of some of the cases that nobody objects to.

Mr. THURMAN. The reason I make this remark is that I know we cannot get to the end of the Calendar during the remainder of the session.

Mr. CONKLING. We can get toward the end.

Mr. THURMAN. There are bills that ought to be taken up. I want to move to take up the bill granting a pension to the widow of General Custer and the bill granting a pension to the heirs.

Mr. CONKLING. That will be reached presently.

Mr. THURMAN. I hardly think it would be reached this session in its regular order on the Calendar.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator will see that the rule is for unobjected cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there anything pending before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York appeals to the unanimous vote of the Senate. Does the Senator from Missouri object?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have some morning business. I object to anything until I present it.

Mr. CONKLING. I give notice that I shall move at the end of the morning business, as soon as I have the floor, that we adopt the Anthony rule and go on under it.

Mr. WINDOM. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4030) to provide for the payment of certain indebtedness incurred in the construction of the New York court-house and post-office building, to report it without amendment. I ask consent for its present consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe I promised my friend from Illinois in order to have fair play that I would object to everything.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish to make a report now that, I think, the Senator from Vermont will not be inclined to postpone, and I doubt whether there is anything in it to postpone. A statement was made yesterday by the honorable Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] calling the attention of the Senate to a supposed error in the sundry civil appropriation bill in which the following language occurs:

> That so much of all laws or parts of laws as provide for the election or appointment of Public Printer be, and the same are hereby, repealed, to take effect from and after the passage of this act; and the President of the United States shall appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a suitable person who must be a practical printer and versed in the art of book-binding, to take charge of and manage the Government Printing Office from and after the date aforesaid; he shall be called the "Public Printer," and shall be vested with all the powers and subject to all the restrictions pertaining to the officer now known as the Public Printer; he shall give bond in the sum of $100,000 for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, said bond to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The point to which the Senator from Rhode Island called the attention of the Senate was that there was no Public Printer so entitled at the time the bill was before us, and consequently the clause in the sundry civil bill did not abolish that office or any office. I was of the same impression upon a hasty examination of the statute, but the matter was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I find in the earlier statutes provisions that the Printer should be designated or called Public Printer. Upon further examination I find that in 1874 the following provision was passed:

> For compensation of the Congressional Printer, and the clerks and messengers in his office, $13,917: Provided, That so much of the act entitled "An act providing for the election of a Congressional Printer," approved February 22, 1867, as provides for the election of such officer by the Senate, and provides that such officer shall be deemed an officer of the Senate, shall cease and determine and become of no effect from and after the date of the first vacancy occurring in said office; that the title of said officer shall hereafter be Public Printer and he shall be deemed an officer of the United States, &c.

So that at the time the sundry civil bill was pending the title of that office was Public Printer, made so by statute, and there is no necessity for any change.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 994) to amend section 2931 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to allow repayment by the Secretary of the Treasury of the tonnage tax where it has been exacted in contravention of treaty provisions, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Finance; which was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. The Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the petition and papers of Jackson Tibbetts and others, employés of L. J. and J. Day and T. W. Call, late contractors of the Fox River improvement, praying that the amount forfeited to the United States by the contractors by the annulment of their contracts be applied to the payment of wages due them, have had the same again under consideration (the matter having been recommitted to the committee) and have reached the conclusion heretofore reported, that the claim should be rejected; and I now report the same back and make such recommendation. The Senator from Wisconsin requested, upon the supposition that there was a bill in the case, that it should go on the Calendar. It turns out that there is no bill in the case, and therefore the report can go to the table without any action at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will lie on the table.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Jesse McKay, a citizen of Mississippi, praying compensation for property taken and appropriated by United States troops during the late war, reported adversely thereon, and the claim was rejected.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John Kethley, a citizen of Mississippi, praying compensation for property taken and appropriated by United States troops during the late war, reported adversely thereon, and the claim was rejected.

Mr. WRIGHT. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1219) for the relief of D. P. Rowe, and Brown and Crowell, of Morristown, Tennessee, recommend the indefinite postponement of the bill. I wish to say in this connection that there is no written report, as time would not allow the preparation of one. The ground on which this recommendation is made is this: It seems that these parties claim to be relieved from the penalties which were assessed against them for the manufacture of certain stills. The matter was referred to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and he reports to the committee that there is no question but that these parties were legally liable, and therefore he declined to relieve them. We are inclined to the same opinion. We are not prepared to recommend that parties who are legally liable, and found so by the courts, (unless there be very much more persuasive equities in the case than in this,) should be relieved. We therefore recommend that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WRIGHT. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2501) for the relief of the estate of Mrs. A. E. Hall, widow of Dr. David A. Hall, have directed me to report it back and recommend its indefinite postponement. In connection with this report I wish to make one statement. It seems that this is a claim for some $2,000 for taxes and money expended under a tax title under these circumstances: A controversy obtained between persons claiming this property and the United States which continued for some sixty years; it was determined in 1857 in favor of the United States; and now these parties having paid taxes intermediately insist that the taxes shall be repaid. We are not aware of any principle on which they can make this claim on the Government. Therefore we recommend that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WRIGHT also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 403) to re-imburse the State of West Virginia for losses incurred by reason of the destruction of its bridges, court-houses, school-houses, churches, turnpike-roads, and other public property by Federal troops during the late war, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. KELLY. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a resolution which was passed some months ago by the Legislature of Michigan in favor of an amendment granting to the soldiers and sailors of the late war who by the loss of a limb or other equivalent disability were prevented from making settlement be entitled to an amount of land equal to that they would be entitled to under the homestead law, have instructed me to report adversely to the resolution. I move that the report be printed.

The report was agreed to and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCREERY. Mr. President, I would move that the Senate take up House bill No.——

Mr. WEST. I rise to morning business. If bills are in order, I ask leave to introduce a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports are in order.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 109) for the relief of the estate of I. M. Micaw, of the State of Alabama, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2835) for the relief of R. J. Henderson, or Newton County, Missouri, reported it without amendment.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1011) to extend the time for the completion of the Green Bay and Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-canal, in the State of Wisconsin, and to repeal section 5 of chapter 32 of the acts of Congress of 1866, have had the same under consideration, and instruct me to report it back with an amendment; and I have no doubt I shall obtain the unanimous favor of the Senate by stating that I do not ask for its present consideration. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 133) to sell certain public lands to the Beatrice and Denver City Railroad Company, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 288) granting the right of way to the Birmingham and Saint Louis Railroad Company through the public domain, and for other purposes, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 572) for the relief of settlers upon the reserved Government sections of the public lands within railroad limits, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BOOTH. The Committeee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Kansas in favor of the passage of a law subjecting to taxation by that State certain lands therein which were granted to the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, have instructed me to report it back and ask that it lie on the table, the committee having already reported a bill in accordance with the prayer of the memorial.

The report was agreed to.

JOHN H. RUSSELL.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I rise to ask the recommittal of the bill (S. No. 688) referring the claim of John H. Russell to the accounting officers of the Treasury of the United States for adjudication and settlement to the Committee on Claims. Some time ago I made an adverse report from the committee upon this case. Mr. Russell asks compensation for the destruction of a certain steamboat by the confederates during the late war, which he alleges was destroyed while in the military service of the United States. Since the report was made some facts have come to the knowledge of the committee, and with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Claims I move that the papers be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

HAMBURGH RIOTS.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning after the morning business is over I shall ask the Senate to take up the resolution in regard to printing the President's message and accompanying documents in reference to the massacre at Hamburgh, South Carolina.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PATTERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1028) for the relief of William Talbert, of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1029) for the relief of persons having claims against the United States under the provisions of the captured and abandoned property act; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLISON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1030) granting a pension to Jane D. Colton; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

IMPEACHMENT RECORD.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Printing be authorized to have an alphabetical index prepared for the report of the impeachment trial, already ordered to be printed.

INDIAN PRISONERS AT SAINT AUGUSTINE, FLORIDA.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War communicate to the Senate whether or not the hostile Indians sent to Saint Augustine, Florida, to be confined in the fortress at that place, are permitted to go at large unguarded; and if so, by whose authority these savages have been set at liberty among the inhabitants of said town, and what, in his judgment, ought to be done with these dangerous persons if the Government should decide to restore them to permanent freedom.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest that that resolution lie over until to-morrow morning, unless the Senator is tenacious about it this morning. I inquire does that conclude the morning business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does conclude morning business unless there are further resolutions to be presented.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House further insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; had agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and that the House had appointed Mr. OTHO R. SINGLETON of Mississippi, Mr. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN of Indiana, and Mr. CHARLES FOSTER of Ohio managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 413) establishing the port of Saint Paul, Minnesota, as a port of appraisal.

COUNTERFEITING OF TRADE-MARKS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate on the bill (S. No. 846) to punish the counterfeiting of trade-mark goods, and the sale or dealing in of counterfeit trade-mark goods, Mr. CONKLING, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, and Mr. STEVENSON.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. McCREERY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take up the bill——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to morning business. I have a resolution to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Resolutions are in order.

Mr. CONKLING. Now if the Senator will withdraw his morning business for me, if that is the end of it, I move that the Senate proceed under the Anthony rule, so called, and take up the Calendar for unobjected cases. I ask the vote of the Senate if the Senator from Vermont will give way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I give way. I had a resolution to offer, but I will introduce it to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky held the floor for morning business.

Mr. CONKLING. Did I not make my motion?

Mr. McCREERY. I was on the floor before you made your motion.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg the Senator's pardon, the Senator from Vermont had the floor and yielded to me and I made that motion and I should like to know whether it dies in the breast of the Chair.

Mr. HARVEY. I believe I took the floor earlier than any of these gentlemen.

Mr. KERNAN. Allow me to make a suggestion. I hope we shall go to the Calendar. I have regularly attended to make a quorum here for months, but I have hardly ever been spry enough to get up a bill. I hope we shall go to the Calendar, and thus all will have a chance to get up unobjected bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont yielded to the Senator from New York. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. Now I ask for a vote on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves hat the Senate proceed to the Calendar of unobjected cases.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to make one inquiry, whether that is understood as extending only during the morning hour?

Mr. CONKLING. No, I understand that when we get to the end of the morning hour I will appeal to one of the most reasonable men in the Senate who sits by me, [Mr. HAMLIN,] and ask him whether he will not allow the run of the Calendar to proceed a little while subject to a call for the regular order, the post-route bill, which is the unfinished business; and in that way, if my friend from Iowa and I do not occupy any time now, we shall run off some of these cases.

Mr. WRIGHT. What I want to know is whether it is understood as continuing during the morning hour and such time as shall be given afterward, or whether it will be understood as running through the day?

Mr. CONKLING. Of course it does not run beyond the morning hour without the consent of the Senator who has charge of the unfinished business.

Mr. WRIGHT. I trust I have done no harm in asking the question.

Mr. CONKLING. Of course there is no harm in it; it is all right; but the Senator will understand that if we fritter away the morning hour we shall lose the very object we desire, that is the consideration of bills on the Calendar under what is known as the Anthony rule.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to remind the Senate that a day or two ago I gave notice that I should ask to be heard at the expiration of the morning hour to-day, and I hope there will be nothing done that will interfere with that.

Mr. CONKLING. This will not interfere with the Senator at all. It may postpone ten or fifteen minutes the time when he will begin his remarks; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves to proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar under what is known as the Anthony rule until the morning hour expires.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first case on the Calendar at the point where it was last considered will be called.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that wherever there is an objection to be made it be made promptly.

CONSTABLES' BONDS.

The bill (S. No. 526) to amend section 1036 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It amends section 1036 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia so as to read as follows:

Each constable shall, before performing any of the duties of his office, take the oath prescribed for civil officers in the District, and shall enter into a bond to the United States in the sum of $5,000, with security, to be approved by the clerk of the supreme court of the District, conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of his office and for the punctual payment of all moneys coming into his hands to the persons entitled to receive the same. And the clerk of said supreme court shall approve of no bond of any constable until at least three bondsmen shall sign said constable's bond, and each of said bondsmen shall file with said constable's bond an affidavit that he is the owner in fee-simple of unencumbered real estate, situated in the District of Columbia, of the cash value of at least $5,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

On the passage of the bill a division was called for; and the ayes were 27, and the noes 9.

So the bill was passed.

FORT LARAMIE MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 361) to reduce the area of the military reservation of Fort Laramie, Wyoming Territory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to appeal to the Senator from Vermont to allow the bill to be passed. It is indorsed by the military authorities. The only reason for the former enlargement of this reservation was that an Indian reservation was placed on the military reservation. The Indians have since been removed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Who is going to get the land?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is to be open to general settlement as other public land.

Mr. CONKLING. We must all object to debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is open to homestead then?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next case will be called.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw my objection to the bill of the Senator from Nebraska. I presume it is all right. I do not know anything about it, but I only objected because I thought it would lead to discussion.

TERRITORY OF PEMBINA.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next bill on the Calendar is the bill (S. No. 606) to establish the Territory of Pembina, and to provide a temporary government therefor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I object. It is too important a bill to be passed in this way.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for one minute. ["No, no."] I do not often intrude on the time of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. But the Senator knows now that he intrudes against the rule. When objection is made, a bill passes over. That is the rule.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that the objection to House bill No. 361 was withdrawn.

FORT LARAMIE MILITARY RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands objection is withdrawn to the consideration of House bill No. 361.

The bill (H. R. No. 361) to reduce the area of the military reservation of Fort Laramie, Wyoming Territory, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It reduces the military reservation of Fort Laramie, in the Territory of Wyoming, to an area of fifty-four square miles, and provides that the reservation shall be limited and bounded as described and declared in executive order of June 28, 1869. All that portion of land added to the reservation by executive order of April 2, 1872, is eliminated therefrom and restored to the body of the public lands, and is to be held subject to all provisions of the laws of the United States relating to the public lands, in the same manner and to the same extent as if they had never constituted a portion of the military reservation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CASCADES OF COLUMBIA RIVER.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 17) in aid of the commerce of the North Pacific coast by the construction of a canal and locks at the Cascades of Columbia River.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that that go over. It has been incorporated in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Why not indefinitely postpone it?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not desire to have that done until I know the fate of the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

PROTECTION OF WITNESSES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2572) to protect witnesses who shall be required to testify in certain cases.

Mr. INGALLS. There is an adverse report in that case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us vote on it. I have been wanting to vote on that all winter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SURETIES OF INDIAN AGENTS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 79) to amend section 10 of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes,'" approved March 3, 1875.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that go over.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no objection to that. If the Senator will hear it read, he will say it ought to pass.

Mr. CONKLING. But an objection has been made, which carries it over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a general bill which certainly will lead to debate.

Mr. CONKLING. The regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

CHARLES H. FONDÉ.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1440) to enable Charles H. Fondé to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for extension of letters-patent for improvement in dredging-machines.

Mr. HARVEY. I object.

Mr. KERNAN. Let the report be read. It is very short.

Mr. ALLISON. We may as well object to all these cases.

Mr. CONKLING. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill will be read.

BILLS OBJECTED TO.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 151) to define certain crimes and the punishment thereof.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 743) to amend section 8, chapter 2, title 1, of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1585) to authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to designate and fix the points at which collectors and supervisors of the revenue shall hold their offices.

Mr. SARGENT. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the public service requires the passage of this bill; and for a general reason.

Mr. SARGENT. The bill was debated at length before; but I am willing to hear it read to see whether I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been up before and amended.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 669) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to set aside a reservation for the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians, and for other purposes.

Mr. MITCHELL. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

SURETIES OF INDIAN AGENTS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2133) to amend section 10 of the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department for the year ending June 30, 1876; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It amends section 10 of the act named so as to read as follows:

That hereafter the surety or sureties upon the bond to be given by each Indian agent, subagent, and special agent appointed by the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, or other competent authority, before entering upon the duties of his office shall file a sworn statement with the Secretary of the Interior, setting forth the nature and kind of property owned by such surety or sureties, the value of the same, and where situated; and that no moneys appropriated by any act of Congress, or otherwise, and no trust fund or any other public funds appropriated or set apart for the benefit of any Indian or Indians, shall be paid to any Indian agent, subagent, or special agent, to be hereafter appointed, and no public property of any kind, whether designed for the use of Indians or for any other purpose, shall be turned to any Indian agent, subagent, or special agent, to be hereafter appointed, until the surety or sureties shall have filed such statement. Each Indian agent shall keep a book of itemized expenditures of every kind, with a record of all contracts, together with the receipts of money from all sources; and the books thus kept shall always be open to inspection; and the said books shall remain in the office at the respective reservations, not to be removed from said reservations by said agent, but shall be safely kept and handed over to his successor; and true transcripts of all entries of every character in said books shall be forwarded quarterly by each agent to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs: Provided, That should any agent knowingly make any false entry in said books, or in the transcripts directed to be forwarded to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or shall knowingly fail to keep a perfect entry in said books as herein prescribed, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction before any United States court having jurisdiction of such offense, shall be fined in a sum not less than five hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, at the discretion of the court, and shall be rendered incompetent to hold said office of Indian agent, subagent, or special agent, after conviction under this act: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior, whenever in his opinion the interests of the service may demand it, may require any Indian agent, subagent, or special agent now on duty to execute a new bond under the provisions and requirements of this section; and in case of the neglect or refusal of any such officer to execute a new bond when required by the Secretary of the Interior, within a reasonable time, such neglect or refusal shall be deemed sufficient cause for removal.

Mr. WINDOM. From what committee has that bill been reported?

Mr. ALLISON. That bill is the precise bill that the Senator from Vermont objected to a few moments ago. It was carefully considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, and is on the Calendar as Senate bill No. 79.

Mr. WINDOM. I have no objection to the bill if it is reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON. It is reported by that committee.

The bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to call attention to one thing in this bill. I should like the Secretary to read again the provision in the first part about what the sureties shall swear to respecting their property.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter the surety or sureties upon the bond to be given by each Indian agent, subagent, and special agent appointed by the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, or other competent authority, before entering upon the duties of his office, shall file a sworn statement with the Secretary of the Interior, setting forth the nature and kind of property owned by such surety or sureties, the value of the same, and where situated.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I wish to suggest to my friend from Iowa that that requires from the surety, as it appears to me, a statement of all his property; and if Mr. Corcoran were asked to go upon a bond, before he could sign it he would be obliged to give a full schedule and description of all the property that he possesses. The Senator does not mean that.

Mr. CONKLING. I am afraid I shall have to object to this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot object while I am speaking. What is wanted is that the surety shall go far enough to show that he has property enough to be responsible, but you cannot expect a rich man to give a full schedule of all he has got.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Vermont will just suggest a word by way of amendment to accomplish his purpose, I shall be glad to accommodate him. I think he is right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would put in the proper place "So far as to show that he is responsible."

Mr. ALLISON. "For the amount named in the bond."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; "for the amount named in the bond." Let that be put in the right place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont; which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "situated," in line 14, it is proposed to insert:

So far as shall be necessary to show him responsible for an amonnt double the penalty of the bond.

Mr. ALLISON. That will do.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, and the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. CONKLING. I appeal to the honorable Senator from Maine to allow this business to go on, subject to his call for the regular order at any moment when he will.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Subject to anybody's call.

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly; but I assume that the Senator from Maine having the bill in charge will call for it when he thinks it necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator from Maine proposes to let it run on for half an hour, I shall not object.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not fix any time. Let it go on until anybody calls for the regular order.

Mr. DAVIS. I give notice that at half past one I shall ask the floor.

FORT LARAMIE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator from Nebraska has just come in. I wish to call his attention to a bill that passed just now which I think ought to be reconsidered and amended so as to set out the executive order which the bill makes a law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator refer to the Fort Laramie bill?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir. The bill declares the limits of the Fort Laramie reservation to be such as were defined in a certain executive order. I think those limits should be embraced in the statute. I only want the passage of the bill reconsidered pro forma, that the terms of the order may be embraced in it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Wait a moment until I get the report on the matter.

Mr. HOWE. Let the motion to reconsider be entered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

Mr. HOWE subsequently said: I wish to withdraw the motion I made just now to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill fixing the boundaries of Fort Laramie reservation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the motion will be withdrawn.

BILLS OBJECTED TO.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 757) to amend the regulations for the consular courts of the United States in Japan.

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 492) making an appropriation for the erection of a monument and spindle on Whale Rock, at the entrance of Narraganset Bay.

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1398) to regulate the practice of pharmacy in the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2454) amending the laws granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812 and their widows.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that had better go over.

Mr. INGALLS. I think the Senator from Vermont inadvertently objected to that bill perhaps.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that is the old 1812 pension bill, I did not inadvertently object.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not know but that it might have been done inadvertently; but I think if he would hear it read he would have no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will hear it read subject to objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, but before concluding—

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no use in reading that bill. It is the one I supposed it was, and there are some parts of it which will necessarily lead to debate and which ought not to pass. There are some parts of it I am for; but there is no use in wasting time.

Mr. INGALLS. We might pass the part you are for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to that, if you will do it by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONKLING. The regular order, Mr. President.

SECURITY ON WRITS OF ERROR AND APPEALS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 307) concerning security on writs of error and appeals, and for other purposes; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the six hundred and thirty-first and the six hundred and thirty-third sections of the Revised Statutes be, and are, so amended that the words "$50" wherever they occur therein shall read and be "$300."

SEC. 2. That where a cause in equity, admiralty, and maritime jurisdiction shall not be subject to appeal to the Supreme Court, the circuit court shall not be required to find or state the conclusions of fact and law upon which it gives its decree.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object.

Mr. ALLISON. It is too late for an objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection comes too late.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CONKLING. I rise to make a statement to the Chair. The Senator from Missouri happened to be diverted as I saw, for a moment in the rear of the Chamber, but as soon as he heard the bill, he came forward and objected to it. I think it is pretty sharp to say that that is too late.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was in committee considered and the amendment agreed to. If the Senator from Missouri states that he objected to the bill when it was up for consideration, the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. CONKLING. He objected as soon as he found out what it was.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not the bill I thought it was. I withdraw my objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RATES OF PENSION.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 234) to amend section 4698 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to allow a pension of $37 per month to soldiers who have lost an arm and a leg, in lieu of $24 per month now allowed; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Pensions proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That every person entitled to a pension under the provisions of section 4698 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and who has lost one hand and one foot, shall be entitled to a pension of $37 per month.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect from and after the 1st day of September, 1876.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to allow a pension of $37 per month to soldiers who have lost both an arm and a leg."

DISTRICT GOVERNMENT.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 15) authorizing the qualified voters of the District of Columbia to vote upon the question whether they desire Congress to establish a government for the District for the regulation of domestic affairs, the officers of which shall be chosen by the qualified voters of the District, and for laying the result of the election before Congress for information.

Mr. INGALLS. That had better go over.

Mr. WITHERS. There is an adverse report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

ANDREW J. BARRETT.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 648) for the relief of Andrew J. Barrett.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was a subject that was under debate before, and there was opposition to the bill; and therefore it will take a little time. I think it had better go over.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do not think it will really take any time. The bill is accompanied by a brief printed report, and I think if the Senator will hear the report read he will be satisfied that the bill ought to pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was satisfied quite otherwise before, but I will look at it again, if the Senator will let it go over, and he can call it up at another time.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That is the trouble; I have been trying to get it up for some time, but I have not been able.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Unless the Senate is willing to take a little time to consider it, it had better go over.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from Vermont on examination withdraws his objection, we can go back.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill will be reported.

RICHMOND FEMALE INSTITUTE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 780) for the relief of the Richmond Female Institute, of Richmond, Virginia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That raises one of the old questions. It had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WITHERS. Does the Senator object to that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir. It raises the old question of damage as well as mere hiring, as I see by the language of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a mere question of rent.

Mr. WITHERS. Rent of a college.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the bill says it shall be in full for all damages, &c.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator is out of order; he has objected, and that is the end of the bill now.

Mr. WITHERS. Of course, if the Senator objects, that settles it for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next case will be reported.

BILLS OBJECTED TO.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 92) to survey the Austin-Topolovampo Pacific route.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2287) for the relief of Peters & Reed, naval contractors at Norfolk navy-yard in the year 1860.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That will give rise to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro temopre. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WITHERS. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is called, which is the post-route bill, the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator mean that by the regular order, the unfinished business?

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to me for the purpose of moving that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 832) to increase the pension of Helen M. Stansbury.

Mr. HAMLIN. There are a hundred just such cases on the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Calendar of unobjected cases is not to continue, I ask the favor of the Senate for the floor.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FRANK HEREFORD of West Virginia, Mr. J. H. REAGAN of Texas, and Mr. M. H. DUNNELL of Minnesota managers at the conference on its part.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. SANGENT, and Mr. RANSOM.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not intend to oppose taking up the post-route bill or to interpose for the purpose of consuming time, but there is a bill to which I have often called the attention of the Senate, and I give notice that so soon as the post-route bill is acted on by the Senate, I shall then ask a vote upon taking up House bill No. 58, commonly known as the bounty bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask for the purpose of submitting some remarks that the report of the Finance Committee made on June 6th, being Report No. 371, be taken up for consideration.

Mr. HAMLIN. I believe the Senator gave notice that he would address the Senate on this occasion; but it would wonderfully accommodate me if he would take some other occasion. I believe this is the fourth time I have had this post-route bill up, and I should like to have it disposed of. I do not wish to interpose any objection to the Senator's request other than that if that question is taken up it must be taken up subject to a call for this bill at any moment.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMLIN. I give notice now that I will call for it if any Senator seeks to reply to the Senator from West Virginia to-day.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the motion of the Senator from West Virginia?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) To proceed to the consideration of the report indicated by him.

Mr. CONKLING. I venture to make a suggestion, not meaning to interfere with the Senator. If he wants to make remarks, he can make them on this bill. If he wants that report taken up, he can have it read as part of his remarks; but although I have no purpose to reply to the Senator, I do protest against an arrangement by which the Senator is to make a speech on such a subject in such wise that no other Senator can reply to it. If he makes his remarks upon this bill, everybody will have the right to reply, and if he wants the report read, he can have it read as a part of his remarks. That saves all his rights; but I do not quite want to go to sea on the Senator's speech with the understanding before we embark that no Senator is to be permitted to say anything in reply.

Mr. HAMLIN. To-day.

Mr. CONKLING. Well let him make his remarks upon the bill and have the report read.

Mr. DAVIS. It is immaterial upon what bill or question I make my remarks. The Senate will do me the justice to say that on former occasions I stated that to-day I should ask to be heard, and I believe it has always been the usage to allow a Senator the floor whenever he took it after the morning hour, according to such previous notice.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator is quite right; but I hope he does not understand me as making any objection. I only suggest to him that everything he wants to accomplish will be accomplished by speaking in form to the post-route bill. If he wants this report to precede his remarks, let him have it read as part of his remarks. The only effect of that arrangement will be that if any Senator wants to make any reply to him when he finishes, he may do so; whereas, if the Senate takes up this report as the business before the Senate subject to a call for the regular order and the Senator from Maine gives notice that on the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia he will insist that no other Senator shall go on, then it gives him alone the opportunity to be heard and deprives everybody else of it.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from New York knows better than I do that even if the post-route bill is called up as soon as I finish my remarks any Senator who chooses to take the floor to reply may do so.

Mr. CONKLING. Not speaking on the same measure that the Senator does.

Mr. DAVIS. On any measure. Mr. President, I have no disposition to exclude any Senator; in fact, I expect that some Senator probably will have something to say in reply; but during the remarks I shall make to-day, as the figures ought to go in regular order, I ask that no Senator interrupt me; but at the expiration of my remarks I shall be ready to be catechised and to answer any question that any Senator may think proper to propound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator to move to proceed to the consideration of the report indicated by him.

Mr. DAVIS. Only for the purpose of having it properly appear that I speak on the report of the committee, not on the post-route bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia moves to proceed to the consideration of the report on the accounts of the Treasury Department submitted from the Committee on Finance on the 6th of June.

Mr. HAMLIN. I make no such agreement on that, and I will take the vote of the Senate. I want to accommodate the Senator; but if he is going by a formal vote to displace the pending business, we shall have a division on that question.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the Senator does not understand that I want to do something that is irregular or improper. I would prefer speaking to the report. If that is objected to by Senators, I shall make my remarks on the post-route bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not object to taking up the report subject to a call for the regular business at any time.

Mr. DAVIS. I am perfectly satisfied with that and have so stated.

Mr. HAMLIN. Very well.

TREASURY STATEMENTS AND ACCOUNTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the report referred to by the Senator from West Virginia will be considered as before the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. I make no objection subject to call for regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending order will be laid aside informally and the report taken up subject to call for the regular order.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I shall be as brief as the subject will permit.

It will be remembered by the Senate that in the early part of the present session, in the month of January, I introduced a resolution, which asked in substance that, owing to material alterations and discrepancies appearing in the statements of the public debt, expenditures, and receipts of the Government, as contained in the official finance reports to Congress, a special committee be appointed to investigate the books and accounts of the Treasury Department, particularly with reference to such alterations and discrepancies, which, after extended debate, was defeated by a party vote, (the republicans voting solidly against it,) and a substitute adopted, by a like party vote, modifying the resolution to the extent of compelling its reference to the Finance Committee instead of a special committee of the Senate. I will not stop to notice the reasons that actuated the dominant party in the Senate in refusing to allow this investigation by a special committee. They were then well understood, as they are now. In what I now have to say I shall confine my remarks to the annual official reports to Congress, which ought to agree with the books of the Treasury Department, and the facts and figures I shall use I am prepared to show are taken from said reports.

In the remarks made by me, and figures cited in support of the resolution, I think it can be safely said that it was established from the official finance reports that there had been changes, alterations, and discrepancies made in the annual statements of the public debt, expenditures, and receipts of the Government, and particularly in the reports for the years 1869, 1870, and 1871; that, as an example of these changes and differences, the finance report for the year 1870 states the total annual expenditures of the Government for the years from 1861 to 1866, inclusive, to be $3,271,970.43 more than the finance report for the year 1869 states them to be, and that for the single year 1865 the finance report for the year 1870 states the expenditures to be nearly $9,000,000 more than the report of 1869 and previous reports state them to be; that like differences, changes, and alterations exist in the finance reports for 1869 and 1870 as to the pension, war, naval, and Indian expenditures, the same amounting to millions of dollars, and in all the examples cited the finance report for 1870 increases the expenditures over the amounts they are stated to be in the finance reports for 1869 and the reports for the previous years; that after the revenue for certain years had been collected, determined, and reported at certain and fixed amounts, and carried for years as such in the various finance reports, it was in subsequent reports altered and changed to smaller amounts, as in the year 1862 the annual revenue collected was stated in that year to have been $51,935,720.76, and continued to be reported at these same figures in all the annual finance reports from 1862 to 1870, a period of nine years, when for some strange, unknown, and unexplained reason this amount was changed and stated in the annual finance report for 1870 to be $51,907,944.62, making a difference and decreasing the revenue for that year $27,776.14.

Again, the finance report for the year 1863 states that the revenue derived from loans and Treasury notes for that year was $756,489,905.57, and the report for 1864, the year succeeding, states it to be $776,682,361.57, which amount remains as the revenue for that year from loans and Treasury notes, and is carried in all the reports from 1864 to 1869 at these figures, when it is found that in the finance report for 1870 for some reason this amount is also changed, and the revenue from loans and Treasury notes for the year 1863 is stated to be $814,925,494.96, and in the report for 1875, $717,284,707.01, the four statements for the same year, 1863, differing from $20,000,000 to $96,000,000, rendering it impossible to place full confidence in either of the finance reports named or to ascertain with any degree of accuracy from them the amount of revenue realized during the year 1863 from loans and Treasury notes.

It was established that the finance report for the year 1871 and subsequent reports state the public debt differently from what it is stated in the finance report of 1870 and all previous reports, and for the nine years commencing with 1862 and ending with 1870 the finance report of 1871 increases the public debt over the report of 1870 for the same years in the aggregate $248,960,352.94; and, further, that while Secretaries Chase, Fessenden, and McCulloch stated the public debt for the year 1862 to be $514,211,371.92, in which the Register of the Treasury agreed, and this amount stood on all the annual statements of the public debt in each of the finance reports from 1862 up to 1870, never was contradicted, and was always taken and acted upon as the public debt for that year, yet the Secretary of the Treasury, in the finance report for 1871, in the face of the action of his three distinguished predecessors and against all previous reports, and without explanation, and as I believe without any right or authority, stated the public debt for the year 1862 to be $524,176,412.13, thereby not only changing and altering it from what it had always been reported, but increasing it nearly $10,000,000.

RIGHT TO MAKE CHANGES IN REPORTS DENIED.

The right, law, and propriety of making these and other alterations in the finance reports I denied in my former remarks, and now deny.

It is conceded by all that the changes and alterations pointed out by me existed; that I made no misstatement of facts; that I drew all the figures I used from the official finance reports and from no other source; and about the only answer made is an attempted explanation by the free use of strange figures and strange facts nowhere to be found in the finance reports or any official information given to Congress or the country.

In the debate referred to some of the leading Senators friendly to the Administration, aided by all the assistance and statements the Treasury Department could render, attempted to explain some of the changes, alterations, and discrepancies pointed out by myself, but in the main failed, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance having one thoory and one set of figures to aid his explanation, while the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] had a somewhat different theory and different facts to support his.

I also asserted that if the Register of the Treasury should be asked whether or not the warrants in his Office would sustain the finance reports to Congress and his books, he would answer they could not sustain both; and I believe the Treasurer will answer about the same and tell you balances have been forced; yet in the face of this declaration, now standing on the records of the Senate, I do not hear that any question has been asked the Register or any other official to gain information on this point. Is it or can it be that the friends of the Administration are afraid he will answer as I have indicated, and perhaps produce written authority for his action in making changes?

FINANCE COMMITTEES REPORT.

This brings me to the consideration of the report of the Finance Committee made on the 6th, printed and delivered to the Senate on the 17th of June. Before addressing myself to the details of this report, which I observe to be more voluminous than I had anticipated, and which contains a lengthy explanation of a part of the discrepancies pointed out by myself, I beg to submit generally that it must strike the impartial mind as a strange coincidence and circumstance that if the statements of the expenditures, receipts, and public debt as found in the finance reports are true, agree with the books, and can and ought to be relied upon, why so much time and labor to explain them? Indeed, I might say if they were true, agreed with each other and the books, there could be no difference and therefore no explanation required. It may be asserted generally that the truth needs no explanation. A mere statement carries conviction without labor or effort; and I submit, what will not be denied by any one, that if changes, alterations, and discrepancies in the statements of a large corporation should continually appear, and it took great time, effort, and an expert to explain them, and then to many minds fail, the verdict of all right-thinking people would be that such an institution, and particularly the statements of its business affairs, would not and could not be entitled to confidence; and, applying the same impartial rule to the statements and reports of the Treasury Department, the same result must follow. I will also observe that the report admits on its face that the committee made no such examination of the books and accounts of the Treasury Department as contemplated by the resolution, but have submitted a statement prepared in the Treasury Department.

The chairman of the committee, in his remarks made in the Senate on the 19th ultimo, admits he made no personal examination. And the distinguished Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN,] in the debate on the same day, says:

> But the Senator from Massachusetts is correct in supposing that the matter was referred to a subcommittee consisting of the chairman and myself; and it is due to us to say that neither of us—I did not go, I am sure—ever went to the Treasury to examine these books, which would have taken time beyond anything we could think of bestowing; but the resolution was communicated to the Treasury Department, and there came back a very large mass of statements and figures purporting to be explanations of the discrepancies complained of.

These Senators constituted the subcommittee appointed to investigate the books and accounts of the Treasury Department, and they admit that they made no examination of them; and I will add with entire confidence that neither did the Finance Committee nor the subcommittee at any time visit the Treasury Department and make any examination whatever of the books, accounts, and reports; and further, the report made to the Senate was never regularly acted upon nor adopted in full committee, and that no member thereof ever carefully read or examined it, except perhaps the chairman; and while it purports to be the report of the committee under the resolution, it is nothing more nor less than a statement of the Treasury Department defending itself.

It will be borne in mind that in the examination made by myself I have not enjoyed the friendly aid and sympathy of the Treasury Department or any of its officials and experts, so readily accorded the Senator from Massachusetts and the committee, to explain changes and discrepancies pointed out by me, but I have been compelled to rely entirely upon such facts and information as I could obtain from the finance reports.

REPORT ADMITS CHANGES AND ALTERATIONS.

Before proceding to notice in detail the explanations contained in the report of the Finance Committee, I will cite certain extracts from it to show that it admits there have been changes and alterations made in the statements of the public debt, revenue, and expenditures contained in the finance reports to Congress from year to year. I deem this important, because although I have shown from the reports themselves that certain statements have been changed yet it has been denied.

On page 9 of the report the committee, after speaking of the examination of the public debt from the year 1836, quoting from the finance report of 1871, say:

> A part of the differences has arisen from a want of knowledge and care on the part of subordinate clerks in stating loan accounts, but much the larger proportion has occurred from a want of unity, system, and proper method in the accounts as heretofore kept in the Department.

Then follows a letter of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

This letter is set out in the report, occupies two full pages, 10 and 11, and nearly all of it is devoted to explaining the discrepancies in the different statements of the public debt for the year 1869, there being four distinct statements, all different, as follows:

Finance report for 1869, page 19	$2,656,603,955 73
Monthly debt statement, July 1, 1869	2,645,170,294 16
Finance report, 1870, (June 30, 1869,) page 25	2,588,452,213 94
Finance report, 1870, (by the Register,) page 276	2,489,002,480 58

These differences varying from eleven to one hundred and sixty-seven million dollars.

It is submitted, if it takes two pages of printed matter for an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, with all the facts before him and all the information in the Department at his command, to explain the differences that exist in the statements of the public debt for a single year, it becomes simply impossible for a person outside of the Treasury and relying solely on the finance reports to even approximate to what the public debt is for a given year.

In this letter, near its close, the Assistant Secretary, in speaking of these differences and discrepancies, says:

> They arose from a system of book-keeping which was defective, and which has been of late years greatly improved.

The committee, on page 12, submit as a part of their report a letter from Secretary Bristow, bearing date May 4, 1876, to the chairman of the Committee on Finance touching the resolution introduced by myself, in which he says:

> In reply, I have the honor to transmit herewith certain tabular statements and memoranda explaining the discrepancies referred to.

On page 13 of the report the Secretary, in this same letter, says:

> Some of the discrepancies referred to have actually existed for many years, in fact commencing with some of the accounts of the first loans issued by the Government, and were first shown in the reports of the years 1870 and 1871, for the reason that during that period an examination into the subject was begun, and changes were then made in the published statements as the result of such examination.

Here, Senators, you have from the Secretary of the Treasury, adopted by the Finance Committee, the unequivocal admission that in 1870 and 1871 wholesale changes were made in the published statements of the public debt, expenditures, and receipts.

Further on, under the head of public debt, he says:

> In 1871 this account was restated from 1836 from the receipts and expenditures.

And he also says:

> When this examination was completed the Register was directed to state his accounts accordingly.

Here we have another important admission; that the Register was directed to state his accounts, not from his books, not from the warrants in his Office, nor in his own way, but to force balances according to a statement sent from the Secretary of the Treasury.

On page 16 of the report Secretary Bristow, in this same letter, says:

> The year 1869 was the first of Secretary BOUTWELL's administration, who remodeled the debt statement, and, I add, increased it many millions.

These extracts from the report of the committee establish the following important admissions and facts:

First. That discrepancies and differences do exist in the statements of the public debt, receipts, and expenditures made by the Treasury Department to Congress.

Second. In 1870 and 1871 certain changes reaching as far back as the year 1835 were made in the published statements to Congress of the public debt, receipts, and expenditures of the Government.

Third. That after the examination made in the Secretary's office which produced these changes, the public debt in 1871 was "restated and remodeled," the Register of the Treasury, the official book-keeper of the accounts of the Government, a high officer, whose duty is defined by law, was arbitrarily directed to make his statements conform to them, thereby increasing the public debt millions.

Fourth. That in 1870 the Secretary of the Treasury "remodeled" the public debt statement, largely increasing it.

And herein at last we have the reasons given why it is impossible to gain accurate information from the published statements of the Treasury Department as to what the public debt, receipts, and expenditures of the Government are for a given year, and why it is that the reports for the same year do not agree.

But, Mr. President, this is not all. This going back and changing the published statements of the Treasury Department for more than thirty years has not only led to inextricable confusion, but puts it beyond the power of any one to tell whether or not a proper disposition has been made of the public funds or fraud has been committed; and it is only the charitable, in the face of the fact that these changes have largely increased the public debt, who will agree no harm has been done and no frauds perpetrated and no money misapplied.

Again, sir, I wish to state that the changing of the official published statements of the Treasury Department that have stood for years, for any reason whatever, appears to me a bold and unwarranted assumption of power. These statements were sacred beyond the touch of any officer of the Government, and could not be interfered with, changed, or altered except by an act of Congress assigning the reasons therefor, and even this power is doubtful. Yet we find one Secretary acknowledging that another "remodeled" the public-debt statement at his own instance, and not in pursuance of any law. This power that one Secretary may change the statements made by his predecessors conceded, uncertainty reigns, the road becomes directly open to fraud, and confidence must cease to exist; and yet this is just what has been done and admitted by the officers of the Treasury Department and the Finance Committee in their report.

REVIEW OF REPORT.

On page 16 of the report we find the explanation made by the Treasury Department and adopted by the committee of some of the discrepancies and differences pointed out by myself. The first is as to the differences in the finance reports of 1869 and 1870 as to the total annual expenditures of the Government from 1860 to 1866, inclusive, and I read it at length, that it may be fully understood:

The total annual expenditures are stated in the finance report of 1869, on page 321, as follows:

1860-'61	$85,383,713 08
1861-'62	570,841,700 25
1862-'63	895,796,630 65
1863-'64	1,298,144,656 00
1864-'65	1,897,674,224 09
1865-'66	1,141,672,666 09
Total	5.888,917.190 16

The total annual expenditures are stated in the finance report for 1870, on page 275, as follows:

1860-'61	$85,387,363 08
1861-'62	565,667,358 08
1862-'63	899,815,911 25
1863-'64	1,295,541,114 86
1864-'65	1,906,433,331 37
1865-'66	1,139,344,081 95
Total	5,892,199,160 39
Difference or increase	3,271,970 43

Which is explained as follows, namely:

Typographical error in finance report for 1869 in the amount of the total expenditures for the year 1861-'62		$50 00
Trust funds, excluded from the finance report of 1869, namely:
1862—Chickasaw fund	$20,000 00
Choctaw schools	319 91
Navy pension fund	3,013 44
	23,333 35
Less repayment, Navy hospital fund	6,292 60
		17,040 75
(See Appendix B.)
1863—Awards	3,043 31
Cherokee schools	13,065 87
Navy pension fund	3,162 04
Kansas schools	600 00
Navy hospital fund	10,858 37
		30,729 50
(See Appendix C.)
1865—Navy pension fund	7,047,200 65
Chickasaw fund	122,256 96
Cherokee schools	4,692 42
Choctaw schools	21,610 30
Kansas schools	1,312 50
Navy hospital fund	45,169 17
		7,242,242 00
(See Appendix E.)
Total		7,290,062 34
From which deduct outstanding warrants:
July 1, 1866, per "receipts and expenditures," 1866, page 356	4,484,555 03
Less the amount outstanding July 1, 1861, per "receipts and expenditures," 1861, page 385	466,463 12
		4,018,091 91
Difference explained		3,271,970 43

Now I submit that this falls far short of an explanation. Indeed, it cannot be regarded as an explanation at all.

In my remarks I set up the figures from both reports and gave the total difference as to the years named, feeling that the difference as to each year would be apparent and any answer would explain each one of them; and for the purpose of making proper reply to this explanation I will now show the difference in each year, increase or decrease, as the case may be, as follows:

Annual expenditures as shown by reports of 1869 and 1870.

Years.	Total annual expenditures as stated in finance report for—		Increase in report of 1870 over 1869.	Decrease in report of 1870 over 1869.
	1869 and previous reports.	1870 and subsequent reports.
1860-'61	$85,387,313 08	$85,387,363 08	$50 00
1861-'62	570,841,700 25	565,667,358 08		$5,174,342 17
1862-'63	895,796,630 65	899,815,911 25	4,019,280 60
1863-'64	1,298,144,656 00	1,295,541,114 86		2,603,541 14
1864-'65	1,897,674,224 09	1,906,433,331 37	8,759,107 28
1865-'66	1,141,072,666 09	1,139,344,081 95		1,728,584 14
Total	5,888,917,190 16	5,892,189,160 59	12,778,437 88	9,506,467 45
Difference or increase			3,271,970 43

Now, the objection to the explanation is that it disposes of only the year 1861, where the discrepancy amounts to only $50, and this is done by saying it is a typographical error, to which there is no answer. The difference between the two reports as to the year 1862 is $5,174,342.17, of which the sum of $17,040.75 is acccounted for by excluding trust funds, and more than $5,000,000 left unaccounted for.

As to the year 1863, $4,019,280.60, by the use of school and other funds there is explained of this amount $30,729.59. What becomes of the other three million dollars and more no one can tell.

As to the year 1865, $8,759,107.28, and by a similar use of school and trust funds of this amount there is explained only $7,290,062.34, and nothing said of the other million.

It would have been more satisfactory if the Treasury Department and the committee had taken up these alarming differences in each year and explained them if there was any explanation, and if there was none to have said so.

But the most notable defect in this explanation which accounts to a cent for the aggregate difference between the two reports is that it omits any mention of the difference as to the year 1864, which amounts to $2,603,541.14. Yet leaving out this sum, making no reference to it whatever, the Treasury Department and Finance Committee make their explanation of the aggregate differences between the reports for the years from 1861 to 1866 agree to a cent. How they could do this and omit the year 1864 with its large difference of more than two millions, defeats any hope of understanding.

It would delay the Senate too long for me to notice at length the other attempted explanations made of the discrepancies in the reports pointed out by myself as to the receipts and expenditures. I will cite two examples and pass on.

On page 17 of the report is the following:

In the report of 1870 the expenditures for pensions are stated for the year 1864-'65 at		$16,347,621 34
In the report for 1869, for same year, at		9,291,610 48
Showing an increase in the report of 1870 over that of 1869 of		7,056,010 86
which is explained as follows:
Amount paid from the Navy pension fund (Interior Department) for investment in Navy pension fund, (public debt,) per act of July 1, 1864, (13 Statutes, page 414, section 4753, Revised Statutes)		7,047,200 65
Excess of repayment carried to "Indians" per "receipts and expenditures" 1865, page 45		9,466 19
		7,056,666 84
Less amount of outstanding warrants issued on this account, but not paid during the year. (See "receipts and expenditures" 1864, page 229, and 1865, page 276)	$245 98
And error in classification carried to "Indians"	410 00
		655 98
Difference explained		7,056,010 86

The Senator from Massachusetts made the reports of 1869 and 1870 to Congress, and is responsible for both; yet one says the amount expended for pensions was $16,347,621.34 and the other $9,291,610.48—increase over seven millions.

And on page 19 the following:

REVENUE COLLECTED.

In the finance report for 1863, the total revenue for the year, exclusive of loans and Treasury notes, is stated at	$132,889,746 95
In the report for the year 1864, at $112,687,290.95, which should be	112,697,290 95
Showing a difference in the two reports of	20,192,456 00
Which is the amount of receipts for that year from postal currency improperly included in the report for 1863 in the column of "net ordinary revenue"	20,192,456 00

These examples will indicate the manner and style of explanation, in each case different, showing that the discrepancies are not due to a change in making the statements or keeping the books of the Treasury Department. As to the explanation of revenue collected above cited, it is enough to condemn itself. A clerical error repeated for several years is made to account for a difference of more than $20,000,000. In addition to this, the $37,640,787.95 referred to in the explanation is the large sum that, owing to clerical errors, sometimes appears in the statements and at times disappears, and yet no difference is noted in the total receipts.

But to this and all other explanations touching the revenue collected I will call to my aid the language of the committee in their report, which happily furnishes a full answer. On page 2 they say:

When money is covered into the Treasury it is under the safeguard of the Constitution and the law.

As stated before, moneys covered into the Treasury cannot be again taken out, except through an appropriation; and even moneys erroneously covered in, as in case of customs or internal revenue, can only be recovered through an appropriation.

I fully agree with the committee. Money once collected and covered into the Treasury cannot without the action of Congress be taken out; yet in the examples I have cited I have shown that the revenue, after being reported for years, has been decreased $50,000,000, without an appropriation or authority of any kind, and before I close I will show additional examples.

I make no further comment than to say that in this way generally the changes, differences, and discrepances are explained. Figures and facts not in the reports and clerical errors are called in to aid the Department in explaining its own statements.

Nobody knows, and no one can tell but the officers of the Treasury Department without a thorough examination by an expert with full time and a proper examination, whether these strange figures are correct, and therefore no answer can be made to the explanations so far as the use of them is concerned. All will agree that the statements themselves should show the truth and the facts. As it is they do not.

PUBLIC DEBT.

It will be remembered that under this head I cited the statement of the public debt, as given in the finance reports of 1870 and 1871, for the years between 1862 and 1870, inclusive, and showed that the aggregate difference between these reports was $248,960,352.94, and called attention to the large differences that existed between the reports as to each year. The Treasury Department and the committee make the following explanation, commencing on page 19 of the report and ending on page 20:

Changes in the public-debt statement.

In the finance report for 1871, the Register states the public debt for the following years at—

1862	$524,176,412 13
1863	1,119,772,138 63
1864	1,815,784,370 57
1865	2,680,647,869 74
1866	2,773,236,173 69
1867	2,678,126,103 87
1868	2,611,687,851 19
1869	2,588,452,213 94
1870	2,480,672,427 81
Total	19,272,555,561 57

In the report for 1870, for the same year the debt is stated as follows:

1862	$514,211,371 92
1863	1,098,793,181 37
1864	1,740,690,489 49
1865	2,682,593,026 53
1866	2,783,425,879 21
1867	2,692,199,215 12
1868	2,636,320,964 67
1869	2,489,002,480 58
1870	2,386,358,599 74
Total	19,023,595,208 63
Difference or increase, as shown by the honorable Senator from West Virginia, in the report of 1871 over 1870 of	248,960,352 94

But this difference or increase, as thus shown, is erroneous. It is a comparison of the sum of running balances, between which no intelligible comparison can be made. The proper way to make the comparison is to find the increase or decrease on each account for each year, and thus determine the aggregate increase on each account since 1861, the difference between which will be the true difference in the accounts.

The following will explain the difference:

Year.	Debt.	Increase.	Decrease.	Net increase.
Receipts and expenditures:
1861		$90,580,873 72
1862	$524,176,412 13	433,595,538 41
1863	1,119,772,138 63	595,595,726 50
1864	1,815,784,370 57	696,012,231 94
1865	2,680,647,869 74	864,863,499 17
1866	2,773,236,173 69	92,588,303 95
1867	2,678,126,103 87		$95,110,069 82
1868	2,611,687,851 19		66,438,252 68
1869	2,588,453,213 94		23,234,637 25
1870	2,480,672,427 81		107,780,786 13
		2,773,236,173 69	292,563,745 88	$2,480,672,427 81
Issues and redemptions:
1861		90,867,828 68
1862	514,211,371 92	423,343,543 24
1863	1,098,793,181 37	584,581,809 45
1864	1,740,690,489 49	641,897,308 12
1865	2,682,593,026 53	941,902,537 04
1866	2,783,425,879 21	100,832,852 68
1867	2,692,199,215 12		91,226,664 09
1868	2,636,320,964 67		55,878,250 45
1869	*2,597,722,983 37		38,597,981 30
1870	†2,480,246,027 83		117,476,955 54
		2,783,425,879 21	303,179,851 38	2,480,246,027 83
Difference				426,399 98

NOTES TO THE FOREGOING TABLE.

In the Register's report for 1869 the outstanding public debt was published (as heretofore explained) as		$2,489,002,480 58
Which is the amount of the debt, less cash and sinking fund in the Treasury, to which should be added the amount of cash and sinking fund	$156,167,813 58
Less accrued interest	47,447,310 79
		108,720,502 79
To give the principal of the debt July 1, 1869		$2,597,722,983 37
In the same report for 1870 the outstanding public debt was again published as	2,386,358,599 74
To which should be added the amount of cash and sinking fund	$144,494,984 61
Less accrued interest	50,607,556 52
		93,887,428 09
To give the principal of the debt July 1, 1870		2,480,246,027 83

It will be observed that this explanation reduces the difference to $426,399.98, and then explains the same away by various items and figures not found in the reports.

In order to show the difference between the reports for each year, I have prepared the following table, which I submit is the only fair, proper, and intelligible way of ascertaining the difference between the two reports as to the public debt, and the mode adopted by the Department and the Finance Committee is neither fair nor intelligible:

Year.	Public debt, as stated in the finance report for—		Increase.	Decrease.
	1871 and subsequent reports.	1870 and previous reports.
1862	$524,176,412 13	$514,211,371 92	$9,965,040 21
1863	1,119,772,138 63	1,098,793,181 37	20,978,957 26
1864	1,815,784,370 57	1,740,694,489 49	75,093,881 08
1865	2,680,647,869 74	2,682,593,026 53		$1,945,156 79
1866	2,773,236,173 69	2,783,425,879 21		10,189,705 52
1867	2,678,126,103 87	2,692,199,215 12		14,013,111 25
1868	2,611,687,851 19	2,636,320,964 67		24,633,113 48
1869	2,588,452,213 94	2,489,002,480 58	99,449,733 36
1870	2,480,672,427 81	2,386,358,599 74	94,313,828 07
Total	19,272,555,561 57	19,023,595,208 63	299,801,439 98	50,841,087 04
Total difference or increase			248,960,352 94

This table shows the difference in each year; for instance, taking the first year, 1861, the difference is nearly $10,000,000. It seems to me the Treasury Department and committee should have explained this difference and then proceeded with the difference in each of the remaining years; but instead of this, by the free use of figures, they make up a fictitious aggregate difference of $426,399.98, explain that away, and claim this explanation should account for an established and acknowledged difference of $248,960,352.94 for the years named between the two reports.

But the theory adopted by the Department and committee is entirely unauthorized and unknown to any system of accounting in the world.

Admitting it to be true, it leads to absurdities. Take the last cited year, 1870, the difference between the two reports as to the public debt is above $94,000,000. Now, this theory cannot be applied to explaining this difference, nor will it explain any single year.

But this is not all. This explanation attempts and claims to explain the difference that exists in the finance reports for 1870 and 1871 as to the public debt for the years included between 1861 and 1870; but in doing this it does not employ the figures found in the reports and used by myself. For instance, in the explanation under the head of "receipts and expenditures" the figures, with one exception, correspond to those used by myself, and are taken from the report of 1871, but under the head of "issues and redemptions" the figures from 1861 to 1868, inclusive, are taken from the finance report of 1870; but the figures for the years 1869 and 1870 are not those used by myself and taken from the report of 1870, but are manufactured for this explanation as the foot-note shows, and never did appear in any finance report made to Congress, as an examination of the last finance report of 1875 on pages 8 and 578 and all others will show.

Now, all will admit that in submitting to an explanation of a difference or discrepancy between two reports the figures found in those reports must be used, and no others can be, and for this reason this explanation, admitting the theory to be true, becomes a failure and a farce and cannot be sustained.

Another objection: On examination of the explanation it will be seen it begins with the year 1861 and states the debt for that year at different amounts; for instance:

In report of 1871 at	$90,580,873 72
In report of 1870 at	90,867,828 68
Difference	286,944 96

for which the explanation does not account. These amounts, though differing, are added in the tables of increase.

But there is another still equally fatal objection to this explanation, and condemns it as entirely unreliable.

Under the head of receipts and expenditures, page 20 of Finance Committee's report, it will be observed that, for the year 1869, the debt is stated at $2,588,453,213.94. It should have been stated at $2,588,452,213.94, the figures found in the finance report for 1871 and the table used by me. This must be the case, because all of the figures for the other years are taken from the finance report of 1871, and correspond exactly with this single exception. Now, this using of the figure "3" for the figure "2" makes a difference of $1,000, which must affect every other part of the explanation, yet, notwithstanding this false figure or error making a difference of $1,000, the explanation of the difference agrees to a cent, which is impossible if the balance of the explanation is based on facts.

Another significant fact suggests itself in connection with this explanation of the discrepancies in the public-debt statements made by the Treasury Department and adopted by the Finance Committee. It will be remembered, in the debate on the resolution, both the honorable Senator from Massachusetts and the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee made explanations of these discrepancies, and though slightly differing, yet neither suggested the theory and explanation used in this report.

The explanation by the Treasury Department and Finance Committee of the differences and discrepancies pointed out by myself, commencing with the year 1836, is similar in theory to the one just referred to, and to which the same objections exist. I will therefore not detain the Senate to answer them in detail.

These objections to the explanation of the Finance Committee and Treasury Department are fatal, and more than sufficient to reject it. It is false in theory and cannot be sustained.

TRANSFER OF PACIFIC RAILWAY DEBT.

I will close the answer to the explanations contained in the report by referring to the discrepancy growing out of the transfer to another table of the Union Pacific Railway debt.

To the fact stated by myself that in 1870 the reduction of the public debt was due mainly to the transfer to another table of the Union Pacific Railway debt or bonds, and was not actual, the Treasury Department and Finance Committee make the following answer:

In reply to the charge that, "in the year 1870, there was an apparent reduction of the public debt of over $100,000,000, (according to the finance report,) but this reduction was in a great measure only apparent and due to a stroke of the pen, a mere transfer of about $60,000,000 to another table, [that] the country gave credit to the administration for the large decrease of the public debt during this year, when, in fact, the larger part of it was due to the change in book-keeping and the Secretary's new tables," it is only necessary to state that the outstanding public debt on July 1, 1869, (see finance report of 1869, page 29,) was		$2,656,603,955 73
From which was excluded the item of Pacific Railroad bonds		58,638,320 00
Leaving the amount		2,597,965,635 73
The outstanding debt on the first of July, 1870, (see finance report of 1870, page 44,) was		2,480,304,797 74
Which shows a decrease for the year, exclusive of the item of Pacific Railroad bonds, of		117,660,837 99

A brief examination of which will show it is not satisfactory, and I was right.

The Pacific Railroad bonds are included in the report and table referred to. (See report 1869, page 27.)

In the first place, the Finance Committee states the public debt for 1869 to be $2,656,603,955.73, and cites the page in the report of 1869 to prove this. Now, this amount is not taken from the regular tables of the Secretary and Register showing the public debt for each year, found in all the finance reports, but is taken from a detailed statement of the public indebtedness for that year from all sources, and is not what is generally understood to be the "public debt."

For instance, on page 317 of the finance report for 1869 the public debt in the regular table is stated at $2,489,002,480.58.

But for the purpose of answering this explanation, I will take the public debt for 1869, as stated in the finance report of 1875, at page 9 the Secretary and at page 578 the Register states it to be $2,588,452,213.94, and I will add that at pages 11 and 13, in the report of 1871, the Secretary, and at page 369 the Register, states the debt for that year at precisely the same figures, and I therefore take it it must be correct. Now, from this amount subtract the public debt for the year 1870 as stated by the committee and in the report for that year, $2,480,304,797.74, and we have $108,147,416.20, and not $117,660,837.99, even including the Pacific Railway debt, which amounts to $58,638,320, and being excluded leaves $49,509,096.20 as the actual reduction of the public debt for 1860.

FAILURE TO EXPLAIN ALTERATIONS.

Now, after more than four months' time, the Senator from Massachusetts, the Treasury Department, and the Financo Committee have utterly failed to explain why the finance reports do not agree or how it is that the expenditures of the Government have been largely increased and the revenue decreased and from 1861 to 1870 inclusive the public debt has been increased $248,960,352.94. I dismiss any further answer to the explanations of these alarming differences firmly convinced, with the information now before the Senate, that there is and can be no satisfactory explanation or answer given why the expenditures and the public debt of the Government have been so largely increased.

There must be and is some cause for this fact which will come to light when a proper and fair examination of the affairs of the Treasury Department can be made.

As a Senator and a citizen anxious to uphold the public credit I had earnestly hoped that the discrepancies, changes, and differences pointed out by myself would be explained on the incoming of the report of the Finance Committee, which has been delayed nearly five months, and which time has been consumed in allowing the officials of the Treasury Department to defend their statements and make the explanations contained in the report of the committee, but I regret to say while the report admits the evils that exist yet it fails to answer them fully.

The Committee on Finance have only made a partial report under the resolution, owing I have no doubt to other pressing duties. They were required not only to investigate and ascertain if such differences and discrepancies existed, but to report the extent and nature thereof. They confined themselves, however, to attempting to explain the examples pointed out by myself, not even noticing all of them, although there are many others easily found.

These changes, differences, "restating," and "remodeling" of the official statements of the public debt, receipts, and expenditures, with all the doubt they cause and the evil they have produced, belong to the present administration; they have occurred, each and all of them, during the time it has had possession of the Government.

Before this time no changes were made and none were found bold enough to attempt to change facts and figures and the published statements of the Treasury Department. The system founded at the organization of the Government was sufficient to carry the Government through near three-fourths of a century of its existence, and was the admiration and pride of the Republic, but under the present Administration it is suddenly found insufficient, in part cast aside and this too without law or authority, and changes in the public debt and expenditures are made which startle the country, and this, too, without reference or re-examination of the warrants or accounts of the Register, who is by law the official book-keeper of the Government.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR MAKING CHANGES AND FORCING BALANCES.

And the Senator from Massachusetts, in his remarks made on the 19th ultimo, says that the changes made under his administration for the first time in the history of the Government stated the affairs of the Treasury Department accurately. He uses this language:

> I also assert that during the four years that I administered the Treasury Department, for the first time in the history of the Government the books of the Department represented the exact state of public affairs.

Here is not only an impeachment of the system adopted by those who organized the Treasury Department, but the accuracy and efficiency of his distinguished predecessors are also called in question, among whom may be numbered the following distinguished names which adorn our history: Hamilton, Gallatin, Crawford, Rush, Taney, Woodbury, Corwin, Guthrie, Chase, and Fessenden. These were great men. Some of them the founders of our present financial system, which others have carried out with such great success. They will live in our history and be long remembered for their ability, fidelity, integrity, wise and efficient administration of public affairs, while it may be that the only claim to remembrance that the Senator from Massachusetts will enjoy will be the unenviable fame of changing the system, figures, reports, and official statement made by these great men and tearing down what they so faithfully built. But the committee have not failed to mildly censure the Secretary in their report in the following language:

> Your committee are not prepared to recommend any change in the mode of keeping or making public these accounts. The system is the growth of the experience of the Department since its organization, and it would be a very delicate and dangerous task to propose any change in this respect.

All will admit if there had been errors in the accounts and reports of the Treasury Department, which I question, it was the duty of the Secretary to refer them to Congress for action. In the remarks made by the Senator on the day named he also said:

> But the reputation and the credit of the country are concerned in knowing whether at any time by any Secretary of the Treasury balances in the public accounts have been forced.

I agree with the Senator that the reputation and credit of the country are concerned in the matter of forcing balances in the public accounts, and it becomes a matter of moment to fix the responsibility, if such has been the case, where it properly belongs. In this connection I will state what is not generally known, but what is well known to the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] that in November, 1871, while he was Secretary and during his administration, a letter, together with a statement of the public debt, prepared in the Secretary's Office, commencing with the year 1835 and ending with the year 1870, was sent to the Register, in which he was arbitrarily directed to make his statement of the public debt (to be sent to Congress) correspond to the one sent him, compelling him thereby and by reason of the orders from the Secretary's Office to disregard the official data in his own office, the only true source from which he could make a statement of the public debt to Congress as required by law; and I now further state that the data and warrants in the Register's Office will not sustain the statement of the public debt he was compelled arbitrarily to make to Congress; and in order to make his statement of the public debt as made up from data in his office agree with the one sent him from the Secretary's Office, he was forced to make changes in the former statements of the public debt and increase it in the aggregate more than $240,000,000.

I leave it to the Senate whether or not this was not forcing balances; and as to who did it, that question is answered.

And because such official attacks on the public accounts and statements and others I have mentioned were made under the administration of the Senator from Massachusetts while Secretary of the Treasury, and I have ventured in my humble way to bring them to the attention of the Senate and ask an investigation, it seems I have provoked his displeasure, and in his wrath he uses language that adds nothing to his reputation for politeness nor makes his official conduct clearer, and says that I cannot understand the public accounts; in reply to which I will only remark nobody else can since, as Secretary Bristow says, he remodeled them.

The Senator in effect acknowledged he made the changes that produced the confusion and discrepancies in the public accounts that have given rise to this and other discussions. This may be the reason that influenced him to vote against a special committee of investigation and for one of which he is a member and his party friends in the majority. But I submit it would have been more manly for him had he made the confession earlier and not waited until an Ex-Secretary of the Treasury, the Finance Committee, and others had fastened on him the fact that he was the cause of the changes, contradictions, and discrepancies that exist in the finance reports.

In support of the charge that balances have been forced and that the books of the Department will not support the "remodeled statements and reports" made to Congress, I submit an instance.

A few days ago I addressed a letter to the Commissioner of Pensions asking him to furnish me a statement showing the amount paid for pensions from 1860 to 1870, inclusive, to which he replied as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 25, 1876.

SIR: In compliance with your request of the 24th instant, I have the honor to transmit the inclosed table of the amount paid for Army and Navy pensions from 1860 to 1870, inclusive.

Inclosed is also the annual report of this office for the year 1865; the copies for the year 1864 are exhausted.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

O. P. G. STARKE,
Chief Clerk.

Hon. H. G. DAVIS,
United States Senate.

Statement showing the total amount paid in each fiscal year for Army and Navy pensions from 1860 to 1870, inclusive.

1860	$1,154,321 73
1861	1,089,218 75
1862*	800,819 94
1863	1,044,364 47
1864	4,521,622 18
1865	8,542,885 27
1866	13,250,980 17
1867	18,681,711 79
1868	24,079,403 18
1869	28,445,089 09
1870	27,780,811 81
Total for eleven years	129,391,228 38

* Pensioners in Southern States dropped.

These figures show beyond the possibility of a doubt that the books of the Pension Office do not agree with the Secretary's new table made in 1870, and, what is worse still, that in making this new table the pension expenditures were increased from 1860 to 1870 $13,149,265.06 over and above what the books of the Pension Office show them to have been for those years.

In order that the difference between the books of the Pension Office and the finance report for 1870 may readily appear, I have prepared the following statement:

Statement showing the total amount paid in each fiscal year for Army and Navy pensions, as per finance report for 1870 and letter of the Commissioner of Pensions of July 25, 1876.

Years.	From Secretary's table, finance report of 1870, page 30.	From letter of Commissioner of Pensions.	Increase.	Decrease.
1860	$1,100,802 32	$1,154,321 73		$53,519 41
1861	1,034,599 73	1,089,218 75		54,619 02
1862	852,170 47	800,819 94	$51,350 53
1863	1,078,513 36	1,044,364 47	34,148 89
1864	4,985,473 90	4,521,622 18	463,851 72
1865	16,347,621 34	8,542,885 27	7,804,736 07
1866	15,605,549 88	13,250,980 17	2,354,569 71
1867	20,936,551 71	18,681,711 79	2,254,839 92
1868	23,782,386 78	24,079,403 18		297,016 40
1869	28,476,621 78	28,445,089 09	31,532 69
1870	28,340,202 17	27,780,811 81	559,390 36
Total	142,540,493 44	129,391,228 38	13,554,419 89	405,154 83
Secretary's table, finance report for 1875	$142,540,493 44
Increase			$13,554,419 89
Letter of Commissioner of Pensions, July 25, 1876	129,391,228 38
Decrease				405,154 83
Difference or increase in Secretary's table	13,149,265 06		13,149,265 06

ADDITIONAL CHANGES AND ALTERATIONS.

I regret that the Finance Committee could not go to the Treasury Department and make a thorough examination for themselves, but were compelled to depend upon the Treasury officials for explanation and information in the premises, who failed to point out other discrepancies and differences besides those named by me which exist in the reports, among which are the following:

Pension expenditures.

Year.	Report for 1869.	Report for 1870.	Increase.
1846	$1,809,739 62	$1,811,097 56	$1,357 94
1849	193,695 87	1,328,867 64	1,135,171 77
1859	161,190 66	1,222,222 71	1,061,032 05
Total increase			2,197,561 76

WAR EXPENDITURES.

Year.	Report for 1869.	Report for 1871.	Increase.
1844	$5,192,445 05	$5,218,183 66	$25,738 61
1846	10,362,374 36	10,413,370 18	50,995 82
1847	35,776,495 72	35,840,030 33	63,534 61
1860	14,472,202 72	16,472,202 72	2,000,000 00
Total increase			2,140,269 04

EXPENDITURES IN INDIAN BUREAU.

Year.	Report for 1869.	Report for 1871.	Increase.
1848	$1,103,251 78	$1,252,296 81	$149,045 03
1849	509,263 25	1,374,161 55	864,898 30
1854	1,413,995 08	1,550,339 55	136,344 47
1855	2,708,347 71	2,772,990 78	64,643 07
1856	2,596,465 92	2,644,263 97	47,798 05
1857	4,241,028 60	4,355,683 64	114,655 04
1862	2,223,402 27	2,327,948 37	104,546 10
1864	2,538,297 80	2,629,975 97	91,678 17
1865	4,966,964 90	5,059,360 71	92,395 81
1866	3,247,064 56	3,295,729 32	48,664 76
Total increase			1,614,668 80

Statement showing total receipts as stated for the same year.

Year.	Report for 1869.	Report for 1871.	Decrease.
1837	$27,947,142 19	$27,883,853 84	$63,288 35
1840	25,069,662 84	25,032,193 50	37,469 34
1847	55,401,804 58	55,338,168 52	63,636 06
1848	57,006,889 65	56,992,479 21	14,410 44
1850	47,669,766 75	47,649,388 88	20,377 87
1853	61,803,404 58	61,500,102 81	303,301 77
1859	81,773,965 64	81,758,557 30	15,408 34
Total decrease			517,892 17

Miscellaneous receipts.

Year.	Report for 1869.	Report for 1871.	Decrease.
1837	$5,625,479 15	$5,562,190 80	$63,288 35
1848	627,021 13	577,775 99	49,245 14

In the remarks I made pending the passage of the resolution to appoint a special committee I used the following language:

Now, it is a fact that in 1871 there was a wholesale change in figures, running back thirty or forty years in the table of the Register and altering the amounts, which in some instances had been fixed, closed, and reported to Congress for twenty or thirty years. This change and alteration of figures increased the public debt in the aggregate $247,766,674.71.

Notwithstanding this charge, important and alarming as it is, giving the exact figures, yet the Treasury Department and the Finance Committee in their report made no reference to it whatever.

In support of it I now submit the following statement of the public debt from 1835 to 1871, as appears in the finance reports for 1870 and previous reports and 1871 and subsequent reports, showing the difference in each year and the total difference between the two reports. (See pages 12 and 368 finance report for 1871, and page 276 finance report for 1870.)

Statement of the public debt from 1835 to 1871.

Year.	Report of 1870.	Report of 1871.	Increase in report of 1871 over 1870.	Decrease.
1835	$351,289 05	$37,513 05		$313,776 00
1836	291,089 05	336,957 83	$45,868 78
1837	1,878,223 55	3,308,124 07	1,429,900 52
1838	4,857,660 46	10,434,221 14	5,576,560 68
1839	11,983,737 53	3,573,343 82		8,410,393 71
1840	5,125,077 63	5,250,875 54	125,797 91
1841	6,737,398 00	13,594,480 73	6,857,082 73
1842	15,028,486 37	20,601,226 28	5,572,739 91
1843	27,203,450 69	32,742,922 00	5,539,471 31
1844	24,748,188 23	23,461,652 50		1,286,535 73
1845	17,093,794 80	15,925,303 01		1,168,491 79
1846	16,750,926 33	15,550,202 97		1,200,723 36
1847	38,956,623 38	38,826,534 77		130,088 61
1848	48,526,379 37	47,044,862 23		1,481,517 14
1849	64,704,693 71	63,061,858 69		1,642,835 02
1850	64,228,238 37	63,452,773 55		775,464 82
1851	62,560,395 26	68,304,796 02	5,744,400 76
1852	65,131,692 13	66,199,341 71	1,067,649 58
1853	67,340,628 78	59,803,117 70		7,537,511 08
1854	47,242,206 05	42,242,222 42		4,999,983 63
1855	39,969,731 05	35,586,956 56		4,382,774 49
1856	30,963,909 64	31,972,537 90	1,008,628 26
1857	29,060,386 90	28,699,851 85		360,535 05
1858	44,910,777 66	44,911,881 03	1,103 37
1859	58,754,699 33	58,496,837 88		257,861 45
1860	64,769,703 08	64,842,287 88	72,584 80
1861	90,867,828 68	90,580,873 72		286,954 96
1862	514,211,371 92	524,176,412 13	9,965,040 21
1863	1,098,793,181 37	1,119,772,138 63	20,978,957 26
1864	1,740,690,489 49	1,815,784,370 57	75,093,881 68
1865	2,682,593,026 53	2,680,647,869 74		1,945,156 79
1866	2,783,425,879 21	2,773,236,173 69		10,189,705 52
1867	2,692,199,215 12	2,678,126,103 87		14,073,111 25
1868	2,636,320,964 67	2,611,687,851 19		24,633,113 48
1869	2,489,002,480 58	2,588,452,213 94	99,449 733 36
1870	2,386,358,599 74	2,480,672,427 81	94,313,828 07
Total			332,843,226 59	85,076,553 88
Decrease			85,076,553 88
Increase			247,766,674 71

RECAPITULATION.

Report of 1871	$20,221,399,098 42
Report of 1870	19,973,622,423 71
Increase in report of 1871 over 1870	247,766,674 71

Which proves my allegation; and I now state that the changes and differences pointed out in the above table were made not only as the reports show but as evidence in the Treasury Department will establish. It is a fact that by reason of these changes and differences from 1835 to 1860 the public debt was decreased about $1,000,000, but from 1860 to 1870 it was increased more than $248,000,000. These changes were not only made under a republican administration, but, strange to say, all of the increase, amounting as before stated to more than $248,000,000, occurred beginning with 1860 and during republican rule. Now, why these changes were made, by what authority, and what became of this large sum of money are pertinent inquiries which neither the Senator from Massachusetts, the Treasury Department, nor the Finance Committee have as yet answered. I am aware that the Finance Committee have had but little time, owing to other official duties, to devote to this matter, and this may in part account for the imperfect report they have made. It was argued during the pendency of the resolution I introduced, by members of the Finance Committee, myself, and others, that the Finance Committee could not properly do the duty for want of time, and for this reason a special committee should have been appointed, and I now state had this been done not only the above inquiries would have been answered, but much other important information brought to light. The Senate ought not and the country will not be satisfied with this report, and I hope the day is not far distant when a special committee will be appointed to examine the accounts and reports of the Treasury Department

I have selected these additional examples of discrepancies and alterations from the many that exist in the official finance reports which the Treasury Department and Finance Committee have failed to notice, and they remain yet to be explained if explanation should be possible.

It will be observed that in this discussion I have not referred to the great differences that exist between the accounts of the Register and Treasurer, as also to the bond account, the account of issue and redemption, commissions and interest paid, nor to the currency account, for the reason that to do so intelligently would require a thorough examination of the books and accounts of the Treasury Department.

CONCLUSIONS.

In conclusion, it is admitted by the officials of the Treasury Department, the Ex-Secretary, and the Finance Committee, in the report under consideration:

First. That the numerous changes, alterations, differences, and discrepancies in the official finance reports pointed out by myself do exist, and were made by the present Administration.

Second. That the figures I have cited are all correctly drawn from the reports, and that by reason of these changes, differences, and discrepancies the receipts of the Government have been decreased, the expenditures largely increased, and since 1860 the public debt has been increased in the aggregate more than two hundred millions; and in the face of these admissions we are told the books of the Treasury Department have not been changed.

Third. In addition to these admissions, I now state, and it can be proven, that in 1871 written instructions were sent from the Secretary's office to the Register, the official book-keeper of the Government, directing him to make his annual statements to Congress correspond with a table prepared in the Secretary's office and sent with said instructions.

Fourth. I further state that the warrants and books in the Register's Office will not sustain and agree with the annual official reports made to Congress.

Fifth. The only changes and alterations ever made in the official reports to Congress, after being submitted, were made between the years 1869 and 1871.

Sixth. I fully believe that if the Register and Treasurer should be officially called upon they would say that between 1869 and 1871 there were changes and alterations of figures in the Treasury Department which decreased the revenue and largely increased the expenditures and the public debt, especially if compared with official annual reports to Congress.

Seventh. There must have been an object or motive that caused the Treasury officials to make the many changes and alterations I have at different times pointed out. I leave it to, and it is the duty of, those who made them to answer why they changed figures and reports that had stood and been accepted as correct in some instances thirty or forty years.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] ought not to go to the country without some reply, and they will only need a very brief reply, it seems to me. As a matter of course, I cannot go into the details of the carefully prepared and long studied speech which he has now read to us; but there are some few facts which lie on the outside of the case that I think sufficiently furnish all the answer that is necessary.

In the first place, my friend complains with some tone of sorrow that he has not had the friendly aid of the Treasury Department in his investigations into the condition of the Treasury. The truth is he went to the Secretary of the Treasury, then Mr. Bristow, and probably was referred to the subordinate officers who knew better about the matter than the Secretary; and perhaps the Senator took offense at that, as he speaks about the motive or animus. Whether or not this has in any way affected the tranquillity of my friend from West Virginia I leave to his own sense of justice. He has rung over, and over, and over again the changes upon the charge originally made by him that somebody or other, who he does not say, has changed and altered the books of the Treasury Department. As I said before, if anybody has done that, it is a crime and the guilty party ought to be sent to the penitentiary, because to change the public records is by law made forgery. Therefore it is a crime which is punishable by law. But in answer to all that, it is admitted on all hands, except by the Senator from West Virginia, that there has been no change or alteration whatever in any book or paper of the Treasury Department. Here in the first place I will read a statement of Secretary Bristow, who, it seems, is the origin and cause of all this feeling on the part of my friend the Senator from West Virginia. He says under date of May 4, 1876:

> In this connection it should be stated that in no instance has there been any erasure or alteration in the books and records of this Department, and the changes made in the published reports have been only to express with greater accuracy the precise condition of the public accounts, as shown by such books and records. * * *
>
> B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary.

In another part of this same letter he says:

> In reply, I have the honor to transmit herewith certain tabular statements and memoranda explaining the discrepancies referred to—

By the Senator from West Virginia—

> but before inviting your attention thereto permit me to state that in no case have the changes referred to in any way affected the cash of the Treasury.

We then start out with this great fact, which is an answer to all this stuff about the increase of the public debt or about any injury being done to anybody by the mode of stating the Treasury accounts, by saying that there is no change whatever of any book. Every book, from the foundation of the Government down to 1870 and from that time on, stands unchanged and unaltered, in date, letter, or figure, and that is conceded by everybody but the Senator from West Virginia. Perhaps he will now concede it. He says he has not had time to examine these books and papers. It would be impossible in his short life-time to do it. Here I have the official statement. There was no motive for a change.

Now let us see what has been done. In 1870 Mr. BOUTWELL, now a Senator, then Secretary of the Treasury, found that the statement of the public debt which was required to be published monthly for public information was meager, imperfect, and inaccurate; not that the figures contained in it were in themselves inaccurate, but it withheld information, it did not contain all the elements which were needed to enable a plain, sensible man to find out what was the precise condition of the public debt. To show that this is so, I will put upon the record the statement as published prior to this change, as compared with one subsequent. Here is a statement of the public debt on the 1st of January, 1869, certified to by Hugh McCulloch, then Secretary of the Treasury:

Statement of the public debt of the United States on the 1st of January, 1869.

Debt bearing coin interest.

5 per cent. bonds	$221,589,300 00
6 per cent. bonds, 1881	283,677,400 00
6 per cent. 5.20 bonds	1,602,568,650 00
		$2,107,835,350 00

Debt bearing currency interest.

Certificates at 3 per cent	55,865,000 00
Navy pension fund, at 3 per cent	14,000,000 00
		69,865,000 00

Matured debt not presented for payment.

Three-year 7.30 notes, due August 15, 1867, and June and July, 1868	2,174,900 00
Compound interest notes, matured June 10, July 15, August 15, October 15, December 15, 1867, May 15, August 1, September 1 and 15, and October 1 and 16, 1868	3,878,290 00
Bonds, Texas indemnity	256,000 00
Treasury notes, acts July 17, 1861, and prior thereto	148,561 64
Bonds, April 15, 1842, January 28, 1847, and March 31, 1848	349,950 00
Treasury notes, March 3, 1863	445,492 00
Temporary loan	197,310 00
Certificates of indebtedness	13,000 00
		7,463,503 64

Debt bearing no interest.

United States notes	356,021,073 00
Fractional currency	34,215,715 64
Gold certificates of deposit	27,036,020 00
		417,272,808 64
		2,602,436,662 28
Six per cent. (lawful money) bonds, issued to Pacific railroad companies		50,097,000 00
Total debt		2,652,533,662 28
Amount in Treasury, coin	98,763,368 91
Amount in Treasury, currency	13,063,092 12
		111,826,461 03
Amount of debt less cash in Treasury		2,540,707,201 25

The foregoing is a correct statement of the public debt as appears from the books and Treasurer's returns in the Department on 1st of July, 1869.

HUGH McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Here is another dated the 1st of February, 1869, certified to by Hugh McCulloch, a few meager, plain figures containing first "debt bearing coin interest," the items following, "debt-bearing interest in lawful money," the items following, "the matured debt not presented for payment," "the debt bearing no interest," and so on. That was the whole information the people of the United States then had as to the condition of the public debt. When Mr. BOUTWELL became Secretary of the Treasury he naturally supposed that the people of the United States would desire more detailed information than was contained in this simple statement. He became Secretary of the Treasury in March, 1869, and soon made a change. On the 1st of July, 1869, I find another statement of the public debt of the United States, which goes into elaborate detail, gives the date of every loan, the amount outstanding on every loan, the amount bearing interest in lawful money, the amount bearing interest in gold, then a recapitulation, together with a statement of the Pacific Railroad debt in ample detail. It also contained new elements which did not enter into the former computation. It contained a computation of interest on each accruing loan up to the date of the statement. Then the interest on each loan was carefully carried forward and added to the principal, so as to show on the 1st of July, 1869, the amount due on each loan. Then besides this table also showed the amount of money on hand, all the exhibits, the amount of greenbacks, the amount of gold, the amount of silver, all the elements which enter into the calculation, so as to show that while the Government was in debt so many millions of dollars it also had on hand available, for the purpose of paying that debt if the thing would stop right off there, a certain amount of a certain kind of money. Here is the statement:

Statement of the public debt of the United States on the 1st day of July, 1869.

DEBT BEARING COIN INTEREST.

Authorizing acts.	Character of issue.	Rate of interest.	Amount outstanding.	When redeemable or payable.	Accrued interest.	When payable.
June 14, 1858	Bonds	5 per cent.	$20,000,000 00	Payable after 15 years from January 1, 1859	$500,000 00	January and July.
June 22, 1860	Bonds	5 per cent.	7,022,000 00	Payable after 10 years from January 1, 1861	175,550 00	January and July.
February 8, 1861	Bonds, 1881	6 per cent.	18,415,000 00	Payable after December 31, 1880	552,450 00	January and July.
March 2, 1861	Bonds, (Oregon war,) 1881	6 per cent.	945,000 00	Redeemable 20 years from July 1, 1861	28,350 00	January and July.
July 17 and August 5, 1861.	Bonds, 1881	6 per cent.	189,317,500 00	Payable at pleasure of Government after 20 years from June 30, 1861.	5,679,525 00	January and July.
February 25, 1862	Bonds, (5-20's)	6 per cent.	514,771,600 00	Redeemable after 5 and payable 20 years from May 1, 1862.	5,147,716 00	May and November.
March 3, 1863	Bonds, 1881	6 per cent.	75,000,000 00	Payable after June 30, 1881	2,250,000 00	January and July.
March 3, 1864	Bonds, (10-40's)	5 per cent.	194,567,300 00	Redeemable after 10 and payable 40 years from March 1, 1864.	3,242,788 33	March and September.
March 3, 1864	Bonds, (5-20's)	6 per cent.	3,882,500 00	Redeemable after 5 and payable 20 years from November 1, 1864.	38,825 00	May and November.
June 30, 1864	Bonds, (5-20's)	6 per cent.	125,561,300 00	Redeemable after 5 and payable 20 years from November 1, 1864.	1,255,613 00	May and November.
March 3, 1865	Bonds, (5-20's)	6 per cent.	203,327,250 00	Redeemable after 5 and payable 20 years from November 1, 1865.	2,033,272 50	May and November.
March 3, 1865	Bonds, (5-20's)	6 per cent.	332,998,950 00	Redeemable after 5 and payable 20 years from July 1, 1865.	9,989,968 50	January and July.
March 3, 1865	Bonds, (5-20's)	6 per cent.	379,582,850 00	Redeemable after 5 and payable 20 years from July 1, 1867.	11,387,485 50	January and July.
March 3, 1865	Bonds, (5-20's)	6 per cent.	42,539,350 00	Redeemable after 5 and payable 20 years from July 1, 1868.	1,276,180 50	January and July.
Aggregate of debt bearing coin interest			2,107,930,600 00		43,557,724 33
				Coupons payable May 1, 1869, not presented for payment	2,938,388 00
					46,496,112 33
				Less amount paid in advance	1,122,182 00
					45,373,930 33

DEBT ON WHICH INTEREST HAS CEASED SINCE MATURITY.

April 15, 1842	Bonds	6 per cent.	$6,000 00	Matured December 31, 1862	$360 00
January 28, 1847	Bonds	6 per cent.	26,150 00	Matured December 31, 1867	1,563 00
March 31, 1848	Bonds	6 per cent.	69,850 00	Matured July 1, 1868, (9 months' interest	3,143 25
September 9, 1850	Bonds, (Texas indemnity)	5 per cent.	242,000 00	Matured December 31, 1864	12,100 00
Prior to 1857	Treasury notes	1 mill to 6 per ct.	104,511 64	Matured at various dates	3,135 35
December 23, 1857	Treasury notes	5 to 5½ per cent.	2,400 00	Matured March 1, 1859	120 00
March 2, 1861	Treasury notes	6 per cent.	3,300 00	Matured April and May, 1863	198 00
July 17, 1867	Treasury notes, (3 years)	7 3-10 per cent.	34,900 00	Matured August 19 and October 1, 1864	2,547 70
March 3, 1863	Treasury notes, (1 and 2 years)	5 per cent.	338,552 00	Matured from January 7 to April 1, 1866	16,927 60
March 3, 1863	Certificates of indebtedness	6 per cent.	12,000 00	Matured at various dates in 1866	720 00
March 3, 1863, and June 30, 1864	Compound-interest notes	6 per cent.	2,871,410 00	Matured June 10, 1867, and October 16, 1868	557,053 08
June 30, 1864	Temporary loan	4, 5, and 6 per ct.	186,310 00	Matured October 15, 1866	7,651 98
June 30, 1864, and March 3, 1865	Treasury notes, (3 years)	7 3-10 per cent.	1,166,500 00	Matured August 15, 1867, and July 15, 1868	85,154 50
Aggregate of debt on which interest has ceased since maturity			5,063,883 64		690,680 46

Statement of the public debt of the United States on the 1st day of July, 1869—Continued.

DEBT BEARING NO INTEREST.

Authorizing acts.	Character of issue.	Rate of interest.	Amount outstanding.	When redeemable or payable.	Accrued interest.	When payable.
July 17, 1861..... February 12, 1862.	Demand notes.....	No interest.....	$121,637 50	.....	.....	.....
February 25, 1862 July 11, 1862..... March 3, 1863.....	U. S. legal-tender notes.....	No interest.....	355,935,194 50	.....	.....	.....
July 17, 1862.....	Postal currency...	No interest...
March 3, 1863.... June 30, 1864.....	Fractional currency.....	No interest...	32,062,027 73	.....	.....	.....
March 3, 1863.....	Certificates for gold deposited..	No interest.....	30,489,640 00	.....	.....	.....
Aggregate of debt bearing no interest.....			418,608,499 73	.....	.....	.....

DEBT BEARING INTEREST IN LAWFUL MONEY.

March 2, 1867, and July 2, 1868.....	Certificates.....	3 per cent.....	$52,120,000 00	On demand, (interest estimated for 7 months)....	$1,172,700 00	Annually or on redemption of certificate.
July 23, 1868.....	Navy Pension fund	3 per cent.....	14,000,000 00	Interest only applicable to payment of pensions..	210,000 00	January and July.
Aggregate of debt bearing interest in lawful money.			66,120,000 00	.....	1,382,700 00	.....

RECAPITULATION.

	Amount outstanding.	Total amount outstanding.	Interest.	Total.
Debt bearing interest in coin, namely:
Bonds at 5 per cent., issued before March 3, 1864	$27,022,000 00
Bonds at 5 per cent., (ten-forties,) issued under act of March 3, 1864	194,567,300 00
Bonds of 1881, at 6 per cent	283,677,500 00
Five-twenty bonds at 6 per cent	1,602,663,800 00
		$2,107,930,600 00	45,373,930 33
Debt bearing interest in lawful money, namely:
Certificates, 3 per cent. interest	52,120,000 00
Navy pension fund, 3 per cent. interest	14,000,000 00
		66,120,000 00	1,382,700 00
Debt bearing no interest, namely:
Demand and legal-tender notes	356,056,832 00
Postal and fractional currency	32,062,027 73
Certificates of gold deposited	30,489,640 00
		418,608,499 73
Debt on which interest has ceased since maturity		5,063,883 64	690,680 46
Total debt—Principal outstanding		2,597,722,983 37
Interest accrued, $48,569,493.79, less amount of interest paid in advance, $1,122,182			47,447,310 79
Total debt—Principal and interest				$2,645,170,294 16

Amount in Treasury—Coin belonging to Government	$79,713,072 62
Coin, for which certificates of deposit are outstanding	30,489,640 00
Currency	37,097,818 89
Sinking fund, in bonds bearing coin interest and accrued interest thereon	8,867,282 07
		156,167,813 58
Amount of public debt, less cash and sinking fund in Treasury		2,489,002,480 58
Amount of public debt, less cash and sinking fund in Treasury on the 1st ultimo		2,505,412,613 12
Decrease of public debt during the past month		16,410,132 54
Decrease since March 1, 1869		36,460,779,43

Bonds issued to the Union Pacific Railroad Company and branches, interest payable in lawful money.

[Interest at the rate of 6 per cent.; bonds payable in thirty years from date.]

Authorizing acts.	Character of issue.	Amount outstanding.	Interest payable.	Interest accrued and not yet paid.	Interest paid by United States.	Interest repaid by transportation of mails, &c.	Balance of interest paid by United States.
July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864.....	Bonds, (Union Pacific Co).	$25,998,000 00	Jan. 1 and July 1....	$768,104 37	$1,313,765 52	$906,446 11	$407,319 41
July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864.....	Bonds, (Union Pacific, Eastern Division.)	6,303,000 00	Jan. 1 and July 1....	189,090 00	645,723 09	546,569 10	99,153 99
July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864.....	Bonds, (Sioux City and Pacific.)	1,628,320 00	Jan. 1 and July 1....	43,544 93	52,963 76	16 27	52,947 49
July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864.....	Bonds, (Central Pacific) ..	2,362,000 00 20,427,000 00	Jan. 16 and July 16. Jan. 1 and July 1....	64,065 65 543,064 49	517,956 83 584,829 76	72,666 99	1,030,119 60
July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864.....	Bonds, (Central Branch Union Pacific, assignees of Atchison and Pike's Peak.)	1,600,000 00	Jan. 1 and July 1....	48,000 00	157,808 26	3,400 79	154,317 47
July 1, 1862, and July 2, 1864.....	Bonds, (Western Pacific).	320,000 00	Jan. 1 and July 1....	9,600 00	37,006 03	.....	37,006 03
Total issued		58,638,320 00	.....	1,665,469 44	3,310,053 25	1,529,189 26	1,780,863 99

The foregoing is a correct statement of the public debt, as appears from the books and Treasurer's returns in the Department, on the 1st of July, 1869.

GEORGE S. BOUTWELL, Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. President, this is the change about which we have heard so much, the only change; not a figure altered, not a word omitted, not an erasure or alteration, but a new mode of stating the public accounts. The only change was a change in the mode of stating public accounts. I refrain from using a strong word, but it does seem to me that it is wrong in every sense of the word to convey the impression that this duty thus performed by an officer, which plainly gives to the people of the United States fuller information of their public affairs, is something to be called in question. Actually my friend even indulged in the remark that he could not tell what motives actuated a man in doing this thing. Is it right to speak of a public servant in that way unless the act itself was wrong? There is no pretense of any other change. Is it right to impute motives or raise a doubt about the motives? I do not know how I would feel if some one should say that I had done this and that, an act proper and just in itself, and that my motives were mysteriously concealed; that there was some "nigger in the wood-pile," some "cat in the bag," some motives to actuate me to do this thing, when the thing itself was right and defensible. That is not an act of justice. I thought my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] the other day spoke harshly and rather quickly and sharply to the Senator from West Virginia. I sympathized a little with the Senator from West Virginia then, but I tell him now that when he arraigns a proper act and imputes a possibly bad motive he does a wrong. I feel quite impartial between the two gentlemen. This alteration, about which so much has been said, is nothing but a new mode of stating the accounts, and that is shown in the fullest and completest manner by these documents.

Let us go further. It is said that there are discrepancies in these accounts. So there are. There have been; always will be. From the nature of things that is inevitable; but why? There are two series of accounts we are told here by these public documents, quite different in their scope and purpose. The one is kept by the Register and the other by the Treasurer. These accounts are intended to be a check upon each other. They are based upon different elements, but elements which when analyzed enable an acute person accustomed to accounts to detect any wrong or fraud in keeping these accounts. Let me read a single paragraph, being a statement of Mr. Bristow in a recent letter, made a part of this report.

Mr. EATON. I should like to ask the Senator a question, only I do not wish to interrupt him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not object at all, because I am speaking offhand.

Mr. EATON. The honorable Senator from Ohio is speaking of a single statement of account made in one way by A and in another way by B. That is all very well; but will the Senator from Ohio inform the Senate why this statement of change went back so many years?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is precisely what I am coming to.

Mr. EATON. That is precisely what I want to hear. I cannot find it explained in the report.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will now read first to show what motive induced the change, and I will show the necessary difference between these two different accounts. I quote from this document because it is much better and more clearly stated than I could state it in words. I will read, especially to my friend from Connecticut, this statement of the origin and beginning and ending of this mode of changing the accounts, and why it went back:

Prior to 1871 the outstanding public debt was stated from the books of "issues and redemptions." In 1871 this account was restated, from 1836, from the "receipts and expenditures." From the nature of these two accounts the amount outstanding will not agree at any period, although when brought within the same dates and to include the same items there will be no difference. To illustrate: A subscription is made to a loan in June, but the bonds are not issued until July. On the 30th of June the outstanding of this loan will be greater by this amount on the "receipts and expenditures" account than on the "issues and redemptions" account.

Or to make this plainer, I will take the case put by the Senator from West Virginia in his prepared speech of the pension account, which I thought anybody could answer as he went along. When money is drawn in favor of a pension agent by draft, it is charged to the pension fund in the Treasurer's Office. As a matter of course it goes into the hands of the pension agent and is charged to pensions; but that money may not be paid out for six months and the accounts may not be rendered and passed in the Treasury Department for a year for that identical money. While the books of the Register might not show this money until after the accounts were rendered by the accounting officer, yet the books of the Treasury would show the money paid out by him.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator will recollect that I took five years; and that the books had been closed five years ago.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is, between the 1st of July of one year and the 1st of July of another there would necessarily be a difference in the accounts of these two officers. Between any term of years that you can take whatever, there would be necessarily a difference. Is not that easily explained? It is true if you go to work and compare the two and see how much money in the Treasurer's book is really in the hand of the pension agent not paid out, you can, by a careful analysis, detect whether there is anything wrong in the account. That is the only way you can do it; but necessarily these two accounts always differ. Let me go a little further:

During the year 1870 the public-debt accounts from 1836 were examined with a view of bringing these two accounts together.

The result of this examination was the adoption of the present system of stating the public debt, by which these two accounts are made to harmonize, the one being a check upon and proving the correctness of the other. It was necessary to select some period when these two accounts came together, and the year 1836, when we had comparatively no debt, was the period selected. When this examination was completed, the Register was directed to state his accounts accordingly.

That is all there is about it.

In regard to the outstanding public debt for the years 1869 and 1870 being published, including accrued interest, less cash in the Treasury, the Register submits the following statement:

Now here is what the Register states, which has been quoted by the Senator:

The year 1869 was the first of Secretary BOUTWELL's administration, who remodeled the debt statement and added the item of accrued interest to, and deducted the cash in the Treasury from, the outstanding principal of the debt. The clerk having charge of the division of receipts and expenditures in the Register's Office, whose duty it was to prepare the tables for the finance report, followed the plan of the Secretary's Office in making up the monthly debt statement, and reported the outstanding debt for those years including accrued interest and deducting cash in the Treasury. I was led to believe at the time that it was so stated to conform to suggestions made by the chief clerk in the Secretary's Office.

The statement of this account (extending over a period of thirty-five years and involving receipts into the Treasury of over $6,600,000,000 and an expenditure of over $4,200,000,000) from two independent sets of accounts, proving the correctness of the one by the other, is in itself the highest proof of the accuracy of the public accounts, however they may appear in some instances, at first view, to contradict each other.

Let me say that besides the two statements which it is necessary for the Secretary to make, he is by law required to make the statement which I hold in my hand, called a statement of receipts and expenditures. This statement was made from the foundation of the Government, commencing in 1791, and shows in two tables the sources of the receipts that come into the Treasury and all the elements of payment, what department of the Government it is charged to, &c. I suppose every Senator is familiar with it. It is a statement that has been continued year after year. It was made up until 1869. After that time Mr. BOUTWELL, according to this document, in publishing the future statement of the state of the debt, not to correct the back statements, not to change the volume that had been printed or was in manuscript, but in stating the public debt as it existed, undertook to state it upon the plan that he thought was the best, and which everybody knows is the best; that is, a statement showing the interest added and the money on hand deducted. That, as a matter of course, would vary every year from the previous statement. What harm was there in that? On the other hand, it made these statements harmonize. It was a matter of public notoriety, known to every officer in the Treasury Department. Therefore in making up this statement, which he is required by law to make every year, he stated the debt according to his mode of computation in 1836, and from that down, taking the year 1836 because we then commenced without any debt, in the books that were printed after 1871, so and so. There has been the bugaboo; there has been the trouble with my friend from West Virginia. He does not distinguish between a mere mode of stating a debt or an account, or the result of certain figures, and a change of the account itself.

Mr. President, I do not know that I ought to go any further in this matter, because the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] is anxious to go on with his bill. As the report of the Committee on Finance is called up, and as it is a matter of public information, I ask that the statement made by the Finance Committee, without any feeling whatever, be allowed to stand side by side with the statement of the Senator from West Virginia. I assure Senators that it is not so much the report of the Finance Committee as the statements accompanying it which prove conclusively the view that we took of this matter. I will ask, without being put to the trouble of reading it, that the report may be embodied in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the Senator mean to embody the whole report?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly. It is not as long as the Senator's speech, and I would have a right to read it and make it part of my remarks in that way.

Mr. DAVIS. I think a practice of that kind has been objected to here, time after time.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator ought not to object, because really I have a right to read the report.

Mr. DAVIS. I had to read every thing I wanted to say. However I care nothing about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the report as it now stands ought to be printed for public information. It is not available and accessible to persons who may want to examine it. Let the statement of the Senator from West Virginia go out with the statement of General Bristow. There seems to be a little kind of personal feeling between these two distinguished gentlemen, and I am inclined to think the best way is to let the two statements go together. The statements of the report are all based upon official letters from the Treasury Department.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator is entirely mistaken about there being any feeling between General Bristow and myself, because our relations are fully as friendly as those between the Senator from Ohio and myself.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought I understood the Senator to say that the friendly aid of the Department had been withheld from him.

Mr. DAVIS. I said I had not had the friendly aid of the Department as the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Massachusetts have had it.

Mr. SHERMAN. That may be so.

Mr. DAVIS. I made no complaint of the Department. I wish to add one word more——

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to know first, before the Senator goes on, whether there is any objection to having this report embodied in my remarks?

Mr. SAULSBURY. It was objected to when my friend from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] wanted to embody some statements in his remarks a few days ago.

Mr. SHERMAN. It will only put us to the trouble of having it read. The Senator's speech was longer than the report.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The rule should apply to all alike. I think it is a very vicious practice. Personally I do not object, if it is the understanding that it shall apply on both sides of this Chamber. If it is to be understood that any one on this side who wishes to incorporate in his speech without reading or having read any statements, &c., shall be allowed to do so, I will not object.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only trouble is this: I do not know that I shall make this a precedent for the future, but the Senator from West Virginia has gone over the whole ground in a carefully prepared speech. This report, giving the official statement, ought to go with that speech, as a matter of justice; but if it is necessary I will ask the Secretary to read it. That would only consume time. I have a right to read the report; indeed I have a right to call upon the Chair to order the reading of the report, and then it goes right into the RECORD.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask the Senator if he considers it a proper practice to do that thing?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it is in this case. I do not think we ought to weary the Senate with its reading.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That might be exactly the case with my friend from West Virginia or myself or some other gentleman on this side of the House, when we desire to incorporate in a speech a long report which has already been printed by the Senate. I am sure the Senator from Ohio will not think that it is a very correct practice to indulge in. I say again I do not object, provided it shall be understood that on all sides of this House, by every Senator on the floor, such practice shall obtain; but, if it is to be made exceptional, I must object. If, however, it is to be a general rule, I shall not object.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is mistaken about that. I have a right to have this report read, because it is now pending before us. It is the report under consideration. But I do not want to weary the Senate with having it read; I do not want to weary the Secretary. It is not like an ordinary paper which you read, coming from outside, but it is an official report from one of the standing committees, and that report is now the subject of debate. I can have it read just as I can have a bill read, and can call for the reading of it, but I do not wish to do that. I will however call for the reading of it if there is objection to my request.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think the practice wrong. For instance, I find on the table this morning the message of the President, with accompanying documents, with reference to the Hamburgh affair. Any Senator under such a rule could incorporate that whole document in his speech.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not. I think such a rule would only refer to the message itself, not to the documents.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not opposed to the facts contained in that report going into the RECORD; but what I object to is laying a precedent here that may come up and trouble us hereafter.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. STEVENSON in the chair.) The Senator from Ohio nearest the Chair [Mr. SHERMAN] asks that this report may be incorporated in his remarks. Is there any objection?

Mr. THURMAN. I have risen to say a word on that. As I understand the rule of the Senate, no paper can be read, if its reading be objected to, without the vote of the Senate. That rule has been evaded ever since I have held a seat in the Senate by any Senator who was making a speech saying, "I will read this paper," or document, or whatever it is, "as a part of my speech;" and although I always thought that was an evasion of the rule, yet in this body, where above all others what is proper and what is right is submitted to the judgment and honor of each Senator, that practice has been allowed to prevail. I for one, who have always advocated having the fewest possible rules and conducting our business under the responsibilities that gentlemen owe to gentlemen and Senators owe to Senators, shall not object to this practice although I do think it is an evasion of the rule; and I therefore must say in this case that it is a matter in my judgment within the discretion and sound judgment of my colleague whether he will have that document read as a part of his speech or not. I think myself that the whole responsibility rests with him. If he sees fit to have it read as a part of his speech I cannot, in view of the practice that has prevailed in the Senate, say no; and if his judgment is that it is necessary, I am not here to criticise that judgment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think my colleague has stated fairly and rightly that I have the right to call for the reading of this paper, and I have a right to read it; but I do not usually ask any favors of that kind in the Senate. I would not usually have a document of this kind spread on the RECORD; but I think that the circumstances of this particular case fully justify it, and in order to show that I have not asked this myself I will mention the fact that I have consulted several Senators as to whether it ought not to be done, and the universal answer has been that, as the document was only printed as a regular formal document, only seventeen hundred copies in all, so that probably it is not generally accessible, and perhaps is not accessible now if you would send for any considerable number, it ought to go into the RECORD as an antidote to what has been said by the Senator from West Virginia. It is not as long as the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator is mistaken as to that; it is twice as long.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps it is; but at all events it is the subject-matter under consideration. The Senator has made more severe charges than he thinks, and the report ought to go with them.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say just one word on this matter, for I think there is a misapprehension in the Senate in relation to it. I think the Senator from Ohio who sits farthest from me [Mr. THURMAN] has not drawn a distinction which I am quite sure he will draw on more careful examination. A paper within the possession of the Senate can be read only on the vote of the Senate; it belongs to the Senate and it can be read in no other way. Any paper which I choose to incorporate in a speech of my own I may read, and it is not in the power of the Senate to prevent my reading it, or I may ask the courtesy of our Secretary to read it for me. That is not a paper which comes within the rule which requires a vote of the Senate to say whether a paper shall or shall not be read.

Mr. THURMAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. According to his own statement, is not this report which is on the files of the Senate one of the things which it would require the consent of the Senate to have read?

Mr. HAMLIN. But it is not now before the Senate; it is no more a paper now before the Senate than a speech of the Senator himself last year or a report that he made last year which is incorporated either in the official RECORD of this body or in the body of the report. That is the distinction Senators do not seem to make.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Senator from Maine is mistaken. The Senator from West Virginia called up this report for action and made a speech upon it. It is therefore before us and any Senator can call for its reading.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now I ask for the regular order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the order be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate resumes the consideration of the post-route bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it understood that this report is to be printed in the RECORD?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state the question to the Senate. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] asks to incorporate in his remarks without reading the report of the Committee on Finance which has already been alluded to. Does the Chair hear any objection to this request?

Mr. EATON. I object for the present until I can get the ear of the Chair and of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is objected to.

Mr. EATON. Do I understand that the Senator from Ohio desires to publish as part of his speech a report of the Finance Committee of this body or everything that has been published in that pamphlet to which he has alluded? I have looked at it and I cannot find precisely where the name of the finance chairman came in.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is at the head of it. I believe that is the way always in the Senate, we put our name at the head of a report.

Mr. EATON. Then nobody but the chairman publishes this.

Mr. SHERMAN. The chairman by direction of the committee made the report.

Mr. EATON. The committee are not responsible for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. They are. The committee considered the report.

Mr. EATON. I do not object; but you might just as well publish the last report of the Secretary of the Treasury. It has just as much to do with this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair hear any objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN?]

Mr. THURMAN. I shall not object to it, but I wish to say now that I do not want this to be drawn into a precedent in the Senate of anybody having a speech published that never was made. This is not a speech of my colleague except as he sees fit to make it a part of his speech, it being a report already on the files of the Senate and not original matter with him. I hope never to see the day when the practice, which prevails elsewhere, shall be adopted in this body of publishing speeches that were never delivered.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If there is no objection to it, I desire to make a remark which I can make perhaps in two sentences.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that the report of the Committee on Finance be inserted in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Finance, pursuant to instructions of the Senate by its resolution of the 24th of January last, "that the Committee on Finance be instructed to investigate the books and accounts of the Treasury Department, particularly with reference to discrepancies and alterations in amounts and figures that have been made in them, especially in the annual statements of the expenditures of the Government, revenue collected, and the public debt contained in said reports; and, if any such discrepancies and alterations be found to exist, to report the same and the extent and nature thereof, the years wherein they occur, by what authority made, if any, the reasons that induced them, and to report generally such other and further information bearing upon the subject as to them may seem best, and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers," have given the subject as careful attention as their official duties permitted.

The substance of the information received by them is embodied in the following letters and statements hereto annexed and made a part of this report. The references in these statements to the various documents referred to, and especially to the annual reports of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances, made it necessary to examine all these statements, but they are too voluminous to embody in this report.

Your committee think it would best answer the purpose of the inquiry to state in general terms the result of their investigation.

The primary object in the organization of the Treasury Department is to secure the safe custody and legal disbursement of all the public money. A secondary object, and yet a very important one, is to secure an accurate accountability and full public statement of all receipts and expenditures by the Government. These are separate and distinct questions, the first referring to the actual custody and disbursements, the second to the proper accounts of such receipts and expenditures. Both objects are intended to be secured by the Constitution in the seventh clause of section 9, article 1, that "no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time."

By the several acts organizing the Treasury Department, it was intended to secure the safe-keeping and custody of the public money and a full statement and account of all receipts and expenditures. All money was to be covered into the Treasury; and all claims and demands whatever by the United States, or against them, and all accounts whatever in which the United States are concerned, either as debtor or creditor, were to be settled and adjusted in the Treasury Department.

When money is covered into the Treasury it is under the safeguard of the Constitution and the law. It cannot be disbursed without an appropriation by Congress; and when the appropriation is made it can only be paid out when an organized corps of accounting officers shall concur, first, that the appropriation has been made; second, that the expenditure is within the meaning and intent of the law; third, that the amount is justly due, as shown by the voucher. Then it can be paid out by the Treasurer, and then alone can he be credited for the payment. When the payment is made the transaction is registered not only by the Treasurer himself, but by the officers specially designated to register and keep an account "of all receipts and payments by the Treasurer of the United States."

So far as the safe-keeping and custody of public money covered into the Treasury is concerned, it would be difficult to point out a better mode than is provided for by existing law. Every safeguard that has been suggested has been furnished. No law can prevent the neglect or violation of their public duties by Comptrollers, Auditors, or Registers; but the guards and checks upon such misconduct are as perfect as human ingenuity could devise.

When money is covered into the Treasury it can only be paid out on a warrant of the Secretary of the Treasury, countersigned by the Comptroller and registered by the Register; which warrant is based either, first, on a proper requisition in favor of a disbursing officer, or, second, in payment of a claim duly audited by the accounting officers. Each of these officers performs duties independent of the other, and the signature of each is requisite to authorize and attest payments of public money. This mode, in force since the organization of the Government, is very satisfactory.

Money is covered into the Treasury by a warrant (based upon a certificate of deposit) countersigned by the Comptroller and registered by the Register, as in case of a pay-warrant. As stated before, moneys covered into the Treasury cannot be again taken out, except through an appropriation; and even moneys erroneously covered in, as in case of customs or internal revenue, can only be recovered through an appropriation, which, in the two cases mentioned, is authorized by law; but an account has to be stated against the appropriation, as in the case of expenditures; so that by no process can receipts covered into the Treasusy be diminished, but the expenditure is increased to the extent of the erroneous payments. In the case of moneys refunded as excess of deposits made in the customs service, the whole amount of the receipts is charged as received into the Treasury, and the amount refunded is charged to an appropriation. These are not actually and properly expenditures, yet, under the inflexible system which is controlled by the Constitution itself, every payment from the Treasury must be made through an appropriation.

One of the most troublesome propositions before the Treasury Department is to make the expenditures of a certain fund or the accounts of a particular transaction conform to the direction of the law. The system of accounts must, then, be so universal as to be able to accommodate itself to any particular case that may arise. The act of 1836 directed that more than $28,000,000 surplus revenues be deposited with the States. It would have been much more convenient for the Department to have charged off from the accounts these amounts of money to each of these States with which it was deposited; but the law directed that the money should remain on deposit with the States; and hence to this day that amount of money in the public accounts is included in the account of "cash in the Treasury," although the probable intention was that it should not be repaid.

UNAVAILABLES.

All money in the Treasury, wherever it may be deposited or placed for disbursement or custody, is charged to the Treasurer of the United States. It is obvious, however, that this money may be lost without fault on the part of the Treasurer, by robbery, accident, defalcation of a subordinate officer, misconduct of depositaries having it in charge, or otherwise. Still, under the law, the Treasurer is responsible, and is charged with these sums. Such a deficit would in the accounts of a firm be a simple, plain entry in the profit and loss account by crediting cash and debiting the defaulter. But from the fact before stated, that money cannot be taken from the Treasury except by an appropriation, this course could not be pursued. An account called "unavailables" was created, which was charged with the amounts, and the Treasurer credited in his general account through the statement of an account by the accounting officers. This method of relieving the Treasurer is, your committee are informed, a practice which has grown up, and is not authorized by law, and for some years past has been prohibited by the Comptroller, and has been discontinued. It is plain that the Treasurer should be relieved from this responsibility, and that Congress should in some proper way provide by law for the dropping of these unavailable funds, by authorizing a credit to the Treasurer and a corresponding charge against the defaulting officer who fails to pay the money on demand.

TRUST FUNDS.

Again, when large sums of money were paid into the Treasury as trust funds, they were considered not as general assets in the Treasury from which general expenditures could be made, and hence a system after 1842 grew up of attempting to keep separate the trust-fund account. The moneys deposited with the States, trust funds and unavailable balances, had swollen to so large an item in the cash account that in 1842 it was dropped from the annual statement made in the finance report, but still retained (as it could not be excluded for reasons before given) in the official statement of the Treasury receipts and expenditures. In 1866 the trust funds and unavailables, amounting to $2,217,732.94, were again included in the yearly statements of the Secretary of the Treasury, (see finance report for that year, pages 2 and 32, a detailed statement of which will be found in the accompanying papers,) and the examination by a detail of clerks in 1870 was made, in order that these trust funds might be added to the general balance in other years. (See finance report 1870 and accompanying papers.)

In view of the varying opinions of Secretaries of the Treasury as to the manner in which these funds should be treated, and the confusion in statements created thereby, your committee are of the opinion that it would be better that all money belonging to the United States, of which the interest alone is to be disbursed for the benefit of others, should be covered at once into the Treasury, so that its expenditure may be under the general safeguard of the law, to be paid out only in pursuance of an appropriation by Congress. For instance, the fund received for the Smithsonian Institution was originally invested in State stocks, through which investment the fund lost interest for a number of years, and notably in the case of Arkansas, which still owes the amount invested in the bonds of that State. Congress was compelled to direct that the whole of this fund as fast as collected should be paid into the Treasury, and assumed the debt to the whole amount of funds received, and obligated the Government to pay 6 per cent. interest upon the same. By this method the transaction is very much simplified; absolute security is given to the fund and the proper accountability is required at the Treasury.

The Navy pension fund, amounting to $14,000,000, now by law invested in the temporary loan at 3 per cent. interest, should be covered into the Treasury, and, to meet the purpose for which the fund was created, the obligation of Congress be given to appropriate the interest each year; and it would appear to your committee that all trust funds now outstanding, unless there is some clear reason to the contrary, ought to be covered into the Treasury, and all appropriations from such trust funds be made by Congress.

These are the only changes your committee can recommend in the laws regulating the safe-keeping and disbursement of public money.

These explanations will appear more intelligible by reference to the following scheme of accounts of the Treasury Department from 1861 to 1870, which comprises the years in which the alleged discrepancies occurred, and a comparison of which will show the perfect harmony of the public accounts.

General fund.

DR.			CR.
June 30, 1861	To appropriations to date	$2,324,050,879 04	June 30, 1861	By receipts to date	$2,267,450,570 98
				By amount carried to the surplus fund	43,606,605 26
				By amount erroneously carried to the surplus fund in 1847 and restored in 1850	152,249 94
				By amount of repayments with no corresponding expenditures, 1851	21,621 05
				By amount of repayments with no corresponding expenditures, 1852	14,179 45
				By balance	12,805,652 36
		2,324,050,879 04			2,324,050,879 04
July 1, 1861	To balance	12,805,652 36
Fiscal year 1862	To appropriation (b)	673,448,954 36	Fiscal year 1862	By receipts (a) { Ordinary $581,628,181 26 / Trust funds 51,734 67 }	581,679,915 93
1863	do	1,774,341,938 91	1862	By surplus fund (d)	375,814 27
1864	do	799,640,714 58	1863	By receipts { Ordinary 888,082,128 05 / Trust funds 1,297,524 47 }	889,379,652 52
1865	do	2,061,582,607 14	1863	By surplus fund	553,928,40
1866	do	818,768,122 52	1864	By receipts { Ordinary 1,389,466,963 41 / Trust funds 3,994,054 16 }	1,393,461,017 57
1867	do	1,055,611,178 54	1864	By surplus fund	7,459,845 16
1868	do	986,197,619 27	1865	By receipts { Ordinary 1,801,792,627 51 / Trust funds 4,146,718 42 }	1,805,939,345 93
1869	do	589,480,722 56	1865	By surplus fund	3,457,463 03
1870	do	689,652,190 08	1866	By receipts	1,270,884,173 11
July 1, 1870	To balance	92,996,304 99	1866	By surplus fund	1,317,884 95
			1867	By receipts	1,131,060,920 56
			1867	By surplus fund	935,305 81
			1868	By receipts	1,030,749,516 52
			1868	By surplus fund	68,587,965 49
			1869	By receipts	609,621,828 27
			1869	By surplus fund	58,739,194 63
			1870	By receipts	696,729,973 63
			1870	By surplus fund	3,592,259 44
		9,554,526,005 22			9,554,526,005 22

Appropriation accounts, under which an account is kept with each appropriation.

EXPENDITURES.

June 30, 1861	To amount of warrants issued to date		$2,236,953,176 27
	To surplus fund		43,606,605 26
	To amount erroneously carried to the surplus fund in 1847 and restored in 1850		152,249 94
	To amount of repayments when there were no expenditures, 1851		21,621 05
	To amount of repayments when there were no expenditures, 1852		14,179 45
	To balance of appropriations		43,303,047 07
			2,324,050,879 04
Fiscal year 1862	To amount of warrants issued (c)	Ordinary.... $570,841,700 25 Trust fund.. 17,040 75	570,858,741 00
1862	To surplus fund (d)		375,814 27
1863	To amount of warrants issued (f)	Ordinary.... 895,796,630 65 Trust fund.. 30,729 59	895,827,351 24
1863	To surplus fund		553,928 40
1864	To amount of warrants issued	Ordinary.... 1,298,056,101 89 Trust fund.. 88,554 11	1,298,144,665 00
1864	To surplus fund		7,484,845 16
1865	To amount of warrants issued	Ordinary.... 1,897,674,224 09 Trust fund.. 7,242,242 00	1,904,916,466 09
1865	To surplus fund		3,457,463 03
1866	To amount of warrants issued		1,141,072,665 09
1866	To surplus fund		1,317,884 95
1867	To amount of warrants issued		1,093,079,655 27
1867	To surplus fund		935,305 81
1868	To amount of warrants issued		1,069,889,970 74
1868	To surplus fund		68,587,965 49
1869	To amount of warrants issued		584,777,996 11
1869	To surplus fund		58,739,194 63
1870	To amount of warrants issued		702,907,842 88
1870	To surplus fund		3,592,259 44
July 1, 1870	To balance		85,532,079 43
			9,492,027,095 03

APPROPRIATIONS.

June 30, 1861	By appropriations to date		$2,324,050,879 04
			2,324,050,879 04
July 1, 1861	By balance of appropriations		43,303,047 07
Fiscal year 1862	By appropriations (b)		673,448,954 36
1863	By appropriations		1,774,341,938 91
1864	....do		799,640,714 58
1865	....do		2,061,582,607 14
1866	....do		818,708,123 52
1867	....do		1,055,611,178 54
1868	....do		986,197,619 27
1869	....do		589,480,722 56
1870	....do		689,652,190 08
			9,492,027,095 03

UNAVAILABLES.

Fiscal year 1862	To unavailables (c)	$11,110 81
1863	....do	6,000 01
1864	....do	9,210 40
1865	....do	6,095 11
1866	....do	172,094 29
1867	....do	721,827 93
1869	....do	4,422 90
		930,761 45
Fiscal year 1869	By receipts from unavailables		$6,493 63
July 1, 1870	By balance		924,267 82
			930,761 45

Treasurer's general account.

RECEIPTS.

June 30, 1861	To receipts to date	$2,267,450,570 98
		2,267,450,570 98
July 1, 1861	To balance in Treasury	30,963,857 83
Fiscal year, 1862	To receipts (a)	581,679,915 93
1863	To receipts	889,379,652 52
1864	....do	1,393,461,017 57
1865	....do	1,805,939,345 93
1866	....do	1,270,884,173 11
1867	....do	1,131,060,920 56
1868	....do	1,030,749,516 52
1869	....do	609,021,828 27
1869	To receipts from unavailables	6,493 63
1870	To receipts	696,729,973 63
		9,440,476,695 50

EXPENDITURES.

June 30, 1861	By amount of warrants paid		$2,236,486,713 15
	By balance in Treasury		30,963,857 83
			2,267,450,570 98
Fiscal year, 1862	By warrants paid (c)		565,667,358 08
1862	By unavailables (c)		11,110 81
1863	By warrants paid (f)		899,915,911 25
1863	By unavailables		6,000 01
1864	By warrants paid		1,295,541,114 86
1864	By unavailables		9,210 40
1865	By warrants paid		1,906,433,331 37
1865	By unavailables		6,095 11
1866	By warrants paid		1,139,344,081 95
1866	By unavailables		172,094 29
1867	By warrants paid		1,096,351,566 66
1867	By unavailables		721,827 93
1868	By warrants paid		1,069,372,245 36
1869	By warrants paid		585,133,289 12
1869	By unavailables		4,422 90
1870	By warrants paid		703,155,391 44
July 1, 1870	By balance in Treasury		178,731,643 96
			9,440,476,695 50

OUTSTANDING WARRANTS.

June 30, 1861	To balance outstanding	$466,463 12
July 1, 1863	To outstanding warrants p'd during the year (f)	3,988,560 01
July 1, 1865	To outstanding warrants paid during the year	1,527,190 23
July 1, 1867	....do	3,271,911 39
July 1, 1869	....do	355,293 01
July 1, 1870	....do	247,548 56
July 1, 1870	To balance	1,127,527 45
		10,518,030 65
June 30, 1861	By amount issued but unpaid to date		$466,463 12
July 1, 1861	By balance		466,463 12
July 1, 1862	By warrants issued in year but not paid (c)		5,191,382 92
July 1, 1864	By warrants issued in year but not paid		2,603,550 14
July 1, 1866	....do		1,738,909 09
July 1, 1868	....do		517,725 38
			10,518,030 65

BALANCES.

July 1, 1870	Unappropriated balance	$92,996,304 90
July 1, 1870	Balance of appropriations	85,532,079 43
July 1, 1870	Outstanding warrants	1,127,527 45
		179,655,911 78
July 1, 1870	Unavailables		$924,267 82
July 1, 1870	Balance in Treasury		*178,731,643 96
			179,655,911 78

* Includes amounts deposited with the States.

First is the general account, to which all receipts are credited. The proper debit of this account is the appropriation warrants in aggregate.

The next is that of the individual appropriation accounts, which by law the Secretary is directed to carry to the credit of particular accounts. All pay-warrants are charged to their appropriate appropriations and credited to the Treasurer in his general account when paid. If unpaid at the end of the year, they are credited to an account of outstanding warrants. When warrants outstanding from a former year are paid, they are credited to the Treasurer and charged to the outstanding account. The Treasurer is also charged with all receipt-warrants paying money into the Treasury. When an appropriation has any balance remaining undrawn for the time limited by law to which the appropriation is available, a "surplus-fund" warrant is issued charging the appropriation account and crediting the general fund.

As there is no way by which money can be taken out of the Treasury except through an appropriation, the only way the Treasurer can receive credit for moneys for which he is responsible which have been lost through the defalcation of depositaries, or by which such defaulting officers can be personally charged on the books of the Department, is through the medium of an account designated "unavailables," to which all unavailable funds are charged whenever the Treasurer receives credit for them. If any amounts are afterward recovered on this account, the "unavailable" account is credited and the Treasurer charged.

An inspection of these accounts will show that the expenditures of the Government may be stated from either the appropriation account or the Treasurer's general account of receipts and expenditures, the difference being that the Treasurer's account will only show warrants paid, while the appropriation account will show all the warrants issued. The harmony, then, between these two accounts will always be complete when the outstanding warrants are taken into account.

For the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865 the receipts and expenditures of the Government were published in the finance reports, excluding the trust funds. This was done in accordance with the custom referred to, which had obtained since 1842, and which was changed to the present system in 1866. (See finance report, 1865, page 2.)

The Register of the Treasury, since the commencement of the Government, has pursued the system of stating the expenditures of the Government by the Treasurer's accounts, (warrants paid;) but as this account cannot be settled in time to be included in the finance report, the expenditures, as shown by the appropriation accounts, (warrants issued,) are used for the time being; but as soon as the Treasurer's account is settled, the correct amount by warrants paid is substituted in the published tables. During the war the settlement of the Treasurer's account was so far in arrears that the change from warrants issued to warrants paid was not made from 1862 until 1869, when the changes in the years 1862 to 1866, inclusive, were effected.

PUBLIC-DEBT STATEMENT.

This statement was, prior to 1871, prepared from the "issues and redemptions," but in that year a thorough examination was had of the receipts and expenditures from the year 1836, when there was no public debt; every item of payment on account of public debt was scrutinized. The object of the examination was to prove the accuracy of the accounts by showing the public debt to be the difference between the receipts from loans and the payments in redemption. Various differences were, however, found to exist, not in any manner affecting the cash in the Treasury, which are fully explained in the following statement taken from the finance report for 1871, page 20:

The statement of the receipts and expenditures, on account of the principal of the public debt, as per tables M and N, shows the net receipts from the organization of the Government to June 30, 1871, to have been	$7,094,541,041 38
The expenditures for the same period were	4,857,434,540 51
Leaving	2,237,106,500 87

as the amount of the principal of the public debt outstanding and unpaid on June 30, 1871.

The amount of the principal of the public debt, outstanding and unpaid, as shown by the monthly debt statement for July 1, 1871, and tables I and L, is $2,353,211,332.32, showing a difference of $116,104,831.45 more outstanding by debt statement than by the statement of receipts and expenditures. This difference is thus explained: The following stocks were issued in payment of various old debts and claims, but in the transactions no money ever came into the Treasury. On the maturity of the stock it was paid off, showing an expenditure where there had been no corresponding receipt:

Revolutionary debt of the several States, estimated	$76,000,000 00
Mississippi stock, exact	4,282,151 12
Louisiana purchase, exact	11,250,000 00
Washington and Georgetown debt to Holland, exact	1,500,000 00
United States bank stock, exact	7,000,000 00
Six per cent. navy stock, exact	711,700 00
Texas purchase, exact	5,000,000 00
Mexican indemnity, fourth and fifth installments, exact	303,573 92
In addition to the foregoing, the following amount is to be added, being composed of discount suffered in placing loans, interest paid and erroneously charged as principal, and various errors in settling and stating loan accounts. All of these latter and the revolutionary debt are now being investigated, and will be explained in a future report in detail	10,057,406 41
	116,104,831 45

It must be borne in mind, in reading this explanation, that the errors alluded to are not such as in any manner affect the cash account of the Government, or reflect upon the integrity of former officers of the Treasury. A part of the differences has arisen from a want of knowledge and care on the part of subordinate clerks in stating loan accounts, but much the larger proportion has occurred from a want of unity, system, and proper method in the accounts as heretofore kept in the Department. And these latter defects are partly owing to a want of sufficient legislation to enable the accounts to be properly kept. A bill was presented to Congress at its last session which was intended to supply this deficiency. It passed the House, but was not reached in the Senate. Until there is legislation, these errors and defects in the accounts must be perpetuated, and others must be made.

As an illustration of the class of differences which require legislation before they can be corrected, the two following are given: In 1850 there were $5,000,000 in bonds issued to pay Texan indemnity. For these bonds no money was ever received, and therefore there is no entry representing them on the credit side of the account, as in ordinary loan transactions. When the stock matured it was paid out of the Treasury and charged in the loan accounts, thus erroneously reducing this account by just the amount paid. The loan of February, 1861, was sold at a discount of $2,019,776.10. Only the difference between the amount of this loan and of this discount was received into the Treasury. The loan appears in the debt statement at the par of the issue, but in the receipts and expenditures it can only appear (for want of a premium and discount account) at the actual amount of money received for the loan.

The following copy of a letter prepared by the present Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Conant, under the direction of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Richardson, explains very fully the cause of the apparent discrepancies in the statements of the public debt:

SIR: Referring to your communication of the 2d instant, calling attention to apparent discrepancies in the different statements of the outstanding amount of the public debt of the United States on July 1, 1869, as follows:

By finance report for 1869, page xxix	$2,656,603,955 73
monthly debt statement, July 1, 1869	2,645,170,294 16
finance report, 1870, (June 30, 1869,) page xxv	2,588,452,213 94
finance report, 1870, (by the Register,) page 276	2,489,002,480 58

and requesting information respecting the same, I have the honor to submit the following explanations:

The first statement given is a statement showing the various acts of Congress authorizing the different issues of the securities of the United States, "length of the loans," "when redeemable," "rate of interest," "price at which sold," "amount authorized," "amount issued," and "amount outstanding," and the amount above given, $2,656,603,955.73, is correct; which, it must be borne in mind, only represents the principal of the outstanding issues under various acts. This statement has uniformly been made up from the loan accounts.

The second amount given as the debt, $2,645,170,294.16, by the monthly debt statement July 1, 1869, is a misrepresentation; the amount of the principal therein being $2,597,722,983.37, to which is added accrued interest, amounting to $47,447,310.79, making a total of principal and interest corresponding to the figures above given, $2,645,170,294.16. It will be seen at once that the first and second amounts are obtained from different data, the first treating of principal of the debt and the second of principal and accrued interest, and for this reason are not comparable. The discrepancy, then, to be explained is the difference between these two amounts, representing, respectively, the principal of the public debt by the finance report of 1869, $2,656,603,955.73, and the monthly debt statement July 1, 1869, $2,597,722,983.37, a difference of $58,880,972.36, which arises in the following manner:

Included in the items which form the aggregate of outstanding principal in finance report, 1869, page 27, authorized under various acts, are the bonds issued to the several Pacific Railroad Companies, amounting to $58,638,320 and $113,915.48 of "old funded debt," which had never appeared in any of the debt statements prior to January 1, 1870. The following loan accounts outstanding appeared larger in the finance report by the amount opposite each than in the monthly debt statement of July 1, 1869, for the reason that the latter statement (as will be seen from the following words thereon: "The foregoing is a correct statement of the public debt as appears from the books and Treasurer's returns on the morning of the 1st of July, 1869") exhibited the debt as it appeared on the 1st of July, one day later than the former statement, and which had items of redemptions by the Treasurer deducted from it that did not, in the regular order of business, reach the books from which the former statement was made up, in time to appear in the business of the year closing with the date of that statement:

Demand notes	$2,101 75
One and two year notes	9,220 00
Legal-tenders	64,805 50
Fractional currency	52,609 63

These items aggregate $58,880,972.36, and explain the difference between the statements under consideration.

The statement by finance report, 1870, page 25, that the debt on June 30, 1869, amounted to $2,588,452,213.94, will be found, when the following explanations are considered, to harmonize with either of the former statements. It may, however, be more clearly understood by first comparing it with the monthly debt statement July 1, 1869, the difference between them being $9,270,769.43. By reference to the inclosed copy of that statement, it will be observed that among the assets of the Government, coin and currency, will be found "sinking fund, in bonds bearing coin interest and accrued interest thereon," $8,867,282.07. These bonds had been purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury between May 1 and June 30, 1869, for the "sinking fund," and paid for from money in the Treasury, and there being, at that time, no authority of law for deducting them from the outstanding debt, they were held by the Treasurer as a cash item, and included in the monthly debt statement as still a part of the outstanding debt. Congress, by the sixth section of the act of July 14, 1870, directed that these bonds should be canceled and destroyed, and deducted from the amount of each class of the outstanding debt of the United States to which they respectively belonged. In compliance therewith, the amount of the principal of bonds purchased up to June 30, 1869, $8,691,000, was accordingly deducted from the principal of the debt as it appeared on that date. The further sum of $580,769.43, consisting of a large number of items, too numerous to be here enumerated, of accrued interest and premium on loans ascertained, by a readjustment of the loan accounts extending over a period of fifteen years, to have been carried to the principal-account, instead of the separate accounts to which they belonged, is here deducted. These two items make the difference, $9,270,769.43, between the second and third statements.

The fourth statement, that the Register (finance report, 1870, page 276) states the public debt to be $2,489,002,480.58 on June 30, 1869, and apparently differing to the extent of $167,601 475.15, from the amount represented by first statement, will be found, by analysis of the data from which it was made, to harmonize, instead of to conflict, with the other statements. This statement was made upon the basis of the monthly debt statement issued July, 1869, (with which it will be found to agree,) and differs from the other three statements, in that it shows the net debt of the Government, including the accrued interest thereon, after deducting cash in the Treasury, namely:

Total debt, principal outstanding, (see second statement)	$2,597,722,983 37
Accrued interest	47,447,310 79
Total debt, principal and interest	2,645,170,294 16
Deduct amount in the Treasury, coin, currency, and sinking fund	156,167,813 58
Amount of public debt, less cash in the Treasury	2,489,002,480 58

The four statements may be summarized in the following manner:

The first is an exhibit of the amount of the principal of the United States securities and Pacific railroad bonds, issued under various acts of Congress, outstanding June 30, 1872.

The second is a statement of the principal of the outstanding debt, including the accrued interest thereon, with the Pacific Railroad bonds excluded.

The third shows the outstanding principal of this debt with the sinking fund deducted, in accordance with the act of Congress of July 14, 1870, and exclusive of the Pacific Railroad bonds.

The fourth is a statement of the net debt of the United States, principal and accrued interest, with the cash in the Treasury deducted.

The publication of these statements by this Department was in accordance with law, and while, as has been shown, they differ materially only in the data upon which they are based, they afford an opportunity to persons of dishonest motives to ignore that fact, and present them to the public as conflicting and untruthful statements made up from the same data.

Referring to that portion of your letter respecting the discrepancies in the Register's statement of the public debt, as shown by the receipts and expenditures of the Government, I submit the following in reply:

It must be obvious to any one that the difference between the receipts from loans issued and the payments, or redemption of loans, should represent the outstanding debt, and that it should so appear by the receipts and expenditures issued by the Register's Office.

An examination into these accounts, extending back to the organization of the Government, was instituted during the early part of the present administration, disclosing the fact that the difference arose in the old and long-standing accounts, by reason of certain stocks, such as revolutionary, Mississippi stock, Louisiana purchase, United States Bank stock, 6 per cent Navy stock, &c., having been issued in payment of various old debts and claims, and that in the transaction no money ever came into the Treasury as a receipt, while on the other hand the stock as it matured was paid off, thus showing an expenditure where there had been no corresponding receipt.

These discrepancies have existed for many years, but were not brought to light until an attempt had been made to reconcile a statement which in itself was a contradiction. These discrepancies do not in any way affect the cash accounts of the Government or reflect upon the integrity of former officers of the Treasury under whose administration the discrepancies occurred. They arose from a system of book-keeping which was defective and which has been of late years greatly improved.

This matter is more fully explained on page 20, finance report, 1871.

It is proper here to state that all the statements of the public debt have heretofore been made from the loan accounts, independent of the Register's receipts and expenditures, and that, therefore, they have never been affected in any way by the differences alluded to. It is by the monthly debt statement, which is the balance-sheet of the public-debt ledger, (and into which enter the principal of the debt, the accrued interest thereon and interest unpaid, and the cash in the Treasury,) that the debt of the United States and the reduction thereof have been shown by the present administration, and this is the only statement of the public debt which embraces all the data upon which it is based, showing both the assets and liabilities of the Government.

An examination of these statements will show the care and accuracy with which they have been prepared, and that they are free from all errors, and as reliable as the science of accounts can make them.

I am, very respectfully, WM. A. RICHARDSON,
Acting Secretary.

The present system of stating the public debt not only includes the amount of each loan, but accrued interest thereon to date, and the actual money on hand available for the purpose of paying the debt. This evidently is the true and proper mode of showing the amount of the debt, because it exhibits the exact balance due from the United States after deducting the money on hand at the date of the statement.

Whether the attempt to apply this rule of stating the public debt to former years was wise or not, it is manifest to your committee that from the time this form of statement was issued it has been conceded to be more satisfactory and more accurate than the previous statements; and, from 1871 up, the statement of the public debt exhibits all the elements to show its precise condition, as well as the amount of the available money on hand applicable either for the payment of the public debt or for current expenditures. The discrepancy between the statements under the new mode and the old is the principal one pointed out and explained in these papers, and it is a remarkable evidence of the accuracy of the books of the Treasury that after careful analysis these apparent discrepancies are fully explained. Your committee, in conclusion, would say that they are fully satisfied that there has not been the slightest change in the books of the Treasury.

Your committee are not prepared to recommend any change in the mode of keeping or making public these accounts. The system is the growth of the experience of the Department since its organization, and it would be a very delicate and dangerous task to propose any change in this respect. Certainly it ought not to be done without a much more full and critical examination than your committee could make without the aid of experts and the most careful study.

Your committee have found no want of intelligence in keeping these accounts or readiness to explain them and to account for every item. In making the examinations the Treasury Department has been called upon to verify the receipt and expenditure of nearly fifteen thousand millions of accounts; a task which involved much labor and time.

The committee submit as a part of their report the accompanying statements:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 4, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated February 9, 1876, transmitting a copy of a resolution adopted in the Senate of the United States, January 24, 1876, in the following words:

"That the Committee on Finance be instructed to investigate the books and accounts of the Treasury Department, particularly with reference to discrepancies and alterations in amounts and figures that have been made in them, especially in the annual statements of the expenditures of the Government, revenue collected, and the public debt contained in said reports; and if any such discrepancies and alterations be found to exist, to report the same and the extent and nature thereof, the years wherein they occur, by what authority made, if any, the reasons that induced them, and to report generally such other and further information bearing upon the subject as to them may seem best, and that said committee have power to send for persons and paper;" and requesting me to make statements in explanation of the discrepancies and alterations alleged to exist, together with any recommendation as to changes in the modes of keeping the accounts and as to any further guards, if necessary, to prevent errors and secure the public moneys.

In reply I have the honor to transmit herewith certain tabular statements and memoranda explaining the discrepancies referred to; but before inviting your attention thereto permit me to state that in no case have the changes referred to in any way affected the cash of the Treasury.

Under the law for every deposit in the Treasury the Secretary of the Treasury is required to issue his warrant for the amount, which warrant, after being signed by the Comptroller and the Register of the Treasury and properly entered in the books of their respective offices, is receipted by the Treasurer of the United States, and the amount then becomes a charge in his general account and what is technically known as "covered money," and cannot thereafter be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of an appropriation made by law. Warrants thus covering the moneys into the Treasury are issued as soon as practicable after the deposit has been made.

Moneys are paid out of the Treasury upon Treasury drafts issued upon the warrants of the Secretary, which drafts when paid are credits to their amount in the Treasurer's same general account.

Under the act of June 23, 1836, certain moneys were deposited with the several States, and, though the amount is still a part of the Treasury balance, it is not subject to draft, and, as a matter of convenience, has for all practical purposes been dropped from the current cash balance.

The Treasury has also from time to time suffered losses through the failure of banks to redeem their notes or to pay over public moneys deposited with them; and also through the default of independent treasury officers, and, in some instances, the accounting officers have raised charges against the defaulting banks or officers for such amounts, and allowed the Treasurer credit therefor in his general account, though in fact no warrant or draft for the amount was ever issued, and such amounts are carried in the accounts as "unavailable."

With these explanations the general cash account of the Treasury from March 4, 1789, to June 30, 1875, as appears by the books of this Department, and as set forth in the finance report for 1875, may be stated as follows:

Cash, Dr.

To amount deposited in the Treasury and covered by warrants, (page 13)	$14,973,305,670 59
To amount deposited and not covered, (page 470)	1,072,002 73
Total	14,974,377,673 32

Cash, Cr.

By amount paid on warrants, (page 17)	$14,797,839,742 74
By amount deposited with the States, (page 17)	28,101,644 91
By amount unavailable, (page 13)	2,661,866 53
By balance on hand in the several offices and depository banks or in transit, (page 461)	145,774,419 14
Total	14,974,377,673 32

For the reported balance on hand June 30, 1875, as above set forth, examinations of the offices and mints made at that time or soon after, show in every instance the actual cash as stated excepting certain losses explained on page 464. For the amount in depository banks the Government holds ample security.

From this statement it will be seen that such an accountabillty for the moneys received and disbursed has always been so enforced by this Department that every cent of money received by the Government since its organization is either on hand or properly accounted for, and the discrepancies in the statement of receipts and expenditures, loans, or the debt of the Government from time to time, have arisen from clerical or typographical errors, different classification of items or form of statement, or from omissions to debit and credit like amounts, which, under a better system of book-keeping, would have been done when the transactions occurred.

Some of the discrepancies referred to have actually existed for many years, in fact commencing with some of the accounts of the first loans issued by the Government, and were first shown in the reports of the years 1870 and 1871, for the reason that during that period an examination into the subject was begun, and changes were then made in the published statements as the result of such examination. It must be obvious that in case loans are issued at par, the difference between the amount of money received into the Treasury for loans issued and the amount paid out in redemption of loans should represent the outstanding debt of the Government.

The accounts of receipts and expenditures by warrants on the Treasurer, which are the cash accounts of the Government, should also at all times exhibit the amount of the public debt. As formerly kept in the Department they do not, for the reason that in many instances stocks were issued directly from the Treasury to public creditors in payment of old debts and claims, and therefore in the transaction no moneys came into the Treasury and no warrants were issued. In many cases loans were placed at a discount, and only the actual moneys received therefor were credited, no discount account having been kept. When these loans matured they were paid at their par value, and therefore the accounts of receipts and expenditures and the loan accounts were found to differ to the extent of such transactions.

Attention is invited to the explanation on page 20, finance report, 1871, of some of these differences.

In this connection it should be stated that in no instance has there been any erasure or alteration in the books and records of this Department, and the changes made in the published reports have been only to express with greater accuracy the precise condition of the public accounts, as shown by such books and records.

It is thought that the accompanying papers, to which your attention is respectfully invited, will show fully why the changes have been made in the reports.

Any additional legislation which may be desired to insure greater accuracy in future reports will be considered hereafter.

Very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Chairman Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

RECEIPTS.

The discrepancies in the tables of receipts arise from "trust funds" and "unavailables." From 1842 to 1865, trust funds were regarded as specific appropriations, and unavailable for general expenditure.

The balance on hand in the Treasury each year was stated exclusive of any moneys in the Treasury to the credit of these funds, and the receipts from these sources and expenditures on these accounts were not embraced in the tabulated statements of the receipts and expenditures, although in the public accounts no distinction was made between these trust funds and ordinary accounts.

The impropriety, if not the impracticability, of keeping these accounts separate from the general balance in the Treasury became apparent, and the balance on 30th June, 1865 to the credit of trust funds was added to the general balance in the Treasury (see finance report for 1866, pages 2 and 32.) In 1870, a detail of clerks, under the supervision of the chief clerk of the Department, examined these accounts; but before the proper balance could be stated it was necessary to bring down the correct balances each year as found by the accounting officers. The tables were then carefully revised and published in the annual reports, (see "Appendix A, unavailables.") All public moneys are received into the Treasury and paid out upon warrants issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Treasurer being debited with the amounts received and credited with the amounts paid. This forms what is known as the Treasurer's general account, by which the cash in the Treasury is determined. When a depositary who has public moneys in his possession for which the Treasurer is responsible proves to be a defaulter, this amount becomes unavailable. It has been the practice of the accounting officers in some cases to state an account charging such defaulting officer on the books of the Treasury with the amount of defalcation and crediting the Treasurer, but as no money can be drawn from the Treasury except on warrants issued in accordance with appropriations made by law, there is no way of reconciling these unavailable amounts in the accounts of the Treasury Department, except by crediting the Treasurer in his general accounts without the issuing of a warrant for such credit.

As the Treasurer's accounts are not adjusted until long after the publication of the tables contained in the finance reports, these items must be regulated subsequently, and wherever they occur the tables must be changed to this extent. When anything is recovered from such defaulting officers, the amount is charged to the Treasurer on general account as "receipts from unavailables," which also necessitates a further change in the tables to this extent. This defect in the present system has long been felt, but cannot be remedied without legislation authorizing these transfers to be made by warrants and in accordance with an appropriation, and Congress has several times been asked for such legislation.

EXPENDITURES.

The discrepancies in the tables of expenditures arise from trust funds, as above explained, and "outstanding warrants."

On examination of the note at the head of the table of expenditures in the finance report for 1869, pages 320 and 321, it will be seen that those for the year 1862 and subsequent years are made from the account of "warrants on the Treasurer issued;" those for previous years are made from the account of "warrants paid;" while from the note at the head of the table in the finance report for 1870, pages

274 and 275, it is shown that those for the year 1867 and subsequent years are made from the account of "warrants on the Treasurer issued;" all previous years are from the account of "warrants paid."

As it is impracticable to settle the Treasurer's accounts in time for the Secretary's annual report to Congress, it has always been customary to state the receipts and expenditures in the finance reports from the account of warrants issued; but it has also been the custom to correct these statements in subsequent reports, as soon as the Treasurer's accounts are settled, by deducting outstanding warrants. Owing to the vast increase of business in the Treasurer's, Auditors', and Comptrollers' Offices during the war, the accounts of the Treasurer were not settled for two and sometimes three years after the close of the fiscal year. On this account these annual corrections were not made for the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865, until the settlement of the account for 1866. The amount of outstanding warrants for the year 1866 is shown on page 19 of the finance report for 1871, under each head of expenditure, aggregating $4,484,555.03.

With the exception of a few typographical or clerical errors, the discrepancies in the two reports arise from the causes enumerated. There are other apparent discrepancies arising wholly from classification; but in no instance do the settled and determined sources of revenue, such as customs, lands, direct tax, and internal revenue, nor the well-defined classes of expenditures, such as War, Navy, Interior, &c., disagree, except as stated. It is only in separating public debt from miscellaneous, and civil from foreign intercourse, that discrepancies in classification occur, which depend entirely upon the judgment of the clerk making the classification.

These tables are given as a condensed synopsis of the books of the Department, and changes and alterations in classification or form do not imply changes in the books in which the receipts are entered in detail, under the general classification of "customs," "lands," "direct tax," "internal revenue," and "miscellaneous," and the expenditures in detail, under each head of appropriation as authorized by law. As soon as the public accounts are audited and settled by the accounting officers they are laid before the House of Representatives in detail, in accordance with the standing order of the House of December 30, 1791, and the act of August 26, 1842.

These accounts as published agree in all particulars with the books of the Department, and are the official statements with which all comparisons should be made.

PUBLIC DEBT.

Prior to 1871 the outstanding public debt was stated from the books of "issues and redemptions." In 1871 this account was restated, from 1836, from the "receipts and expenditures." From the nature of these two accounts the amount outstanding will not agree at any period, although when brought within the same dates and to include the same items there will be no difference. To illustrate: A subscription is made to a loan in June, but the bonds are not issued until July. On the 30th of June the outstanding of this loan will be greater by this amount on the "receipts and expenditures" account than on the "issues and redemptions" account.

Secretary Fessenden, on page 7 of his report for the fiscal year 1864, states the amount paid into the Treasury previous to July 1, 1863, for which evidences of debt were subsequently issued, as $23,782,423.20, which was not included in the outstanding of the debt as published for the year 1863, but which is included in the statement by receipts and expenditures for that year.

Again, the Treasurer redeems a certain amount of public debt in June, but the re-imbursing warrants are not issued until after the 1st of July. In this case there will be less outstanding on the 30th of June on the "issue and redemption" account, by this amount, than on the "receipts and expenditures" account.

Secretary McCulloch, on page 19 of his report for the fiscal year 1865, states that the amount of $77,897,347.02 was excluded from the public debt for the year 1864, which amount had been paid out of the Treasury but had not been re-imbursed to the Treasurer by warrants until after the commencement of the next fiscal year. The outstanding debt by these two accounts never can agree unless all issues are made in the same period in which the subscriptions are received and re-imbursing warrants issued in the same period in which the redemptions are made.

During the year 1870, the public-debt accounts from 1836 were examined with a view of bringing these two accounts together.

The result of this examination was the adoption of the present system of stating the public debt, by which these two accounts are made to harmonize, the one being a check upon and proving the correctness of the other. It was necessary to select some period when these two accounts came together, and the year 1836, when we had comparatively no debt, was the period selected. When this examination was completed, the Register was directed to state his accounts accordingly.

In regard to the outstanding public debt for the years 1869 and 1870 being published, including accrued interest, less cash in the Treasury, the Register submits the following statement:

"The year 1869 was the first of Secretary Boutwell's administration, who remodeled the debt statement and added the item of accrued interest to, and deducted the cash in the Treasury from, the outstanding principal of the debt. The clerk having charge of the division of receipts and expenditures in the Register's Office, whose duty it was to prepare the tables for the finance report, followed the plan of the Secretary's Office in making up the monthly debt statement, and reported the outstanding debt for those years including accrued interest and deducting cash in the Treasury. I was led to believe at the time that it was so stated to conform to suggestions made by the chief clerk in the Secretary's Office."

The statement of this account (extending over a period of thirty-five years and involving receipts into the Treasury of over sixty-six hundred millions of dollars, and an expenditure of over forty-two hundred millions) from two independent sets of accounts, proving the correctness of the one by the other, is in itself the highest proof of the accuracy of the public accounts, however they may appear in some instances, at first view, to contradict each other.

With these general explanations, covering the whole ground of inquiry, the following explanations of apparent discrepancies are submitted in the order in which they are pointed out in the speech of the honorable Senator from West Virginia.

The total annual expenditures are stated in the finance report of 1869, on page 321, as follows:

1860-'61	$85,387,313 08
1861-'62	570,841,700 25
1862-'63	895,796,630 65
1863-'64	1,298,144,656 00
1864-'65	1,897,674,224 09
1865-'66	1,141,072,666 09
Total	5,888,917,190 16

The total annual expenditures are stated in the finance report for 1870, on page 275, as follows:

1860-'61	$85,387,363 08
1861-'62	565,667,358 08
1862-'63	899,815,911 25
1863-'64	1,295,541,114 86
1864-'65	1,906,433,331 37
1865-'66	1,139,344,081 95
Total	5,892,189,160 59
Difference or increase	3,271,970 43

which is explained as follows, namely:

Typographical error in finance report for 1869 in the amount of the total expenditures for the year 1861-'62		$50 00
Trust funds, excluded from the finance report of 1869, namely:
1862—Chickasaw fund	$20,000 00
Choctaw schools	319 91
Navy pension-fund	3,013 44
	23,333 35
Less repayment, Navy hospital-fund	6,292 60
		17,040 75
(See Appendix B.)
1863—Awards	3,043 31
Cherokee schools	13,065 87
Navy pension-fund	3,162 04
Kansas schools	600 00
Navy hospital-fund	10,858 37
		30,729 59
(See Appendix C.)
1865—Navy pension-fund	7,047,200 65
Chickasaw fund	122,256 96
Cherokee schools	4,692 42
Choctaw schools	21,610 30
Kansas schools	1,312 50
Navy hospital-fund	45,169 17
		7,242,242 00
(See Appendix E.)
Total		7,290,062 34
from which deduct outstanding warrants:
July 1, 1866, per "receipts and expenditures" 1866, page 356	$4,484,555 03
Less the amount outstanding July 1, 1861, per "receipts and expenditures" 1861, page 385	466,463 12
		$4,018,091 91
Difference explained		3,271,970 43
In the report of 1870 the expenditures for pensions are stated for the year 1864-'65 at		$16,347,621 34
In the report for 1869, for same year, at		9,291,610 48
Showing an increase in the report of 1870 over that of 1869 of which is explained as follows:		7,056,010 86
Amount paid from the Navy pension-fund (Interior Department) for investment in Navy pension-fund, (public debt,) per act of July 1, 1864, (13 Statutes, page 414, section 4753, Revised Statutes)		7,047,200 65
Excess of repayment carried to "Indians" per "receipts and expenditures" 1865, page xlv		9,466 19
		7,056,666 84
Less amount of outstanding warrants issued on this account, but not paid during the year, (see "receipts and expenditures," 1864, page 229, and 1865, page 276)	$245 98
And error in classification carried to "Indians"	410 00
		655 98
Difference explained		7,056,010 86
In the report of 1870 the expenditures for pensions for the year 1863-'64 are stated at		4,985,473 90
In the report of 1869 at		4,979,633 17
Showing an increase in the report of 1870 over that of 1869 of which is explained as follows:		5,840 73
Navy pension-fund		16,811 24
Error in classification—should be under "Indians"		200 01
Outstanding warrants on this account of former years paid during this, (see "receipts and expenditures" for 1863, page 228; for 1864, page 227)		1,349 48
		18,360 73
Less relief acts, "receipts and expenditures" 1864, page 29		12,520 00
Difference explained		5,840 73
In the report of 1870 the expenditures for pensions in the year 1870 are stated at		28,340,202 17
In the report of 1874 at		28,402,241 20
Showing an increase in the report of 1874 over 1870 of which is explained as follows:		62,059 03
Amount of "pay Indian agents," improperly deducted from "Indians," (see receipts and expenditures," p. xxxv)		58,729 09
Outstanding warrants on this account in prior years, paid during this, (see "receipts and expenditures" for 1869, p. 307; for 1870, p. 301)		3,309 94
Difference explained		62,039 03
In the finance report for 1871 the expenditures in the Naval Department are stated for the year 1865 at		122,617,434 07
In the report for 1869 at		122,567,776 12
Showing an increase in the report of 1871 over that of 1869 of which is explained as follows:		49,657 95
Navy hospital-fund		$45,169 17
The outstanding warrants at the close of the year 1864 (see "receipts and expenditures," page 236) amounted on this account to	$44,024 43
And at the close of the year 1865 (see "receipts and expenditures" 1865, page 285) to	39,535 65
Showing that there was paid during the year		4,488 78
Difference explained		49,657 95
In the report of 1871 the expenditures of the War Department are stated for the year 1862-'63 at		603,314,411 82
In the report of 1869 at		599,298,600 83
Showing an increase in the report of 1871 over that of 1869 of		4,015,810 99

which is the amount of "outstanding warrants" paid during the year, as follows:

The outstanding warrants on this account at the close of the fiscal year 1862 (see "receipts and expenditures" for 1862, page 274) amounted to	$5,306,612 24
And at the close of the year 1862, page 242, to	1,290,801 25
Showing that there was paid during the year		4,015,810 99
In the report for the year 1870, the expenditures in the Indian Department for the year 1863 are stated at		3,152,032 70
In the report for 1868 at $1,076,326.35, which is the item of expenditure on account of "Pensions," through a clerical error tabulated under the head of "Indians."
The expenditures on account of "Indians" appear in the same table, under "Pensions," at		3,140,194 44
Showing an increase in the report of 1870 over that of 1868 of		11,838 26
Which is explained as follows:
Trust funds, Cherokee and Kansas schools		13,665 87
"Reliefs" brought from pensions		496 80
		14,162 67
Less warrants issued during the year but not paid. "Receipts and expenditures," 1862, page 257, and 1863, page 231		2,324 41
Difference explained		11,838 26
In the report for 1870 the expenditures on account of pensions for the year 1863 are stated at		1,078,513 36
In the report for 1868, at $3,140,194.44, which is the amount of expenditure on account of "Indians," tabulated, as stated above, under the head of "Pensions" through a clerical error.
The correct amount is		1,076,326 35
Showing the true difference to be		2,187 01
Which is explained as follows:
Navy pension fund		3,162 04
Less outstanding warrants issued but not paid during the year (see "receipts and expenditures" for 1862, page 256, and for 1863, page 228)	$478 23
And expenditures under relief act incorrectly classified under "Indians," page 29	496 80
		975 03
Difference explained		2,187 01

REVENUE COLLECTED.

In the finance report for 1863, the total revenue for the year, exclusive of loans and Treasury notes, is stated at		132,889,746 95
In the report for the year 1864, at $112,687,290.95, which should be		112,697,290 95
Showing a difference in the two reports of		20,192,456 00
Which is the amount of receipts for that year from postal currency improperly included in the report for 1863 in the column of "net ordinary revenue"		20,192,456 00

The revenue collected during the year, according to the two reports, is the same, with this exception.

In the reports for the years 1870 and 1871, the receipts from internal revenue were included, by a clerical error, in "loans and Treasury notes." This was an error in revising the tables, and was corrected in 1872, 1870 and 1871 being the only years in which this error occurs. By reference to the "receipts and expenditures" for 1868, page 22, it will be seen that this amount ($37,640,787.95) of receipts from internal revenue was all received from the "Treasurer of the United States," immediately following which are the receipts from the several loans. The clerk inadvertently tabulated these items together, and the error, irrespective of the incorrect information conveyed by the report as to the revenue from this source, can have no bearing upon the question of the correctness of the public accounts, nor does it evidence any change or alteration in the books of the Treasury.

All the tables and statements contained in the finance reports are condensed from the accounts, and in making such statements errors are liable to occur, and when they are discovered it is certainly proper to correct them.

LOANS AND TREASURY NOTES.

The receipts from loans and Treasury notes for the year 1863 are stated as follows:
In the report for 1863 at		$756,489,905 57
In the report for 1864 at		776,682,361 57
Showing a difference of		20,192,456 00
Which is the amount of receipts from postal currency heretofore shown to be included in net ordinary revenue in the report for the year 1863.
In the report for 1870, the revenue from this source for 1863 is stated at		814,925,494 96
Showing a difference, compared with the report of 1863, of		58,435,589 39
Which consists of the item of internal revenue, heretofore explained, included in this account		37,640,787 95
The amounts of receipts from postal currency, heretofore shown to be included in net ordinary revenue		20,192,456 00
And the following items included in "miscellaneous" in the report of 1864. (See "receipts and expenditures" for 1863, page 22:)
Profit on certificate of indebtedness redeemed before maturity		20,425 00
Premium on three years' 7 3-10 coupon bonds		581,920 44
Difference explained		58,435,589 39

CHANGES IN THE PUBLIC-DEBT STATEMENT.

In the finance report for 1871 the Register states the public debt for the following years at:

1862	$524,176,412 13
1863	1,119,772,138 63
1864	1,815,784,370 57
1865	2,680,647,869 74
1866	2,773,236,173 69
1867	2,678,126,103 87
1868	2,611,687,851 19
1869	2,588,452,213 94
1870	2,480,672,427 81
Total	19,272,555,561 57

In the report for 1870 for the same year, the debt is stated as follows:

1862	$514,211,371 92
1863	1,098,793,181 37
1864	1,740,690,489 49
1865	2,682,593,026 53
1866	2,783,425,879 21
1867	2,692,199,215 12
1868	2,636,320,964 67
1869	2,489,002,480 58
1870	2,386,358,599 74
Total	19,023,595,208 63
Difference or increase, as shown by the honorable Senator from West Virginia, in the report of 1871 over 1870 of	248,960,352 94

But this difference or increase as thus shown is erroneous. It is a comparison of the sum of running balances between which no intelligible comparison can be made.

The proper way to make the comparison is to find the increase or decrease on each account for each year, and thus determine the aggregate increase on each account since 1861, the difference between which will be the true difference in the accounts.

The following will explain the difference:

Statement of the increase or decrease of the public debt in each year from 1861 to 1870, inclusive, showing the net difference between the "receipts and expenditures" account and the "issue and redemptions" account.

Year.	Debt.	Increase.	Decrease.	Net increase.
Receipts and expenditures:
1861		$90,580,873 72
1862	$524,176,412 13	433,595,538 41
1863	1,119,772,138 63	595,595,726 50
1864	1,815,784,370 57	696,012,231 94
1865	2,680,647,869 74	864,863,499 17
1866	2,773,236,173 69	92,588,303 95
1867	2,678,126,103 87		$95,110,069 82
1868	2,611,687,851 19		66,438,252 68
1869	2,588,453,213 94		23,234,637 25
1870	2,480,672,427 81		107,780,786 13
		2,773,236,173 69	292,563,745 88	$2,480,672,427 81
Issues and redemptions:
1861		90,867,828 68
1862	514,211,371 92	423,343,543 24
1863	1,098,793,181 37	584,581,809 45
1864	1,740,690,489 49	641,897,308 12
1865	2,682,593,026 53	941,902,537 04
1866	2,783,425,879 21	100,832,852 68
1867	2,692,199,215 12		91,226,664 09
1868	2,636,320,964 67		55,878,250 45
1869	*2,597,722,983 37		38,597,981 30
1870	†2,480,246,027 83		117,476,955 54
		2,783,425,879 21	303,179,851 38	2,480,246,027 83
Difference				426,399 98

*In the Register's report for 1869 the outstanding public debt was published (as heretofore explained) as		$2,489,002,480 58
Which is the amount of the debt, less cash and sinking fund in the Treasury, to which should be added the amount of cash and sinking fund	$156,167,813 58
Less accrued interest	47,447,310 79
	108,720,502 79
To give the principal of the debt July 1, 1869		$2,597,722,983 37
†In the same report for 1870 the outstanding public debt was again published as	2,386,358,599 74
To which should be added the amount of cash and sinking fund	$144,494,984 61
Less accrued interest	50,607,556 52
	93,887,428 09
To give the principal of the debt July 1, 1870		2,480,246,027 83

This difference or apparent increase of the debt as shown in the finance report for 1870 consists of the following items:

Amount of the bonds purchased for the sinking and special funds prior to July 1, 1870, but not received and paid for prior to the passage of the act of July 14, 1870, and consequently not deducted from the outstanding public debt on July 1, 1870, on "receipts and expenditures" account	$3,689,100 00
(See Note 14, finance report 1871, page 7.)
Amounts not included in the "issues and redemptions" account, but included in the "receipts and expenditures" account:
Old debt, $57,665; interest, $64,164.81	121,829 81
Mexican indemnity	1,104 91
Bounty land-scrip	3,975 00
(See Note 10, finance report for 1871, page 7.)
Amount advanced to the Treasurer to pay interest on certificates of indebtedness, used to redeem principal, thus making a difference between the two accounts of	21,425 52
Amount of Treasury notes of 1857, checked off on the loan books, in excess of redemptions	5,100 00
(See Note 6, finance report for 1871, page 7.)
Amount of loan of 1848 redeemed and twice deducted on loan-books	800 00
(See Note 9, finance report for 1871, page 7.)

"In the examination of the account of the Texan indemnity loan, it was discovered that $30.62 had been covered as principal which should have been covered as interest, also that $17,080 was covered as principal which should have been covered as premium"..... (See Note 7, finance report for 1871, page 7.)	$17,110 62
"In the quarter ending September 30, 1868, $150.22 was covered to the credit of principal of the loan of 1863, which should have been covered as premium"..... (See Note 3, finance report for 1871, page 7.)	150 22
Miscellaneous covering-warrant, No. 459, of December 20, 1865, covered as receipts from principal of 5-20 loan of 1865, $995,247, which should have been covered as premium.....	995,247 00
Making a total discrepancy of.....		$4,855,843 08
From which deduct the following items:
Purloined Treasury notes redeemed under the first section of the act of August 10, 1846, charged on "receipts and expenditures" account to this loan, being equivalent to a duplicate issue, should be excluded altogether.....		23,289 86
Lost note of 1860 redeemed on bond of indemnity, and again redeemed when the note was presented by the holder.....		$500 00
Amount of certain 7 3-10 notes of 1861 returned by the Treasurer as not issued, and canceled, as shown by the Register's books.....		45,000 00
Amount of old demand and legal-tender notes stolen from the Treasury after the Treasurer had received credit for their redemption, and again put in circulation. These amounts were recovered, but instead of being deposited as debits to the loans were covered as miscellaneous receipts:
Old demand notes.....		18 000 00
Legal tenders.....		5,996 06
(The actual amount recovered on account of legal-tenders was $6,000, $3.94 in excess of the amount necessary to make the account good.)
An examination of the loans of one and two year notes of 1863 shows that the amount outstanding is $140 less than shown by the "issues and redemptions" account.....	$140 00
Amount of compound-interest notes lost at sea in the steamship Republic, paid to Ober, Nanson & Co. per act of February 22, 1867..... (See Note 11, finance report of 1871, page 7.)	59,500 00
Discount on fifty-million loan of July and August, 1861, only the net amount of receipts from this loan being covered into the Treasury. The actual discount at which this loan was negotiated was..... $5,338,768 09 but the receipts were increased by..... 1,134,168 71
Accrued interest.....	4,204,599 38
Discount on loan of 1842.....	42,417 80
Amount of bonds of the loan of June, 1864, issued to the Plainfield Bank of New Jersey, in lieu of same amount stolen before delivery to the bank.....	30,000 00
		4,429,443 10
Difference explained.....		426,399 98

In the finance report for 1874 the public debt is stated for the years—
1872.....		$2,253,251,078 78
1873.....		2,234,482,743 20
Decrease.....		18,768,335 58
On page 5 of the finance report for 1873 the decrease is stated by the Secretary at.....		$43,667,630 05
In the finance report for 1874 the debt is stated for the years—
1874.....		2,251,690,468 43
1873.....		2,234,482,993 20
Increase.....		17,207,475 23
While the decrease of the debt for the year 1874 is stated by the Secretary at.....		$41,552,524 77

These apparent differences are fully explained by the notes on pages 6 and 9 of the finance report for 1874, as follows:

(Note on page 6:)

"It will be seen that the increase of the principal of the public debt, as shown by this statement, appears to be $17,207,475.23. Congress, by act of June 8, 1872, (17 Statutes, 336,) provided that national banking associations might deposit United States legal-tender notes in the Treasury of the United States, and receive therefor certificates of deposit, bearing no interest, and that the notes so deposited should be set apart and held as a special deposit for the redemption of said certificates. The certificates outstanding on the 1st day of July, and included in the outstanding principal of the debt, amounted to $58,760,000, and the notes held as a special deposit for their redemption were included in the cash balance in the Treasury on that day. It will be seen, therefore, that while these certificates, as a matter of accounts, are treated as a part of the public debt, they do not in reality form any portion of it, in the usual sense of the word, for the reason that no revenue is required to be provided for their payment, the notes which they represent always being in the Treasury as a special deposit for their redemption, and those notes being included in the outstanding legal-tender notes. Omitting these certificates of deposits as offset by the notes held on deposit for their redemption, the actual reduction of the principal of the debt was $41,552,524.77."

(Note on page 9:)

"In the amount here stated as the outstanding principal of the public debt are included the certificates of deposits outstanding on the 30th of June, issued under act of June 8, 1872, amounting to $31,730,000 in 1873, and $58,760,000 in 1874, for which a like amount in United States notes was on special deposit in the Treasury for their redemption, and added to the cash balance in the Treasury. These certificates, as a matter of accounts, are treated as a part of the public debt, but, being offset by notes held on deposit for their redemption, should properly be deducted from the principal of the public debt in making comparisons with former years."

The outstanding principal of the public debt June 30, 1873, was, as stated.....	$2,234,482,993 20
To which add accrued interest.....	42,356,652 82
		$2,276,839,646 02
And deduct cash in the Treasury—
Coin.....	$87,507,402 68
Currency.....	9,783,529 77
Special deposit held for redemption of certificates of deposit as provided by law.....	31,730,000 00
		$129,020,932 45
Debt, less cash in the Treasury July 1, 1873.....		2,147,818,713 57
Deduct this amount from the outstanding debt, less cash in the Treasury July 1, 1872.....		2,191,486,343 62
Leaves the net decrease of the debt for the year.....		43,667,630 05

(See page 5 of the finance report of 1873.)

The outstanding principal of the public debt June 30, 1874, was, as already stated.....	$2,251,690,468 43
To which add accrued interest.....	38,939,087 47
		$2,290,629,555 90
And deduct cash in the Treasury.....		147,541,314 74
Debt, less cash in the Treasury July 1, 1874.....		2,143,088,241 16
Deduct this amount from the outstanding debt, less cash in the Treasury July 1, 1873.....		$2,147,818,713 57
Showing a decrease during the year of.....		4,730,472 41

Additional discrepancies.

The honorable Senator from West Virginia, in his speech of the 24th of January, 1876, pointed out the following additional discrepancies:

The report for 1866 states the net revenue collected for the year 1862 at.....		$51,935,720 76
The report for 1870 at.....		51,907,944 62
Showing a decrease of.....		27,776 14
which is explained as follows:
Premium on 7 3-10 loan of 1861, included in receipts from loans and Treasury notes for the year 1862 ...	$68,400 00
Unavailables, (receipts and expenditures 1863, page 24,) not included in the report of 1866.....	11,110 81
		79,510 81
Less trust funds excluded from the report of 1862.....		51,734 67
Difference explained.....		27,776 14

The report for 1866 states the net revenue collected for the year 1863 at $112,687,290.95, the correct amount being.....		$112,697,290 95
The report for 1870 at.....		74,448,157 55
Showing a difference of.....		38,249,133 40
which is composed of the following items, (as before shown,) tabulated in the report of 1870, under the head of loans and Treasury notes, namely:
Internal revenue.....		$37,640,787 95
Profit on certificates of indebtedness redeemed before maturity...		20,425 00
Premium on three-year 7 3-10 bonds.....		581,926 44
And unavailables, not included in the report of 1866, (see receipts and expenditures for 1863, page 22).....		6,000 01
Difference explained.....		38,249,133 40

The report for 1866 states the net revenue collected for the year 1864 at.....		$264,626,771 60
The report for 1870 at.....		262,742,354 32
Showing a decrease of.....		1,884,417 28
which consists of the following items, tabulated in the report of 1866 under net revenue, and in the report of 1870 under receipts from loans and Treasury notes. (See receipts and expenditures for 1864, page 26.)
Premium on 1881 bonds of the loan of 1863.....		$1,675,343 70
Premium on 10.40 bonds, loan of 1864.....		160,163 79
Deduction of 4 per cent. on the redemption of Texan indemnity bonds.....		39,699 39
And unavailables not included in the report of 1866.....		9,210 40
Difference explained.....		1,884,417 28

The report of 1866 states the net revenue for the year 1865 at.....		$333,714,605 08
The report for 1870 at.....		323,092,785 92
Showing a decrease of.....		10,621,819 16
which consists of the following amounts included in the report of 1870 under the head of "loans and treasury notes," (see receipts and expenditures for 1865, page xl:)
Premium on 1881 bonds.....		$1,590,012 28
Accrued interest on 10.40 bonds.....		829,637 65
Difference of exchange on the sterling fund.....		3,047,027 83
Sale of gold coin, act of March 17, 1862.....		3,335,000 00
Premium on 5.20 bonds, June 30, 1864.....		1,794,046 29
And unavailables (receipts and expenditures 1866, page lxxviii) not included in the report of 1866.....		6,095 11
Difference explained.....		10,621,819 16

Public-debt statement from 1836 to 1860.

In the financial report for 1869 and prior years the outstanding debt is stated for the following years:

January 1, 1836.....	$291,089 05
January 1, 1837.....	1,878,223 35
January 1, 1838.....	4,857,660 46
January 1, 1841.....	6,737,398 00
January 1, 1842.....	15,028,486 37
July 1, 1843.....	27,203,450 69
July 1, 1858.....	44,910,777 66
July 1, 1859.....	58,754,699 33
July 1, 1860.....	64,769,703 03

In the financial report for 1870 and subsequent years the outstanding debt is stated for the following years:

December 1, 1835	$37,513 05
December 1, 1836	336,957 83
December 1, 1837	3,308,124 07
December 1, 1840	5,250,875 54
December 1, 1842	13,594,480 73
June 30, 1843	32,742,922 00
June 30, 1858	44,911,881 03
June 30, 1859	58,496,837 88
June 30, 1860	64,842,287 88

The differences between these two statements are fully explained in the following comparative tables:

Statement of the increase of the public debt in the years 1836, 1837, 1838, 1841, 1842, 1843, 1858, 1859, and 1860, showing the net difference between the "receipts and expenditures" account and the "issues and redemptions" account.

Date.	Debt.	Increase.	Net increase.
RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES.
December 31, 1835	.....	*$37,513 05
December 31, 1836	$336,957 83	299,444 78
December 31, 1837	3,308,124 07	2,971,166 24
December 31, 1840	5,250,875 54	1,942,751 47
December 31, 1841	13,594,480 73	8,343,605 19
June 30, 1843	32,742,922 00	19,148,441 27
June 30, 1858	44,911,881 03	12,168,959 03
June 30, 1859	58,496,837 88	13,584,956 85
June 30, 1860	64,842,287 88	6,345,450 00
			$64,842,287 88
ISSUES AND REDEMPTIONS.
January 1, 1836	.....	*291,089 05
January 1, 1837†	1,878,222 55	1,587,134 50
January 1, 1838†	4,857,660 46	2,979,436 91
January 1, 1841†	6,737,398 00	1,879,737 54
January 1, 1842†	15,028,486 37	8,291,088 37
July 1, 1843†	27,203,450 69	12,174,964 32
July 1, 1858	44,910,777 66	17,707,326 97
July 1, 1859	58,754,699 33	13,843,921 67
July 1, 1860	64,769,703 08	6,015,003 75
			64,769,703 08
Difference	.....	.....	72,584 80

*The item of "interest on old debt" is not included in the outstanding in the "receipts and expenditures" account until 1837:

Principal—Old unfunded debt	$27,437 96
Old Treasury notes	5,755 00
Mississippi stock	4,320 09
		$37,513 05
Unclaimed interest and principal of old debt. (See finance report, volume 3, 1829–1836, page 629)		253,576 00
		291,089 05

†In the "issues and redemptions account" the outstanding of the debt of the cities of Washington, Georgetown, and Alexandria, assumed per act of May 20, 1836, is included, namely:

1837	$1,500,000
1838	1,500,000
1841	1,440,000
1842	1,380,000
1843	1,320,000

This different or apparent increase of the debt as shown in the finance report for 1870 consists of the following items:

Amounts included in the "receipts and expenditures" account, which had been excluded from the "issues and redemptions" account:
Mexican indemnity	$1,104 91
Bounty-land scrip	8,775 00
Interest on "old debt"	7,714 33
Also, "Treasury notes" of 1857 redeemed, but not reimbursed within the year	311,664 11
		$329,258 35
Less the Texas debt included in the "issues and redemptions" account, but not in the "receipts and expenditures" account	$191,016 99
Also the following items heretofore explained:
Purloined notes paid under act of August 10, 1846	23,238 76
Discount on loan of 1842	42,417 80
		$256,673 55
Difference explained		72,584 80

In reply to the charge that "in the year 1870, there was an apparent reduction of the public debt of over $100,000,000, (according to the finance report,) but this reduction was in a great measure only apparent and due to a stroke of the pen, a mere transfer of about $60,000,000 to another table, [that] the country gave credit to the Administration for the large decrease of the public debt during this year, when in fact the larger part of it was due to the change in book-keeping and the Secretary's new tables," it is only necessary to state that the outstanding public debt on

on July 1, 1869, (see finance report of 1869, page 29,) was	$2,656,603,955 73
From which was excluded the item of Pacific Railroad bonds	58,638,320 00
Leaving the amount	2,597,965,635 73
The outstanding debt on the 1st of July, 1870, (see finance report of 1870, page 44) was	2,480,304,797 74
Which shows a decrease for the year, exclusive of the item of Pacific Railroad bonds, of	117,660,837 99

A.—Statement of trust funds and unavailables not included in the balance in the Treasury as published in the finance reports.

	Receipts.	Expenditures.	Balance.
Balances of trust funds as per finance report 1837–1844, volume 4, page 599, December 31, 1841	$374,521 18	.....	$374,521 18
1842	321,042 85	$223,947 48	471,616 55
1843	.....	.....	.....
1843, balance in hands of J. Campbell, U. S. Treasurer	237,376 63 23,702 01	321,575 19	411,120 00
1844	816,855,70	543,649 63	684,326 07
1845	172,720 34	499,095 26	357,951 15
1846	184,009 99	95,100 44	447,760 70
1847	182,614 76	296,738 24	333,637 22
1848	314,439 06	189,841 24	458,235 04
1849	133,795 48	224,817 63	367,212 89
1850	248,017 85	216,736 81	398,493 93
1851	244,898 68	153,263 79	490,128 82
1852	93,781 41	267,829 57	316,080 66
1853	449,480 18	553,517 24
1853, unavailables	.....	103,301 37	108,741 83
1853, error in receipts	.....	40
1854	250,636 20	251,127 12	108,250 91
1855	146,644 13	188,011 74	66,883 30
1856	138,557 78	236,652 43	*31,211 35
1857	333,798 90	215,688 86	56,898 69
1858	97,796 37	103,853 45	50,841 61
1859	81,394 63	21,908 32	* 94,919 58
1859, unavailables	.....	15,408 34
1860	87,773 94	98,245 67	84,447 85
1861	164,946 57	110,710 42	138,684 00
1862	51,734 67	17,040 75	162,267 11
1862, unavailables	.....	11,110 81
1863	1,297,524 47	30,729 59	1,423,061 98
1863, unavailables	.....	6,000 01
1864	3,994,054 16	88,554 11	5,319,351 63
1864, unavailables	.....	9,210 40
1865	4,146,718 42	7,242,242 00	2,217,732 94
1865, unavailables	.....	6,095 11
Total	14,589,736 36	12,372,003 42	2,217,732 94
Balance in the Treasury as per finance report July 1, 1865, pages 2 and 32	.....	.....	858,309 15
Balance in the Treasury as per receipts and expenditures July 1, 1865	.....	.....	3,076,042 09

*Excess of expenditures over receipts.

B.—State of the Treasury, by quarters, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1862.

	Quarter ending September 30, 1861.	Quarter ending December 31, 1861.	Quarter ending March 31, 1862.	Quarter ending June 30, 1862.	Total.	Balances.
Balance in Treasury on July 1, 1861	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	$2,257,065 80
RECEIPTS.
Five-twenty years bonds, per act of February 25, 1862	.....	.....	.....	$13,990,600 00	$13,990,600 00
Treasury notes	.....	.....	.....	98,620,000 00	98,620,000 00
Customs	$7,198,602 55	$8,309,066 47	$14,618,558 44	18,930,170 16	49,056,397 62
Direct tax	.....	.....	.....	1,795,331 73	1,795,331 73
Sales of public lands	35,967 03	39,658 46	27,019 74	49,558 54	152,203 77
Incidental	318,095 86	172,316 22	182,268 05	259,107 51	931,787 64
Three years coupon bonds, at 7 3-10 per cent	50,125,385 87	91,790,267 23	10,670,598 24	13,825,925 00	166,412,585 34
United States notes, payable on demand	15,620,000 00	18,480,000 00	25,900,000 00	30,000 00	60,030,000 00
Treasury notes issued under acts of June 22, 1860, authorized by act of March 2, 1861	14,019,034 66	.....	.....	.....	14,019,034 66
Sixty-day Treasury notes, issued per act of March 2, 1861	12,877,750 00	18,600 00	.....	.....	12,896,350 00
Loan under act of February 8, 1861	55,257 50	.....	.....	.....	55,257 50
Stock for the Washington and Oregon war debt	21,850 00	483,000 00	297,000 00	198,850 00	1,000,700 00
Treasury notes issued per acts of February 8 and March 2, 1861	3,500 00	.....	.....	.....	3,500 00

B.—State of the Treasury, by quarters, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1862—Continued.

	Quarter ending September 30, 1861.	Quarter ending December 31, 1861.	Quarter ending March 31, 1862.	Quarter ending June 30, 1862.	Total.	Balances.
Loan of November 16, 1861, authorized by acts of July 17 and August 5, 1861		$24,294,129 17	$22,009,000 00		$46,303,129 17
Temporary loan, authorized by act of February 25, 1862			20,291,619 43	$46,187,704 67	66,479,324 10
Certificates of indebtedness, authorized by acts of March 1 and 17, 1862			5,629,000 00	44,252,979 73	49,881,979 73
Total	$100,275,443 47	143,587,446 55	99,625,063 90	238,140,227 34	581,628,181 26	$581,628,181 26
						583,885,247 06
Trust funds:
Smithsonian Institution		5,203 85	4,663 85		9,867 70
Navy pension fund	6,103 69			22,609 34	28,713 03
Chickasaw fund				13,153 94	13,153 94
Total	100,281,547 16	143,592,650 40	99,629,727 75	238,175,990 62	581,679,915 93
EXPENDITURES.
Civil: foreign intercourse and miscellaneous	6,140,774 05	4,733,406 70	4,506,133 16	6,028,177 25	21,408,491 16
Interior: pensions and Indians	1,124,825 92	469,062 80	782,845 95	726,250 83	3,102,985 50
War	58,345,125 68	84,663,389 32	90,925,048 46	160,434,843 90	394,368,407 36
Navy	9,799,303 33	9,779,238 44	8,277,421 38	14,818,606 54	42,674,569 69
Interest on public debt, including Treasury notes	202,032 61	3,738,526 36	5,283,699 36	3,966,046 12	13,190,324 45
Re-imbursement of Treasury notes issued per act prior to December 23, 1857		50 00			50 00
Payment of Treasury notes issued per act of December 23, 1857	1,836,100 00	203,300 00	426,900 00	101,400 00	2,567,700 00
Payment of Treasury notes issued per act of December 17, 1860	400 00	429,000 00	9,540,350 00	*33,600 00	9,936,150 00
Payment of Treasury notes issued per act of March 2, 1861	10,541,100 00	12,430,050 00	6,842,550 00	792,450 00	3,060,150 00
Redemption of Treasury notes which have been purloined	51 50				51 50
Re-imbursement of temporary loan, per acts of July 1 and August 5, 1861	10,250,000 00	28,500,000 00	5,625,000 00		44,375,000 00
Re-imbursement of temporary loan, per acts of February 25 and March 17, 1862			1,415,215 00	7,137,992 53	8,553,207 53
Payment of interest on old funded debt			3 06		3 06
Redemption of United States notes issued under act of July 17, 1861				58,610 00	58,610 00
Total	98,239,733 09	144,946,023 62	133,625,166 37	194,030,777 17	570,841,700 25	$570,841,700 25
Trust-funds:
Awards
Chickasaw fund				20,000,00	20,000 00
Choctaw schools				319 91	319 91
Navy pension-fund	*15 00	1,588 84	150 00	1,289 60	3,013 44
Navy hospital-fund	*783 86	1,625 18	*22,200 37	15,066 45	*6,292 60
Total	98,238,934 23	144,949,237 64	133,603,116 00	194,067,453 13	570,858,741 00
Balance in the Treasury June 30, 1862						13,043,546 81

*Represent repayments.

C.—State of the Treasury, by quarters, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1863.

	Quarter ending September 30, 1862.	Quarter ending December 31, 1862.	Quarter ending March 31, 1863.	Quarter ending June 30, 1863.	Total.	Balances.
Balance in the Treasury on July 1, 1862						$13,043,546 81
RECEIPTS.
Customs	$23,041,736 59	$13,354,505 41	$15,443,531 37	$17,219,869 03	$69,059,642 40
Sales of public lands	22,181 04	5,428 38	30,431 22	109,576 53	167,617 17
Direct tax	83,681 77	1,038,407 94	183,606 10	179,407 80	1,485,103 61
Internal revenue	456,303 73	7,180,446 22	15,765,689 28	14,238,348 72	37,640,787 95
Incidental	561,079 08	1,219,097 11	395,908 37	870,530 79	3,046,615 35
United States postage-stamps	787,800 00	6,057,136 00	12,076,564 00	1,276,956 00	20,192,456 00
Two-year 6 per cent. Treasury notes, per act of March 2, 1861	1,500 00		122 00		1,622 00
Seven-thirty three-year coupon bonds, per acts of July 17 and August 5, 1861	3,500,000 00	13,713,450 00			17,263,450 00
United States notes, per act of February 25, 1862	72,436,000 00	53,796,000 00	106,748,000 00	58,280,000 00	291,260,000 00
Certificates of indebtedness, per acts of March 1 and 17, 1862	12,184,824 43	54,220,437 49	56,694,000 00	34,380,000 00	157,479,261 92
Five-twenty year bonds, per act of February 25, 1862	2,539,803 45	8,740,802 16	7,172,900 00	156,583,753 83	175,037,259 44
Stock for Washington and Oregon war debt	145,050 00				145,050 00
Temporary loans, per acts of February 25 and March 17, 1862	22,813,843 14	36,992,211 74	20,383,790 43	35,036,916 90	115,226,762 21
Six per cent. twenty-year bonds, per act of July 17, 1861				76,500 00	76,500 00
Total	138,623,803 23	196,317,922 45	234,888,542 77	318,251,859 60	888,082,128 05	888,082,128 05
						901,125,674 86
Trust-funds:
Smithsonian Institution	22,663 85		2,682 00		25,345 85
Navy pension fund	76,719 41	531,455 80	217,033 18	446,970 23	1,272,178 62
Total	138,723,186 49	196,849,378 25	235,108,257 95	318,698,829 83	889,379,652 52
EXPENDITURES.
Civil: Foreign intercourse and miscellaneous	4,436,907 32	4,902,446 27	7,138,899 10	6,775,669 48	23,253,922 08
Interior: Pensions and Indians	1,046,906 42	689,257 06	929,162 72	1,551,194 59	4,216,520 79
War	90,869,850 23	131,781,557 31	204,408,690 73	172,238,502 56	599,298,600 83
Navy	10,076,353 91	11,901,649 38	16,705,864 05	24,527,237 93	63,211,105 27
Interest on public debt, including Treasury notes	4,654,428 87	5,558,096 77	5,930,816 32	8,586,504 65	24,729,846 61
Payment of Treasury notes, issued per act of December 23, 1857	14,300 00	200 00	33,300 00	10,800 00	58,600 00
Payment of Treasury notes, issued per act of December 17, 1860	4,500 00	400 00	3,100 00	700 00	8,700 00
Payment of Treasury notes, issued per act of March 2, 1861	22,550 00	33,300 00	116,950 00	1,971,550 00	2,144,350 00
Redemption of 7 3-10 coupon bonds, per act of July 17, 1861	2,000 00	50,000 00		19,500 00	71,500 00
Redemption of United States notes, per act of July 17, 1861	27,682,490 00	16,163,900 00	10,750,000 00	1,581,000 00	56,177,390 00
Redemption of United States notes, per act of February 25, 1862	2,000,000 00			99,000 00	2,099,000 00
Redemption of certificates of indebtedness, per acts of March 1 and 17, 1862	5,885,000 00	756,000 00	30,000 00	43,688,758 23	50,359,758 23
Redemption of United States stock, Washington and Oregon war debt		64,250 00	5,300 00		69,550 00

C.—State of the Treasury, by quarters, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1863—Continued.

	Quarter ending September 30, 1862.	Quarter ending December 31, 1862.	Quarter ending March 31, 1863.	Quarter ending June 30, 1863.	Total.	Balances.
Re-imbursement of temporary loan, per acts of February 25 and March 17, 1862	$9,913,510 66	$24,820,507 99	$11,212,709 82	$21 570,271 01	$67,516,993 48
Re-imbursement of Treasury notes, issued under acts prior to July 22, 1846	50 00				50 00
Redemption of stock, loan of 1842			2,348,263 36	232,480 00	2,580,743 36
Total	156,608,847 41	196,721,564 78	259,613,050 01	282,853,168 45	895,796,630 65	$895,796,630
Trust funds:
Awards	3,043 31				3,043 31
Cherokee schools			88 83	12,977 04	13,065 87
Navy pension fund	*133 09	1,573 13	455 00	*1,267 00	3,162 04
Kansas schools			600 00		600 00
Navy hospital fund	26,664 41	*8,468 69	2,841 08	*10,178 43	10,858 37
Total	156,638,422 04	196,714,669 22	259,617,034 92	282,857,234 06	895,827,360 24
Balance in the Treasury June 30, 1863						$5,329,044 21

* Represent repayments.

D.—State of the Treasury, by quarters, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864.

	Quarter ending September 30, 1863.	Quarter ending December 31, 1863.	Quarter ending March 31, 1864.	Quarter ending June 30, 1864.	Total.	Balances.
Balance in the Treasury July 1, 1863						$5,329,044 21
RECEIPTS.
Customs	$22,562,018 42	$23,211,520 86	$27,439,614 13	$29,102,959 58	$102,316,152 99
Sales of public lands	136,182 09	170,503 45	131,882 92	149,764 83	588,333 29
Direct tax		14,035 06	307,166 68	64,447 22	475,648 96
Internal revenue	17,599,713 59	27,262,631,26	27,685,212 45	37,193,576 80	109,741,134 10
Incidental	641,542 04	1,912,529 09	12,527,351 39	32,430,025 58	47,511,448 10
Fractional currency		598,749 50	3,057,262 50	4,513,709 25	8,169,721 25
United States notes, per act of February 25, 1862	15,452,000 00	49,099,730 00	4,766,260 00	17,102,880 00	86,420,870 00
Five-twenty-year bonds, per act of February 25, 1862	84,639,628 51	161,480,438 31	75,400,006 45	31,210 14	321,551,283 41
Certificates of indebtedness, per acts of March 1 and 17, 1862	14,865,000 00	32,161,000 00	56,649,000 00	65,504,000 00	169,179,000 00
Temporary loans, per acts of February 25 and March 17, 1862	32,690,013 84	14,758,923 23	29,696,784 57	92,072,323 17	169,218,044 81
Six per cent. 20-year bonds, per act of July 17, 1861	241,500 00	479,599 52	1,594,675 93	28,250,100 00	30,565,875 45
Two-year 5 per cent. interest-bearing notes, per act of March 3, 1863	13,000,000 00	36,500,000 00	92,495,893 01	24,484,106 99	166,480,000 00
One-year 5 per cent. interest-bearing notes, per act of March 3, 1863			27,400,000 00	17,120,000 00	44,520,000 00
Ten-forty-year bonds, per act of March 3, 1864				73,337,680 00	73,337,680 00
Six per cent. compound-interest notes, per act of March 3, 1863				17,250,000 00	17,250,000 00
Six per cent. 1881 bonds, per act of March 3, 1863				42,141,771,05	42,141,771 05
	201,827,598 49	347,649,660 28	359,241,150 03	480,748,554 61	1,389,466,963 41	1,389,466,963 41
Trust funds:						1,394,796,007 62
Smithsonian Institution	22,316 75		2,682 00		24,998 75
Navy pension fund	76,840 72	1,148,876 77	1,721,630 61	979,978 60	3,927,326 70
Chickasaw fund	34,330 63		7,398 08		41,728 71
Total	201,961,086 59	348,798,537 05	360,972,860 72	481,728,533 21	1,393,461,017 57
EXPENDITURES.
Civil: Foreign intercourse and miscellaneous	7,216,939 31	6,284,576 59	7,608,396 91	6,395,686 65	27,505,599 46
Interior: Pensions and Indians	1,711,271 95	1,648,203 79	2,701,404 37	1,457,050 86	7,517,930 97
War	144,387,473 97	163,366,855 10	193,477,740 69	189,559,773 21	690,791,842 97
Navy	18,511,618 86	23,982,891 03	17,731,436 70	25,507,346 18	85,733,292 77
Interest on the public debt, including Treasury notes	4,283,628 37	17,349,958 58	9,287,115 82	22,764,718 92	53,685,421 69
Redemption of stock, loan of 1842	60,000 00	16,800 00	3,000 00	26,012 30	105,812 30
Redemption of stock, Washington and Oregon war debt	5,300 00				5,300 00
Redemption of stock, 7 3-10 coupon bonds, per act of July 17, 1861	6,000 00		681,500 00		687,500 00
Redemption of United States notes, per act of July 17, 1861	1,258,500 00	967,742 25	392,095 25	274,090 00	2,892,427 50
Redemption of United States notes, per act of February 25, 1862	337,279 60	672,053 90	13,220,819 23	28,330,896 41	42,561,048 54
Redemption of certificates of indebtedness, per acts of March 1 and 17, 1862	12,345,804 16	56,881,437 49	61,818,000 00	34,035,000 00	165,080,241 65
Redemption of postage and other stamps, per act of July 17, 1862	1,299,600 00	1,927,545 85	806,507 85	991,246 30	5,024,900 00
Redemption of Treasury notes issued under acts prior to December 23, 1857		50 00			50 00
Payment of Treasury notes, per act of December 23, 1857	800 00	700 00	500 00		2,000 00
Payment of Treasury notes, per act of March 2, 1861	104,350 00	1,614,000 00	74,650 00	70,400 00	1,863,400 00
Re-imbursement of temporary loans, per acts of February 25 and March 17, 1862	27,203,017 44	82,547,267 22	21,934,305 71	65,615,143 67	197,299,734 04
Redemption of fractional currency, per act of March 3, 1863			206,400 00	236,000 00	442,400 00
Redemption of 2-year 5 per cent. Treasury notes, per act of March 3, 1863				13,615,200 00	13,615,200 00
Redemption of 3-year 6 per cent. compound-interest notes, per act of March 3, 1863				2,250,000 00	2,250,000 00
Redemption of Texan indemnity stock, per act of September 9, 1850				992,000 00	992,000 00
	218,731,583 06	357,260,081 80	329,943,872 53	392,120,564 50	1,298,056,101 89	1,298,056,101 89
Trust funds:
Navy pension fund	120 00	1,487 06	20 00	15,184 18	16,811 24
Chickasaw fund	24,999 96	28,022 40	7,078 80	7,398 08	67,499 24
Navy hospital fund	5,735 88	*3,868 82	10,583 36	*19,748 52	*7,298 10
Cherokee school fund			96 29		96 29
Choctaw school fund			11,445 44		11,445 44
Total	218,762,438 90	357,285,722 44	329,973,096 42	392,123,398 34	1,298,144,656 00
Balance in the Treasury June 30, 1864						96,739,905 73

* Repayments.

E.—State of the Treasury, by quarters, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865.

	Quarter ending September 30, 1864.	Quarter ending December 31, 1864.	Quarter ending March 31, 1865.	Quarter ending June 30, 1865.	Total.	Balances.
Balance in the Treasury on 1st July, 1864						$96, 739, 905 73
RECEIPTS.
Customs	$19, 271, 091 96	$15, 123, 928 78	$20, 518, 852 54	$30, 014, 387 32	$84, 928, 260 60
Sales of public lands	342, 185 84	287, 835 26	102, 010 47	204, 521 74	996, 553 31
Direct tax	16, 079 86	843, 380 34	52, 714 81	288, 398 02	1, 200, 573 03
Internal revenue	46, 562, 859 92	55, 129, 731 76	65, 262, 803 28	42, 508, 820 29	209, 464, 215 25
Incidental	9, 020, 171 44	9, 295, 852 44	4, 159, 223 73	7, 148, 036 86	29, 623, 284 47
Fractional currency, per act of March 3, 1863	4, 340, 789 15	2, 426, 825 50	3, 691, 647 75	4, 155, 291 75	14, 614, 563 15
6 per cent. 20-year bonds, per act of July 17, 1861	78, 963, 524 55	17, 560, 900 00	12, 002, 900 00	46, 200 00	108, 573, 524, 55
United States notes, per act of February 25, 1862	3, 355, 820 00	804, 010 00			4, 159, 830 00
5-20 year bonds, per act of February 25, 1862	201, 357 15	51, 300 00			252, 657 15
Temporary loans, per act of February 25, 1862, and March 17, 1862	21, 198, 951 97	28, 956, 953 18	22, 746, 038 46	58, 536, 129 25	131, 438, 072 86
Certificates of indebtedness, per act of March 1 and 17, 1862	85, 471, 200 63	36, 067, 000 00	68, 000 00	8, 769, 000 00	130, 975, 200 63
6 per cent. 1881 bonds, per act of March 3, 1863	31, 848, 763 23	183, 165 99	1, 126 01	142, 750 00	32, 175, 805 23
10-40 year bonds, per act of March 3, 1864	6, 910, 680 50	36, 486, 469 50	56, 161, 250 01		99, 558, 400 01
6 per cent. compound-interest notes, per acts of March 3, 1863, and June 3, 1864	88, 073, 440 00	20, 460, 000 00	5, 780, 700 00	65, 900, 000 00	180, 214, 140 00
7 3-10 3 year Treasury-notes, per act of June 30, 1864	56, 491, 400 00	54, 350, 850 00	185, 082, 382 79	363, 975, 767 64	659, 900, 401 43
5-20 year bonds, (6 per cent.,) per act of June 30, 1864		77, 058, 250 25	9, 000 00	17, 639, 000 00	94, 706, 250 25
7 3-10 3 year Treasury-notes, per act of March 3, 1865				15, 655, 895 59	15, 655, 895 59
Gold coin purchased, per act of March 17, 1862, (first section)				3, 355, 000 00	3, 355, 000 00
Total	452, 068, 325 20	355, 686, 453 00	375, 698, 650 85	618, 339, 198 46	1, 801, 792, 627 51	1, 801, 792, 627 51
Trust funds:						1, 898, 532, 533 24
Smithsonian Institution	2, 682 00		2, 682 00		5, 364 00
Navy pension fund	815, 645 42	1, 006, 090 34	1, 538, 027 70	764, 612 28	4, 124, 375 74
Chickasaw fund	7, 191 43	1, 830 00	6, 127 25	1, 830 00	16, 978 68
Total	452, 893, 844 05	356, 694, 373 34	377, 245, 487 80	619, 105, 640 74	1, 805, 938, 345 93
EXPENDITURES.
Civil, foreign intercourse, and miscellaneous	3, 712, 422 51	7, 735, 941 82	10, 952, 397 15	12, 271, 896 53	39, 692, 658 01
Interior, (pensions and Indians)	4, 935, 179 29	2, 292, 156 46	5, 405, 786 51	1, 625, 453 12	14, 258, 575 38
War	286, 200, 288 52	141, 088, 220 69	189, 838, 574 22	414, 196, 277 36	1, 031, 323, 360 79
Navy	33, 292, 916 49	29, 015, 964 27	27, 273, 231 27	32, 985, 664 09	122, 567, 776 12
Interest on public debt, including Treasury notes	19, 921, 054 48	11, 506, 127 85	9, 269, 717 55	36, 700, 812 12	77, 397, 712 00
Redemption of Texan indemnity stock, per act of September 9, 1850		409, 920 00		1, 221, 969 38	1, 631, 889 38
Re-imbursement of Treasury notes, per acts prior to December 23, 1857	50 00	100 00		250 00	400 00
Payment of Treasury notes, per act of December 23, 1857	1, 000 00	100 00			1, 100 00
Payment of Treasury notes, per act of March 2, 1861	10, 450 00	1, 500 00	7, 200 00	24, 400 00	43, 550 00
Redemption of United States notes, per act of July 17, 1861	243, 245 00	102, 495 00	5, 339 00	19, 500 00	370, 599 00
Redemption of 7 3-10 three-year coupon bonds, per act of July 17, 1861	106, 315, 100 00	2, 759, 250 00	14, 950 00	29, 321, 750 00	138, 411, 050 00
Redemption of postage and other stamps, per act of July 17, 1862	954, 550 40	1, 686, 733 38	1, 118, 787 46	979, 316 10	4, 739, 387 34
Redemption of stock, loan of 1842		1, 400 00			1, 400 00
Redemption of Treasury notes, per act of February 25, 1862	1, 044, 379 87	1, 586, 541 00	793, 059 00	911, 153 60	4, 335, 133 47
Re-imbursement of temporary loans, per acts of February 25 and March 17, 1862	46, 507, 680 49	19, 747, 517 98	33, 564, 751 27	18, 668, 888 45	118, 488, 838 19
Redemption of certificates of indebtedness, per acts of March 1 and 17, 1862	15, 183, 000 00	41, 307, 000 00	53, 259, 000 00	65, 078, 000 00	174, 827, 000 00
Redemption of fractional currency, per act of March 3, 1863	878, 048 00	1, 378, 762 77	2, 426, 882 57	1, 992, 670 96	6, 676, 364 30
Redemption of one-year 5 per cent. Treasury notes, per act of March 3, 1863		1, 279, 270 00	2, 921, 140 00	34, 272, 910 00	38, 473, 320 00
Redemption of two-year 5 per cent. Treasury notes, per act of March 3, 1863	57, 238, 850 00	24, 226, 050 00	12, 145, 650 00	20, 346, 700 00	113, 957, 250 00
Redemption of three-year 6 per cent. compound-interest notes, per act of June 30, 1864	743, 760 00	610, 410 00	26, 990 00	76, 900 00	1, 458, 060 00
Redemption of three-year 7 3-10 per cent. coupon Treasury notes, per act of June 30, 1864			3, 945, 900 00		3, 945, 900 00
Purchase of gold coin, per act of March 17, 1862, (first section)				5, 072, 900 11	5, 072, 900 11
Total	582, 181, 975 05	286, 755, 461 22	352, 969, 376 00	675, 767, 411 82	1, 897, 674, 224 09	1, 897, 674, 224 09
Trust funds:
Navy-pension fund	1, 999 62	5, 032, 570 26	1, 999, 899 94	12, 730 83	7, 047, 200 65
Chickasaw fund	100, 000 00	8, 629 63	13, 627 33		122, 256 96
Cherokee schools	*1, 057 42		3, 515 00	120 00	4, 692 42
Choctaw schools	*9, 695 59		6, 784 71	5, 130 00	21, 610 30
Kansas schools	1, 312 50				1, 312 50
Navy-hospital fund	28, 681 94	6, 545 04	98 13	9, 844 06	45, 169 17
Total	582, 324, 722 12	291, 803, 206 15	354, 993, 301 11	675, 795, 236 71	1, 904, 916, 466 09
Balance in the Treasury June 30, 1864						858, 309 15

* These two items properly belong to quarter ending December 31, 1864.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, May 17, 1876.

SIR: Referring to the letter which I had the honor to address to you on the 4th instant, in response to yours of February 9, transmitting a copy of a resolution adopted in the Senate of the United States January 24, 1876, instructing the Committee on Finance to investigate the books and accounts of the Treasury Department, with reference to alleged discrepancies and alterations in amounts and figures, especially in the annual statements of the expenditures of the Government, revenue collected, public debt, &c., I beg leave further to state that the tabulated statement of the receipts of the United States Government for each fiscal year, from March 4, 1789, to 1875, inclusive, and of the expenditures of the same for the same period, to be found on pages 10, 12, 14, and 16, respectively, of the finance report for 1875, classified under appropriate heads, showing the revenues received into the Treasury and the expenditures made therefrom, was first published in the finance report of 1863. (See pages 240 to 243, inclusive.)

Prior to the commencement of the publication of these tabulated statements, nearly all the information given of the condition of the Treasury was communicated each year in the text of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress for such year. (See finance report for fiscal year 1878, pages 1 to 10, inclusive, and statement No. 1, showing, under four separate heads, the receipts of the Government and the expenditures, classified under a very few heads; see pages 26 to 30 inclusive, of same volume.) These last two statements were invariably made up from the amount of warrants issued on the Treasurer.

There has been prepared, however, and transmitted to Congress, under an order of the House of Representatives, passed December 30, 1791, an account of the receipts and expenditures of the United States for each fiscal year. This account is a transcript of the account, as settled by the accounting officers of the Treasury, of moneys received and paid out by the Treasurer on warrants covering moneys into the Treasury and on warrants drawn on him and by him paid.

As before stated, the statements contained in the finance report were made up at the close of the year, and represented, in every instance, the amount of warrants drawn against appropriations during such year, and therefore charged as an expenditure of the year, although such warrants may not have actually been paid until some time during the succeeding fiscal year, and in many instances they have not been paid until after the expiration of several years from the date of their issue.

In fact, in the immense disbursements made by the Treasury during the war, the amount of the outstanding warrants grew to be very large. The drafts issued on such warrants were used as commercial paper, and being a Government obligation, and therefore more desirable than the drafts of individuals, they were retained in the possession of persons into whose hands they came, and were not presented for payment until the money which they represented was absolutely needed. For these reasons, it was found almost impossible to settle the accounts of the Treasurer without legislation on the subject; and, therefore, on the 2d of May, 1866, Congress passed a law to facilitate the settlements of accounts of the Treasurer of the United States, and provided that any draft issued upon a warrant which had been outstanding and unpaid for three years or more should be covered back into the Treasury by warrant, to the credit of the party in whose favor it had been originally issued and to an appropriation account to be denominated "outstanding liabilities."

It will therefore be seen, from what has been stated, that the statements which have exhibited the receipts and expenditures of the Government were made up from entirely different data. It had been the practice up to 1871, when the Treasurer's accounts had been settled and the amount of money which he had paid out on warrants ascertained, to change the items of expenditures in the accounts in the tabular statements of receipts and expenditures, which, as has already been stated, were made up from warrants issued, so as to make them conform to the accounts of receipts and expenditures, or the Treasurer's accounts of expenditures by warrants actually paid. The first account, therefore, would be changed whenever the Treasurer's account was settled and the amount of outstanding unpaid warrants ascertained.

A table showing some of the changes which have been made, and which will serve as an illustration, is herewith inclosed.

The alleged discrepancies in the different statements made have arisen solely from the different data upon which such statements have been based. As has already been shown, what are technically known in the Department as "outstanding warrants," are one of the elements of such discrepancies. The "unavailable balances," by which is meant the amount of money which has been lost by defalcations of officers, and therefore not subject to draft, is another. Another element are what are known as "trust-fund accounts." Some years they have been included in the statements, and in other years omitted. This class of accounts represents chiefly moneys which the Government has held from time to time as a trustee, and they relate principally to the trust funds held for various Indian tribes. It is to be presumed that, in making up the tabular statements, the person in charge of the work took it for granted that as these moneys were not really moneys of the United States, they should not be included in the account.

In view of the fact that the difference between the statement made by warrants issued and of that made by warrants paid arose to a great extent from a difference in dates, (inasmuch as the warrants issued but not paid within the year in which they were issued would be ultimately paid, and when so paid, and the report in which they were included as not paid was changed, that no difference would then exist,) it is presumed it was thought far better to adopt a uniform rule, so that discrepancies apparent and not real should disappear from future statements, and especially so, because the statement made from warrants paid related solely to the personal accountability of the Treasurer, an account subsequently audited by the accounting officers of the Treasury; and, also, because it was an account ordered to be published by the House of Representatives in 1791, and at a time when no other statements of the public accounts were made.

Besides this, the books of the Department were originally designed to show the accounts of the expenditures by warrants issued, and not by the account which was ordered to be published by the House of Representatives' resolution above referred to.

From what has been said it might be inferred that two sets of accounts are kept in the Department, but such is not the case. The accounts of receipts and expenditures represented on the books of the Department are based on warrants issued. The published statement, made under the House resolution of 1791, of receipts and expenditures, is simply a copy of the Treasurer's personal accounts, based upon the warrants paid by him within the year to which it relates.

It will be seen that the alleged discrepancies referred to have chiefly arisen from the practice which has heretofore obtained of using the figures contained in the statement or personal accounts of the Treasurer, after their adjustment, in the place of those previously presented in the accounts of warrants issued—an account only ascertained one, two, or three years later than the first-named accounts are made up.

Very respectfully,

B. H. BRISTOW, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Chairman Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

Expenditures as shown by finance report and by receipts and expenditures.

	Civil.	Foreign intercourse.	Miscellaneous.
Finance report, 1850, pp. 30 to 34	$3,042,770 07	$4,838,594 76	$6,958,360 24
Receipts and expenditures, 1850, pp. 11 to 39	3,027,454 39	5,990,858,81	7,025,450 16
Finance report, 1851, pp. 21 to 25	3,478,549 24	6,217,170 30	8,177,247 71
Receipts and expenditures, 1851, pp. 13 to 45	3,481,219 51	6,256,427 16	8,146,577,33
Finance report, 1852, pp. 22 to 28	3,422,939 29	4,132,671 45	9,824,158 02
Receipts and expenditures, 1852, pp. 13 to 49	3,439,923 22	4,196,321 59	9,867,926 64

	War.	Navy.	Interior.
Finance report, 1850, pp. 30 to 34	$9,401,239,16	$7,923,313 18	$3,400,524 87
Receipts and expenditures, 1850, pp. 11 to 39	9,687,024 58	7,904,724,66	3,530,477 49
Finance report, 1851, pp. 21 to 25	11,811,792 73	8,987,797 67	5,115,334 98
Receipts and expenditures, 1851, pp. 13 to 45	12,161,965 11	8,880,581 38	5,123,178 99
Finance report, 1852, pp. 22 to 28	8,225,246 92	8,928,236 05	5,198,828 94
Receipts and expenditures, 1852, pp. 13 to 49	8,521,506 19	8,918,842 10	5,445,434 82

	Public debt.	Total.
Finance report, 1850, pp. 30 to 34	$7,437,366 41	$43,002,168 69
Receipts and expenditures, 1850, pp. 11 to 39	7,438,728 17	44,604,718 26
Finance report, 1851, pp. 21 to 25	4,217,986 70	48,065,878 68
Receipts and expenditures, 1851, pp. 13 to 45	4,426,154 83	48,476,104 31
Finance report, 1852, pp. 22 to 28	6,275,815 53	46,007,806 20
Receipts and expenditures, 1852, pp. 13 to 49	6,322,654 27	46,712,608 83

In the earlier years the Secretary did not state the condition of the Treasury by fiscal or calendar years, but very frequently from the commencement of one Congress to another or from one quarter to another.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, upon one point presented by the honorable Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS,] the nature of which will appear from my observation upon it, I desire to say that early during my administration of the Treasury I caused to be made a thorough examination of the accounts of the Treasury from the beginning and especially from the year 1836. That investigation did disclose the fact that there were errors which showed themselves in the annual statements that had been made to Congress, and especially during the period of the war, and in a degree from the close of the war until the year 1869. There were also errors that were older in date. Now, I desire that the Senate shall understand exactly what I did. There were no changes made in the books of the Department, none whatever. That has been proved by the statement of General Bristow while he was Secretary of the Treasury; it can be proved by a hundred witnesses in the Treasury. If such changes had been made, the fact could be established by a hundred witnesses who either are or have been in the Treasury Department.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me interrupt him there?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. Taking that to be as the Senator states it, as it no doubt is, what is there in the Treasury to warrant those reports made to Congress that according to the Senator's own statement do not correspond with the books of the Treasury?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I was coming to that. When this thorough examination had been made and certain errors had been disclosed which did not affect the integrity of anybody, but errors in the method of keeping the accounts, which led in some instances to erroneous results, and it became my duty to state to the country the exact facts, I had then to choose between stating those facts or repeating in the tables that were prepared under my direction errors which had previously existed, and which while the Secretary of the Treasury had no knowledge of those errors he would of course be justified in repeating in present and in subsequent reports; but when the errors came to the knowledge of the Secretary, then if any duty had rested upon him it was a duty to state the facts exactly to the country. That I attempted to do, that I think I accomplished; but it did not interfere in any way with the books of the Treasury Department, and certainly did not change a figure in a report that had been published by my predecessors.

Mr. THURMAN. Now if it will not interrupt the Senator I should like to ask right there, what then is there in the Treasury Department, except the reports that are sent to Congress, to show that there are any errors in the previous accounts kept in the Treasury Department?

Mr. BOUTWELL. There are the examinations which have been made and tables prepared; most of them have been laid before Congress; part of them in the report submitted by the honorable Senator from Ohio during the present session of Congress; but the books of the Department have not been changed.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I understand the books not having been changed the books are erroneous to this day?

Mr. BOUTWELL. They are in some respects.

Mr. THURMAN. The books are erroneous to this day, and no correction has been made in them?

Mr. BOUTWELL. No correction has been made. Bills have been presented to Congress, one bill passed I think this body during the present session to establish a new account for the disposal of items that had been lost by defalcations. I think the Finance Committee reported such a bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state to my colleague that there are $35,000,000 now shown by the books of the Treasury to be in the Treasury of the United States that were distributed among the States in 1837 or 1836 or thereabouts. That money is counted, by the mode of book-keeping, as cash in the Treasury.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the Senator from Ohio farthest from me [Mr. THURMAN] will listen I will make one statement, not in the way of criticism, but nevertheless it is a truth, that when the Government was organized a loan account was opened in the Treasury; and it is within his knowledge that the Government of the United States assumed the war debts of the States, as they were called, amounting to seventy-four or seventy-five million dollars. In the ordinary course of business, if the Government had issued bonds and sold them and obtained an amount of money for those bonds, the loan account would have been credited with that receipt and when the debt was paid the loan account would have been debited with the amount of the payment, and the two items would have balanced each other. But as matter of fact nothing was received into the Treasury and therefore no entry was made upon the credit side of the loan account; but when the loan was redeemed there was an entry made upon the debit side of the loan account, and of course there was a discrepancy. There were some other items similar in their character; but what added to the difference in the two sides of the loan account was the circumstance that at different times loans were sold below par. For instance, during Mr. Buchanan's administration a loan was sold for about eighty-five cents on the dollar. The loan account was credited with the amount received, and when the bonds were redeemed it was debited with the amount paid, and there was a discrepancy. That was stated in full in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the year 1870, I think in a table appended to the report, showing that these differences amounted in regard to the loan account to $116,000,000; yet there had never been a cent lost.

Now what I desire to state further is that in the first place an examination of these accounts was made in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury; then the matter was referred to the Register of the Treasury, who has an independent set of books kept by different clerks and under different control. The Register of the Treasury proceeded, as appears from a report, which is in print, dated December 20, 1872, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, which I will read:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Register's Office, December 20, 1872.

SIR: I have the honor to forward, herewith, a report on the public debt of the United States, from January 1, 1836, to July 1, 1871, according to the "receipts and expenditures," together with comparative statements, showing the differences between the "loan account" and the "receipts and expenditures account."

As the public debt statement prior to July 1, 1871, was always made up from the loan accounts, there was no check on "receipts from loans" and "redemptions on account of loans." As a natural result, every item of discount at which a loan was originally negotiated, all premium and interest erroneously included in the principal, and every error in charging or crediting the proper loan, has increased the discrepancies between the two accounts.

Many of these discrepancies (for they scarcely deserve the name of errors, as they do not involve accountability for the public funds) arose in the first years of the war, when the same careful attention to the proper statement of the accounts could not be given as it is possible for us to do now, assisted, as we are, by the experience of the past.

To carry out the design of your office, to have the public debt stated according to the receipts and expenditures, as well as according to the loan account, it is proposed to open a set of books in this office on the basis of this report, on which, subsequently to July 1, 1871, every warrant covering receipts from loans will be credited, and every pay warrant issued in the redemption of a loan be charged to its proper loan.

A ledger for this purpose kept in this office to correspond with the one now kept in your office will enable us to detect such errors in drawing warrants as have up to this time passed unnoticed.

That is to say, there was no check whatever, and if an error occurred in the office of the Register there was no provision or arrangement or system anywhere else by which that error would be discovered.

Although this report is only intended to supplement the labor performed in your office, the result of which is published on page 11, of the finance report for 1871, yet it has necessitated the re-examination of every account from 1836 to July 1, 1871.

All the receipts and expenditures on account of the different loans aggregated by years, are given in this report, to invite scrutiny into the accuracy of the results, to the end that absolute correctness may be attained.

Hereafter, one account will be a check on the other, and prevent errors being perpetuated.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN ALLISON, Register.

Hon. GEORGE S. BOUTWELL,
Secretary of the Treasury.

This shows that there were two independent examinations of these old accounts, one made in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury and one made in the office of the Register of the Treasury, and they were found to agree. I have ascertained this morning from the Register of the Treasury that, in consequence of the resolution introduced by the Senator from West Virginia, in both the offices, the office of the Secretary of the Treasury and the office of the Register of the Treasury, there have been during the present session of Congress independent examinations made of these two accounts from 1836 to the present time and by different clerks, and the result corresponds with each other. That is, these two examinations correspond with each other, and they both correspond with the two examinations made in 1869 and 1870. Therefore it is now to be said that there have been four independent examinations made of these accounts, and the result sustains the theory on which I proceeded in the statement submitted to the country in 1870; and I think that whatever errors there may have been, they are not justly chargeable to me or to my administration; that those errors existed in former times; and that my crime is that I undertook to ascertain where those errors were, and when I ascertained those errors I did not hesitate to state the results to the country, for there has never been any secresy about this; the statements were made in the reports of 1870 and 1871, and so on; and in fact I think even my friend, the honorable Senator from West Virginia, will admit that from the time I instituted these inquiries and made these statements there has been no evidence tending in the least degree to show that the statements are erroneous in any particular. If former statements were erroneous, as undoubtedly they were, when those facts were ascertained by the Secretary of the Treasury he had no higher duty resting upon him than to make the facts known to the country. That, I submit, is all that I have done.

Mr. THURMAN. Is there any record in the Treasury Department of this investigation into these accounts?

Mr. BOUTWELL. O, yes.

Mr. THURMAN. And the data upon which corrections were made?

Mr. BOUTWELL. All, sir.

Mr. THURMAN. In detail?

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir; I think in detail, entirely. I have no doubt all the minutes and papers have been preserved; but there have been four independent examinations.

Mr. BAYARD. I desire to make a statement. I was not in the Senate Chamber at the time of the presentation of the report made by the officers of the Treasury Department in response to the resolution which went to the Committee on Finance, originally introduced by the Senator from West Virginia but considerably modified by the Senate. The resolution was one touching a subject of great difficulty which for its proper investigation would have involved many months of labor upon the part of any committe charged with it. The Senator from West Virginia desired a special committee for that purpose, of which under the custom of the Senate he either would have been chairman or certainly a member; but it was the pleasure of the Senate to decline to have that special committee raised, and the subject was committed to the Committee on Finance, against which I both spoke in the Senate and cast my vote, and I stated to the Senator from West Virginia that I believed that with the commission of the Committee on Finance his object would not be reached. After that the matter was submitted by the chairman of the Committee on Finance to the officers of the Treasury who, after some weeks, returned to us a large roll in manuscript purporting to be a reply to the queries contained in that resolution. It was a formidable paper, not simply in its bulk but in the character of its contents, and I confess that none of us in that committee were disposed to encounter the labor of undertaking to examine it. It was, however, at the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] and myself, or one of us, submitted to the honorable Senator from West Virginia and he had it in his hands, I believe, for perhaps a week. At the end of that time it was returned to the committee, and the committee reported it to the Senate just as they had received it. They could not have verified the accuracy of those figures nor were they in any degree responsible for the accuracy of those figures; they were simply the channels of communication of the Treasury Department of a large body of statistics to the Senate under that resolution.

I state this fact, not doubting that it has been substantially stated before, but simply to give my own contribution of recollection to the truth of history on the subject. I do not suppose it is in conflict with the statement made by any one, because the matter is fresh in our minds, and I say this because I am never willing to make any charge or suggestion of a charge of irregularity or of any other default against any Department or any officer of the Government or any individual unless I am prepared to show my grounds for it. In this case the facts were unknown to me; I did not feel myself competent nor did my other duties give me the time to undertake an investigation, which, upon the most rational estimate that I could make of the labor, would have occupied me for one year and perhaps longer with the aid of efficient clerks. I say this so that the history of my connection as a member of the Committee on Finance with the resolution may distinctly and plainly appear.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not want to occupy the time of the Senate more than a very few moments. I do not propose to question the accuracy of the report made to Congress under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, now the honorable Senator from Massachusetts. I am not authorized to do that, because I have no sufficient knowledge to justify me in criticising it; but one thing strikes me as very singular indeed and as requiring observation. If I understand the Senator from Massachusetts, not one figure has been changed in the books of the Treasury Department. At the same time, if I understand him correctly, those books do not present the truth; and therefore he caused to be made to Congress a report that is not in correspondence with the books of that Department.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The Senator errs in that respect. The statements made to Congress are in correspondence, but they are made up, for example, in regard to the public debt, from the receipts and expenditures account instead of what is called the warrant account, which has been explained here in times past in this way: For instance, in the Register's Office whenever bonds pass through his Office and are handed over to the Treasurer to be sold, they are entered upon the books of his Office as a portion of the public debt and become so, although as a matter of fact they are still in the Treasury Department, and nothing has been received from the purchase of the bonds, they are still held by the Government. Nevertheless they appear on his books as a part of the public debt, because they have passed through his hands and have been registered. Therefore, in that respect, the public debt would appear larger oftentimes, but not always, from his books, than it really was. On the other hand, when the public indebtedness is paid, when bonds are redeemed or greenbacks are redeemed, the Treasurer will have paid out money due on bonds in his possession; but they would not appear upon the books of the Register of the Treasury as debts canceled and paid until the accounts of the Treasurer had passed through the Office of the First Auditor and the Comptroller, which would take always some days and sometimes weeks; and, therefore, usually the statement of the public debt by the Register would be in excess of the actual amount; not always, but very often, it would be so. It is just as we have attempted to illustrate it before, like the case of a gentleman keeping a bank account. He might look at his book and it would show a certain balance in his bank, whereas on the books of the bank it might be different, owing to the fact whether checks drawn had been presented or not. Therefore the statement of the public debt by warrants did not show exactly its condition; but the statement by receipts and expenditures did show it, and that was the change which was made in the year 1870; and since that time there has been an account kept in the Office of the Register in both ways, by warrants and by receipts and expenditures. There has been an account kept in the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury by receipts and expenditures. These accounts are kept by different persons. They are compared at the end of the quarter or at the end of the year to see whether they agree or not; and in that manner one becomes a test of the accuracy of the other, and errors are less likely to occur than they were when there was only one account kept, and that by warrants. That is the difference.

There has been no change in the books, and I may say in regard to the statement of the public debt that if you take a statement made by Mr. McCulloch during his time, when it was upon a different basis, and introduce into it the elements which were introduced by me, the result would be precisely the same. For instance, he never included earned interest as a part of the public debt which always amounted to many million dollars, and sometimes to at least $30,000,000, which was as much a part of the public debt as the principal itself. That was one of the alterations that I made in the statement of the public debt. It did not change facts, but it presented, as I believed, the facts to the country precisely as they existed.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, the Senator has confined himself mainly or entirely to the subject of the public debt. The Senator from West Virginia has called our attention not simply to the accounts of the public debt, but to the accounts of receipts and expenditures, and not simply to receipts and expeditures generally, but to special subjects, as pension accounts for example.

Now let us see how these matters stand. It is not necessary to say what the mode of keeping books is in this famous report of 1871. I understand the fact to be, according to the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, that the books of the Treasury before 1871 did not show the true state either of the public debt or of the receipts and expenditures of the Government. That I understand, and hence it was that he made a revised statement. Here is the glaring fact, that the system of book-keeping in the Treasury Department up to the year 1871, if I understand the Senator correctly, did not furnish to the country a correct statement of either the public debt or the receipts and expenditures of the Government.

Mr. BOUTWELL. O, no. The Senator errs in this. With the exception of a few errors which occurred from time to time and which are explained, it furnished a statement, but it was upon the basis of warrants and represented usually the debt to be greater than it actually was, because there was often debt paid which did not appear upon the books of the Register, although the Treasurer had paid the debt. There was upon the books of the Register evidence of bonds that were issued and appeared upon his books as a debt, a liability of the Government, which, as matter of fact, were still in the Treasurer's hands and for which no money had been received, and it is a matter of fact that there was nobody outside having claims against the Government for those bonds. They were still in the possession of the Government.

Mr. THURMAN. That will apply only to the loan account and not at all to the account of receipts and expenditures. And now what strikes me as singular is that upon this statement the books of the Treasury have been kept so long in such a way that they do not show of themselves and without extrinsic aid and the employment of experts the true state of the public debt or the true state of the receipts and expenditures of the Government; and yet our committee has reported that no change in the mode of book-keeping is necessary, if I understand the report. Such is their report, if I am not misinformed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state further that in the nature of things when books are kept in any way but in different offices and dealing from different times and embracing different elements, it is not possible for them to agree; and the very fact that by analyzing and taking out the different elements, comparing them they can be tested by each other, is the very highest security, and that security ought to be preserved and is preserved by the present mode. I think it would be the same with a great commercial house. In a commercial house it would not be possible from their books to show the precise state of accounts, because there may be outstanding checks, there may be unpaid notes, the final ledger may be made up as of a different date or subsequent to the journal, and therefore the accounts might differ. If the accounts of a commercial house were made up on the debits and credits in the ledger account, they might differ somewhat from the accounts made up from the journal, and both might differ from the actual fact by omitting other elements that are necessary to make the true account.

Mr. RANDOLPH. May I interrupt the Senator? I think the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] is mistaken when he says that it is not practicable in Congress to change the mode of book-keeping in the Treasury Department so that greater certainty may be had. I have the authority of the recent Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Bristow, for saying, upon an inquiry made by me to him, that the present mode of book-keeping in the Treasury Department is most unsatisfactory, unreliable, and incapable of making the detection of errors that would be made in the ordinary course of a commercial business.

Mr. SHERMAN. In his report under his sign-manual sent by him to us, he says that this mode of keeping books has grown up in the Department and he would be a bold man who would change it, and that it ought not to be changed. We have here his official statement to that effect.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I cannot help what Mr. Bristow has said in his official statement. I state on my responsibility here as a Senator that he has said to me, and in answer to a direct inquiry made on that subject, that the mode of book-keeping is unsatisfactory and that under the present mode—a fact which I knew very well without his telling me, a fact which every man acquainted with the mode of keeping books in commercial houses, in banking institutions, and every man who chooses to look at the mode of keeping these books must know—there is a capacity for the books having great errors and that the mode of ascertaining those errors must of necessity be very long and very uncertain. I was very much surprised when this whole matter was referred to the Committee on Finance, as I think I have said to some of the members that they should have reported back; that the present mode of book-keeping was substantially sufficient. I should be very glad indeed if some action should be taken by this body by which, in the future at least, we should have the security that is had by the smallest commercial house in the country. We do not have it to-day.

Mr. THURMAN. Can it be possible that a system of book-keeping can be correct and all that is required which admits of a remodeling of the whole accounts and a statement that the public debt is $200,000,000 more than it appears on the books? Can it be possible that such a system of book-keeping can be correct? My colleague says that such discrepancies occur in commercial houses. What would be said of the Bank of England if its reports showed a discrepancy of two hundred millions in regard to the liabilities of that institution? It would not stand in public confidence in England one hour.

I will not say that the late Secretary of the Treasury, now one of our brethren on this floor, was at all wrong in remodeling that statement. If truth required it he was right in remodeling it; but I do say that a system that required that remodeling, that required a statement of the public debt at $200,000,000 more than it had been stated before, that required a change in the statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Government of $8,000,000 or $9,000,000 in a single year—that such a system of book-keeping cannot be correct, at least it cannot be what the Government ought to require, and it is not what any great moneyed or commercial institution in the country would endure for a moment. That is what I object to. What confidence can the country have in the statements of the indebtedness of the country or its resources, what confidence can be placed in the credit of the Government, if we cannot rely upon the books of the Treasury Department, if it requires its books to be remodeled, if it requires the labor of experts for months to find out whether they are correct or not, and if the statements made to Congress differ by millions and tens of millions and hundreds of millions from the statements made in previous years?

I say, Mr. President, that the Senator from West Virginia is entitled to the gratitude of this country for calling attention to these facts. I do not say at all that there has been anything wrong in what has been done. I do not know it, and I am not the man to make accusations without knowledge; but I do say that the mode of keeping these books must be wrong or there could have been no such discrepancies in the reports that have been made to Congress.

Now, sir, one word about the Register's accounts. As I understand, the Register is required by law to make a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Government by warrants, at least he has been accustomed so to do, and I suppose there is some law for his doing it. If I understand the statement of the Senator from West Virginia, the report made to us by the Register of the Treasury does not agree with the warrant account. What answer is it to say that some of the bonds or the like, or warrants issued by the Government, have not been redeemed at the Treasury? That is not the question at all. The question is, "Are you, Mr. Register, bound to make a report to Congress by warrants of the receipts and expenditures of the Government; if you are, how dare you make a report that is not by the warrants?" That is the question. Let him say this report is not by the warrants; and yet if I am not mistaken—I may be wrong about it, but if I am not mistaken—you cannot find one of his reports down to this day that does not purport to be a report of the receipts and expenditures by warrants. If it is not a report by warrants, if the warrants do not verify that report, we have a false report.

I say again, I wish to be most distinctly understood that I am charging no wrong upon any human being. All that I am saying is that if this is the mode of keeping the books in the Treasury, it deserves the most careful consideration of a committee to know whether that mode cannot be changed so that the books should import, and be what they import, absolute verity.

Mr. HAMLIN. I now ask for the regular order.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HAMLIN. No, I will not yield to anybody more.

Mr. DAVIS. I think it fair that I should be heard for not more than two or three minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine declines to yield.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate now, after the day has been spent on this matter, to let us get to the regular order.

Mr. DAVIS. Only a minute. I want to say something in justice to myself.

Mr. HAMLIN. Very well.

Mr. DAVIS. I have not stated that the books of the Treasury Department have been changed; but I have stated, and it has been admitted by the Senator from Massachusetts and the chairman of the Finance Committee, that the statements to Congress have been changed, and that they do not correspond with the books in the Department. It has been my endeavor to point that out, and I think I have done it. There has not been as yet a single figure that I have presented in either one of my statements impeached. All are correct, I believe, and so acknowledged. As to the difference between the books and the statements to Congress, that is acknowledged on all hands.

Now, one word more and I have done. I did feel hurt at what the Senator from Massachusetts said when he made allusion to me in his remarks a few days ago; but his remarks to-day have been so different from what they were on the day to which I refer, that I now feel quite differently; and I ask the permission of the Senate, when I come to revise my remarks, if I have said anything that would be at all personal to the Senator from Massachusetts, to be allowed to strike it out.

Mr. SHERMAN. I only want to suggest that as I criticised the allusion of the Senator it might put me in a very awkward position; but I still make no objection. I rather criticised the Senator for attacking the motives of the Senator from Massachusetts. It will leave me in my criticism in an awkward position if he strikes out that on which I based it; but I am perfectly willing that the Senator shall do as he pleases.

Mr. DAVIS. I take back no facts or figures that I have submitted. I only refer to some allusions I made. I believe every figure I quoted to be correct.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now I insist on the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the post-route bill.

Mr. EATON. If the Senator from Maine has no objection, I should like to be heard either now or to-morrow.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope my friend will allow me to go on with the bill.

Mr. EATON. Very well; I will take occasion to call this matter up again. I wish to present a figure or two and say a word or two about it.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3628) establishing post-routes.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to say a few words in relation to this bill. It came to us from the House of Representatives, and our committee has stricken out ninety-two routes that were established by the bill of the House. Some of them were duplicated in the same bill; others had been provided for in a previous bill of this year; others had been provided for in a bill of a previous year; and some few, upon investigation and conference with the Post-Office Deparment, were determined to be unnecessary. They have therefore been eliminated from the bill. The number of routes is very large; but I may add that there is a third, I am not quite sure but a half, of the routes named in this bill that will call for no additional postal service.

I suppose it is within the knowledge of every Senator that special offices are established in every State. They are largely established in consequence of the railroad system. A railroad is constructed, the old post-route is abandoned, and special offices along from one to three miles away from the route have been established, and have been supplied as special offices, and the compensation for supplying the mail has been generally the revenue of the office. In these vast number of cases there has, from the depot of the railroad to the office established, never been a post-route established. What is true of railroads is equally true of the same class of offices which are adjacent to large places. Many special offices are supplied from the large offices. This bill has provided to make these all post-routes. Therefore for that number, which is very nearly one-half of the bill, no additional service will be required. Here are fifty-five routes in Massachusetts; I am not sure that a single route there requires any additional service. Here is Vermont with quite a large number; I think there is but one single route in that State which requires any additional service. In Connecticut there are some twenty-five, and not more than one or two of them require additional service.

I make these general remarks and now will only add that the committee have given to the subject very careful consideration. We have conferred with the Department; we have sought on all occasions to ascertain a fair and just necessity for a route before we would incorporate it in our bill. The bill itself is long. Perhaps the Senate will indulge me if we only proceed in considering the amendment to the bill, and not read the text. I will make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) If there be no objection, that will be the order. The Chair hears none.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendments reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are we not to hear what is left in the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate have ordered that only the amendments be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then on the third reading I shall ask that the bill be read at length, as the rule requires, so that we shall have it read once before it passes.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads striking out routes in the bill, inserting others, and varying others, and changing the spelling in several instances, were agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN, on behalf of the committee, reported an additional series of similar amendments, which were agreed to; as were also similar amendments by Mr. KEY, Mr. MAXEY, and Mr. GORDON.

Mr. HAMLIN. I submit the following amendment as an additional section to the bill:

SEC. 2. That section 1 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes," approved July 12, 1876, be, and the same is hereby, amended by repealing the following words:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to re-adjust the compensation to be paid from and after the 1st day of July, 1876, for transportation of mails on railroad routes by reducing the compensation to all railroad companies for the transportation of mails 10 per cent. per annum from the rates fixed and allowed by the first section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1873, for the transportation of mails on the basis of the average weight.

And that the sum of $900,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for transporting the mails of the United States on railroads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to inquire if this amendment is reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads?

Mr. HAMLIN. It is reported with the approval of the committee. The bill had been reported to the Senate, but subsequently at our meeting the committee gave its approval to the amendment, although the subject was not strictly before it.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish the Senator would explain the meaning of it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was not present at the meeting of the committee and therefore know nothing about it.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Senator was not present.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As I understand it increases some $900,000 the appropriations already made for the postal service.

Mr. HAMLIN. Certainly it does.

I will state to the Senate the reasons which the committee have in presenting the amendment to it for its consideration, and I express a hope for its favorable action. If we are wiser to-day than we were yesterday we should utilize that wisdom. If we committed an error yesterday and have discovered that error, it is the highest and the first duty that we should perform to correct that error, in my judgment. That we are wiser to-day than we were, and that we committed, all alike, an error in abolishing what was called the fast-mail service I sincerely believe; and if we have that information to-day which would have induced us to act otherwise than to abolish that service at the time it was done, and if we did make a mistake and commit an error at that time, I trust the Senate will remedy the error which has been committed. Did we do so? I think we did. I think there has been a very grave misapprehension on the part of the Senate in relation to that service. When I say to the Senate that we have never paid one mill in addition for that service I think I say what to some of them may be new.

About ten months since the Postmaster-General inaugurated a service which was called the "fast-mail" service. It affected the whole country. It reduced the time between Chicago and New York twenty-four hours, and it consequently benefited the community lying beyond the termini of that road just as much as it did those who were upon it or near it, because at each terminus of the road the time had been saved. This mail matter was distributed and radiated from those various points. Everybody had the same benefit from it that those did who lived directly upon the route. It was attempted partially as an experiment. England has long had what she has called her fast-mail service; not ours, because her fast-mail service is at a speed of sixty miles an hour. Our fast-mail service was at a speed of thirty-five miles an hour. It went into effect. It met the approbation, I think, of all classes in every part of the country. I know there was a little uneasy feeling among newspapers at the precise time fast-mail service was created, as bringing from the great central points their newspapers in competition with those at local points. That, however, I think has all changed. To the business man, to the merchant, time is money, and if we can transport our mails so that twelve or twenty-four hours may be gained by all the community lying on and receiving their mail communication from Chicago west, and all portions of the community lying north and east of New York, we contribute so much to the benefit of the business portion of the community.

I said a moment ago that we had paid not one single cent additional for this fast-mail service. That is true, and how? The compensation to railroads is based almost exclusively upon weight. There is the element of space coming in, but the element of fast trains has never entered into the system at all. The difficulty arising in the country has been that all railroads have been paid precisely the same sum, whether they run twenty miles an hour or thirty-five miles an hour. The fast train that did run thirty-five miles an hour received not one mill of additional compensation in consequence of that speed. Perhaps I ought not to say that so broadly. The Government contributed not one mill more in consequence of that fast service, and why? It was produced in this way: You first gave $50 a mile for all railroads that transported two hundred pounds of mail daily and you went up on your scale until it amounted to $300, and then you gave $25 a mile for every two tons transported upon the road daily. You do not take and never have taken into account increased speed. The compensation for the increased speed was produced by giving large mails to these roads.

Mr. WEST. More weight.

Mr. HAMLIN. More weight. If the matter had gone upon other roads the same moneys would have been paid to the other roads for transporting the mails. The fast train got an increased compensation, but the Government paid no more. It only aggregated its mail upon this route, and gave to it a great sum that would have divided among other roads if it had not been aggregated upon the fast-mail trains. That is the condition of it.

When the amendment in relation to this service was agreed to in the committee of conference on the post-office appropriation bill, I think my friend from Louisiana [Mr. WEST] agreed precisely with me. We were conferees upon that bill. I have said we committed an error. I own to the error quite as much and perhaps more than this body, because I was one of the conferees who signed the report which the Senate agreed to. But what were the conditions which led the Senator from Louisiana and myself and I do not know but the Senator from Texas, [Mr. MAXEY,] though I cannot speak for him, but I think I can speak for the Senator from Louisiana, to agree to that report? It was the last point upon which the conferees disagreed, and we were told distinctly that no agreement could be had upon the bill unless we would agree to a reduction of 10 per cent., a horizontal scale of reduction, of all the railroad service of the country. I affirmed from knowledge which I had that I believed it would stop the fast trains. The conferees on the part of the other House expressed just as strong an opinion—I doubt not they believed just as sincerely as I did—that it would produce no such effect. We did sign the report; it came here, was agreed to, and became the law. Now, what is the result? The result proves that the Senator from Louisiana and myself were right in our judgment that we should lose the fast-mail service. We have lost it, and I fear we cannot get it back. I want to say that if the Senate and the House shall agree to this amendment, I am not quite sure that it will bring the fast-mail service back; but it will approximate toward it, at least, and it will accommodate the whole country. It is worth trying, and I hope the amendment will meet the approbation of the Senate.

Let me make one other suggestion for the consideration of the Senate. You cannot legislate in relation to your postal system upon isolated questions and divide it into distinct branches, fostering the one and destroying the other. It is not right in principle. You must deal with it as a system. Why is it that this large bill, establishing post-routes all over the country, is presented here? Why have I agreed to this report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads? Because I regard your frontiers and your remote sections as a part of a general system that must be cared for from the general revenues. I have therefore cheerfully agreed to it and believe it is right, and I stand here as I have always stood in favor of granting postal facilities to non-paying points. That is just what this bill will do. Is it wise, is it right—and I put the question to Senators in candor—to take the great arteries through which the communications of your country go by the ton, and the sources from which your revenues are derived, that send out their power to the utmost extremities of the Republic, and while you are thus doing your only simple duty in providing for distant, remote, and non-paying sections, that you shall shut down upon the great business marts of the country that communication which is of inestimable value to them? I affirm to-day that the stoppage of the fast mails in England would turn out any administration that ever held power there.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Maine a question?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to know whether all the mail service transported upon railroads could be obtained with the 10 per cent. reduction, excepting the fast mail service?

Mr. HAMLIN. No, sir. I ought to have said in going along that I drew this amendment first for the purpose solely of restoring the fast mail.

Mr. MORRILL. My purpose is to get at the fact whether we have got to pay 10 per cent. increased pay for all of our mail service in order to obtain the fast-mail service. I see that this amendment appropriates $900,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes, sir; it is just what we cut it down precisely, and that diminution was in consequence of this 10 per cent. We diminished the appropriation for the railroad service in the post-office bill just $900,000.

Mr. MORRILL. But I do not understand that any other service has been cut off, except the fast-mail service, in consequence of the 10 per cent. reduction.

Mr. HAMLIN. I understand this, and I was about saying to the Senator that I first drew a measure for the purpose of restoring the fast-mail service. I found this difficulty standing directly in my way, and I think the Senator from Vermont will see the difficulty when I state it. You cannot have two rates for your railroads. That is precisely what we understand from the information that we get. If you restore your fast-railroad service by an increasing compensation over what other roads get for performing their service, you have got two rates. We have great thoroughfares, those coming next to them, and the very moment that you create a distinction in the compensation which you pay for transporting your mails, that very moment you make a difficulty that the Department cannot go along with. That is the very trouble. Therefore it becomes necessary, in my judgment, to restore the system precisely to what it was; though I have said, and I repeat it, I doubt if we have not lost the golden opportunity. I doubt if we shall be able to get back that service as it was, but we can certainly improve it vastly from what it now is.

Mr. DAWES. Does that arise from the fact, I inquire of the Senator, that you cannot compel the railroads to take the mail at all, and that they will not take it unless they have it upon a fair and equal compensation?

Mr. HAMLIN. You can compel no railroad company to carry one letter or one paper. They control their own road, and they have complained persistently that they have never had, for certain portions of the service, an adequate compensation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Post Post-Offices and Post-Roads, whom I know to be well informed on all questions relating to the service, if he can inform us as to the relative cost of the railroad transportation of mails in this country and in England?

Mr. HAMLIN. I cannot. I did have occasion to investigate that subject the past winter, but the relative cost has escaped me and I dare not undertake to state it. I am not able to do it. You have no power, none whatever, over the roads. I ought also to state what is very familiar to me, more so at least than to many other Senators whose duty it has not been to examine the subject so carefully as I have, that in this very post-office appropriation bill we have provided for a commission to take this whole subject up during the recess and report to Congress at its next session, re-adjusting, so far as they may be able, the mode and manner of compensating our railroads.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to ask the Senator whether the free use of the telegraph does not obviate to a very great extent the necessity for the fast transportation of the mails?

Mr. HAMLIN. O yes; if you want to make a man pay four times as much; it undoubtedly comes in competition with the mails, but not to any very considerable degree so as to disturb the great bulk of communications that always have passed in the mails and always will.

Mr. MERRIMON. I suppose that commercial people use the telegraph very freely.

Mr. HAMLIN. Undoubtedly. I noticed in a paper the other day what met my views so fully that I cut from it a paragraph which I will ask the Secretary to read. I think it states truthfully the true state of affairs.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE FAST-MAIL SERVICE.

In our news-columns this morning will be found two letters, one written by Mr. Vanderbilt and the other by Mr. Scott, notifying the Post-Office Department that after Saturday next the fast-mail service will be discontinued over their railroad lines because of the inadequate compensation paid them by the Government. The public cannot justly complain if these gentlemen carry their threat into execution. Railroad companies are as much entitled as anybody else to fair remuneration for their services, and it is unjust to expect them to serve the public for nothing.

We have no apprehensions whatever that the fast mails will be discontinued, and we are confident that Congress will not do anything to interrupt a service which is of so much advantage to the whole people. To do so would be false economy and a species of retrenchment which the country would not fail to condemn when the time came. It would be a step backward in our civilization and that we are not likely to take this centennial year.

Into the merits of the controversy we do not propose to enter this morning. It may be that the railroad companies in question are now sufficiently well paid for the work they do and it is possible that they are not. They say they are not, and announce their surrender of the service. Steps should immediately be taken by the Post-Office Department and Congress to investigate the matter, and do even justice between both parties. To go back to the old slow system would disarrange everything. Fast-mail trains we must have, no matter what they cost. After a full investigation of the whole subject we are confident the House will cheerfully vote whatever may be necessary to increase the efficiency of the Post-Office Department. To do otherwise would be a very fatal mistake.

Mr. HAMLIN. I cut that from the Baltimore Gazette. I did it because it expresses my opinion better perhaps than I should be able to express it myself. I believe it states truthfully what is the condition of things. I think in nearly every city of any considerable magnitude boards of trade, business men, and commercial bodies have expressed a very earnest desire that this service should be restored. If we are wise, we shall restore it. I have here a very long communication from the Post-Office Department, from the superintendent of the railroad service. It goes into this matter with a good deal of accuracy, and I ask that it may be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. By whom is it signed?

Mr. HAMLIN. By Mr. Vail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the communication.

The Secretary proceeded to read the communication; and after having proceeded some time,

Mr. CONKLING. I make a suggestion which I think at this hour will meet the approbation of everybody. The Senator from Maine does not care to have that paper read actually, if it go into the RECORD, and I think no Senator will object to that. We can all see it in the morning and it will save so much time. The hour of adjournment is very near.

Mr. WEST. If that proposition is assented to, as this amendment is likely to provoke further debate perhaps, and there are other amendments that I know will, I move that the Senate adjourn.

By unanimous consent, the communication was ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

SIR: In answer to your inquiries regarding the discontinuance of the fast-mail service, I beg leave to submit the following:

It is popularly supposed that only the fast-mail trains were withdrawn from the lines of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, and Pennsylvania Company and its connections. This is an error, as will be shown hereafter.

Some time prior to 1873 the trunk railroads, over which passed the great bulk of mails, finding that they were increasing in bulk, and also that in the improvement of method of working and handling the mail, additional space on their best trains was demanded, met in consultation on the subject and agreed that unless some relief was granted them by Congress the postal cars furnished would be withdrawn.

The compensation to which they objected was governed by the law of 1845, which divided railroads into three classes, and paid to each class one, two, or three hundred dollars per mile per annum, with 25 per cent. additional when one-half of the service was performed at night.

This classification was made by the Postmaster-General, based upon the importance of the road. Were it not that the highest compensation to any one road was $375 per mile per annum it would be the most just and equitable law that could be framed for this purpose.

But it must be remembered that this law was framed in 1845, in the infancy of railroad service of any kind and when the mails were small. At that time, also, the mails were carried in bulk, stowed in the smallest possible space, and accompanied by a messenger who threw off and took on bags or pouches at stations, but made no distribution, not even of the mails local to the line or route. All distribution was made in the offices at the termini of routes or at distributing post-offices.

In process of time these messengers began to open the pouches received from the offices on the line of the road, take out the mail for other offices on the line, and for which they put off mails; sending all mail going beyond the route into the head office, as it was called, or the terminal offices. Then was required small apartments on the cars for the first time.

The law of 1845 makes no mention whatever of apartments to be furnished on the cars, and therefore did not anticipate the growth of this kind of service.

With the increase of railroad mileage and combinations of short lines into trunk lines under one management, connecting the different sections of the country; and the running of trains of the various roads in close connection with each other, so that a passenger could go from one end of the country to another on connecting trains and without "laying over" at any place; it was soon discovered that the sending of mails from one "distributing office" to another resulted in serious delays; consequently, instead of intrusting valuable or important communications to the mails, the business man forwarded by messenger or oftentimes by express. To avoid this delay or "laying over" of the mails the system of "railway post-offices" was devised, and in 1864 the first one was put in operation from Chicago west.

A railway post-office is a distributing post-office on wheels; as, for instance, prior to the establishment of the railway post-office mails for Wisconsin from New York would be sent to "Chicago D. P. O.;" that is, distributing post-office. These mails would leave New York, say, at night, reach Chicago the second morning, and go to the post-office, where they would be distributed or assorted; part sent to "Milwaukee D. P. O.," part to Madison, part to Green Bay, and to other centers from which railroad or stage routes radiated. At those points the mail would go again to the post-office for another distribution to the various offices on the lines of those routes radiating.

Now, when these mails arrived in Chicago on trains over one road, the trains on the roads running into Wisconsin were waiting, and within a short time would start, delaying only time enough to allow passengers to get from one depot to another, while the mail would go to the post-office and be delayed until the next train, which would leave about twelve hours after. This same thing would be repeated at Milwaukee, Madison, or other places to which the mails would be sent from Chicago.

If only one train a day was run, as is the case on many roads in the Northwest, the delay would be twenty-four hours instead of twelve. Thus if a passenger and letter left New York at the same hour over the same route for an interior town in Wisconsin, the passenger would arrive from twenty-four to thirty-six hours in advance.

The railway post-office system avoids this delay, and in this manner: A car is fitted up in precisely the same manner as a distributing post-office, with a force of clerks, &c. The mail for, say, Wisconsin is put into the car, and after the train leaves New York and before it reaches Chicago, or while in transit, the distribution is made to the various railway post-offices on the trains over the lines leading into Wisconsin. This mail is put in pouches labeled to the different lines, and as soon as the train arrives in Chicago these mails are sent to the trains soon to depart, and upon which are railway post-office cars and clerks who make the final distribution, so that the mails are ready for the radiating routes at every junction or stage center, and sent out on trains with which they connect closely, and the person addressed is soon in receipt of the news, be it good or bad, contained in the letter; and no messenger, private express, or what not can anticipate the letter or pass it on its way.

The establishment of the railway post-office of course necessitated the furnishing of much additional space on the part of the railroad companies. Instead of the mails being forwarded in the baggage-car with freight, express, or baggage, whole cars were set apart for the exclusive use of the mails. And for this space no provision was made, under the law of 1845. Nor could any railroad, no matter how much mail was carried, receive over $375 per mile per annum. This led to the agreement by the railroad companies to throw off the postal cars referred to before.

In 1873 Congress passed the law under which railroads are now paid. That is:

Routes carrying over their whole length a daily average weight of mails of two hundred pounds receive $50 per mile of road per annum; five hundred pounds, $75; one thousand pounds, $100; fifteen hundred pounds, $125; two thousand pounds, $150; thirty-five hundred pounds, $175; five thousand pounds, $200; and $25 per mile per annum additional for each additional two thousand pounds daily average weight.

In addition, routes upon which postal cars are run are allowed $25 per mile per annum for cars forty feet long; $30 for cars forty-five feet long; $40 for cars fifty feet long; and $50 for cars fifty-five and sixty feet long.

The objection of the railroad companies to this was that it paid too much for weight and too little for space. In other words, if five thousand pounds of mail was forwarded over a road on which there was no railway post-office service the compensation would be $200 per mile per annum. While if the railroad was required to furnish a postal car forty feet long in which to work this mail the compensation would only be $225. While in one case the mail would be stowed in one end of a baggage-car on two or three trains a day and an apartment a few feet long furnished for the route agent on one train a day to do the local work on the line or exchange mails with the different post-offices, the other furnished a car complete on their train, besides carrying mails in the baggage-car on other trains.

Neither does the speed at which the mails are conveyed enter into consideration when the compensation is fixed; it is the same when carried on a freight-train as when carried on the fastest express-train. These, together with the fact that the Post-Office Department requires the railroads to take the mails to and from the post-offices at the ends of the route and to and from all offices within eighty rods of the line of road are the underlying causes of all troubles between the railroads and the Post-Office Department.

Whether the compensation as fixed by law of 1873 is too great or too little is a matter too intricate for discussion here. One thing, however, is certain; that is under the provisions of that law great irregularities exist in the payments to railroad companies if a comparison is made based upon the facilities furnished.

The railroad companies demand that their compensation shall be based upon the elements which they claim enter into the cost of performing this service, that is, space and facilities furnished, and speed at which the mail is conveyed; and that their work shall commence and end at the stations of their line; that is, the Post-Office Department shall perform its own mail-messenger service.

Some of the demands made by the railroad companies have been exorbitant and unjust so far as price is concerned; but so far as the principles involved are concerned they are not only just, but have been and are concurred in by all the officers of the Department who fully understand and have carefully studied the subject.

The second bill of Mr. STONE as sent to the Committee on Appropriations of the House last winter was intended to meet the question and would have done so at a reduced cost for railroad transportation, as under its provisions there would have been a saving to the Government of from $500,000 to $1,000,000 on transportation of the mails. But the House Committee on Appropriations so changed it that had it become a law in the shape it came from the committee, it would not only have destroyed the railway post-office service but all other railroad service.

Then, as the House failed to get its reduction by making a careful revision of the law which would improve the service, put the Department and the railroads on good terms, and save fully 10 per cent. of the annual cost of mail transportation, got it by making what might be called a horizontal reduction of 10 per cent. This was done after a statement was made by the officers of the Post-Office Department that it would result in the withdrawal of all first-class postal facilities from the trunk-lines, and which prediction, unfortunately for the country, has come true.

But the answer to the statement that the postal facilities would be withdrawn was met by one of the leading members of the Appropriation Committee and the House of Representatives: "That the people did not desire such rapidity in the transmission of the mails; that it made no difference to them; that it was only a few over-critical business men who were so particular."

The statement is made that everything is falling in price, that freights, passenger fare, &c., are being reduced, and consequently the railroads can afford to carry the mails at a less figure than before.

It is doubtless true that if a wise revision of the law regulating compensation to railroads should be made a considerable reduction in the aggregate cost would follow. But to make a reduction in the rate which already bears unequally on the railroads for the reason that it is based upon an element, "weight," which since the introduction of postal railway service has given way to space. It matters little to the railroad company after the car is furnished how much or how little weight is in the car, the expense of performing the service remains the same.

If the weight bore an equal proportion to the space required on all roads it could be regulated by weight, but upon every railroad the features of the service are so different that it does not. The space on any train for a given weight depends upon the local mails, whether heavy or light, on the proportion of through mails, and also whether the through mails are sent through in bulk to be distributed on some road beyond, or are distributed on the line of road.

If the mails were like express goods then weight could govern, but in addition to the storage necessary for the mail there must be a portion of the car fitted up as a post-office, which is additional to the space necessary for storage purposes.

Then each year, with the improvements made in the workings of the mails and the more detailed distribution necessary to meet the demands of the public, additional space is necessary for the same weights.

It can thus be seen that even if the rates for railroad traffic have fallen, the compensation for mail service has been reduced by demanding additional facilities for the same pay, or for little increase. To show this the increase of facilities furnished on the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern and the Pennsylvania Railroads can be cited:

Pennsylvania Railroad, New York to Philadelphia.

Feet of linear car space furnished each way daily:

1862	20
1864	65
1866	100
1870	130
1875	275

The weight of mails on this line from the first record until 1875 have about doubled.

Lake Shore and Michigan Southern.

Feet of linear car space furnished each way daily:

1868	13
1869	36
1871	72
1874	160
1875	280

The weight of mails on this line from the first record until 1875 have about doubled.

On many roads there has been but little increase of facilities demanded.

The result is that the roads furnishing large proportionate space are either underpaid or the roads furnishing comparatively few are fearfully overpaid. One thing is certain the thing should be equalized, and it would be economy to do so.

A horizonal reduction of 10 per cent., or even more, therefore might be just to some roads while it would be unjust to others.

It may be said that space is considered, as there is a certain pay provided for the railway post-office car, but that amounts to but about four cents per mile run for an average postal car, about the rental paid by one company to another for use of car, and amounts to a rental from the Department to the railroad for the use of the extra car. The compensation for hauling, &c., must come from the compensation for weight carried.

The above will suffice to show the causes which have led to the action on the part of the railroad companies in throwing off the post-office cars.

The New York Central and Hudson River and Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railroads have withdrawn the fast-mail train.

This train, an exclusive postal train, was run between New York and Chicago in twenty-six hours, leaving New York in the morning, connecting at Albany with the mails from Boston, leaving the latter place at 9 p. m., connecting at Cleveland with the trains to Cincinnati and the South, leaving Cleveland at 7.45 p. m., reaching Cincinnati at 5.15 a. m., connecting at Toledo with trains to Saint Louis and the Southwest and to Detroit, leaving Toledo 11.25, reaching Saint Louis 2 p. m. and Detroit 5.15 a. m., and connecting at Chicago with all trains leaving for the West and Northwest in the morning.

This train took all mails gathered in New England the day previous to its starting, from New York, all New York mail deposited up to starting time, delivered them through New York and Northeastern Ohio during the day, connecting trains which delivered mails in all parts of Ohio and Indiana during the night ready for an early morning delivery, and delivering mails in all parts of Illinois, Michigan, most of Wisconsin and parts of Iowa, Minnesota, and Missouri the day after it left New York, and connecting with the only through train to the Pacific coast and Territories, advancing the mails to the whole Northwest and West from twelve to twenty-four hours.

Much criticism has been passed on its time of starting from New York, that it was a newspaper train, &c. In arranging its schedule the idea was to give it the best schedule for the accommodation of the largest number of people. Not alone New York and Chicago were to be considered, but New England, the Middle States, and the great West, and also the greatest extent of territory that it would supply during business hours of the day.

If mails are to be delivered in the night and could be as well dispatched on a later train which would deliver early in the morning, the mails better lay at the office of origin, giving more time to the patrons to prepare the mails and at the same time do the work equally well. Heretofore the trains leaving New York in the evening left at such hours that the latest possible time a letter for the West could be deposited in the New York post-office was six p. m. This meant sending a letter from the writer's office in many cases at five; or, in other words, the correspondence of a business man had to be prepared during his heaviest working hours to get a dispatch the same day. And although many hypercritical people who probably had nothing to do but criticise amused themselves with the idea that people did not write letters at midnight, it was found by actual observation that about 150,000 letters were deposited in the New York post-office alone for the West after the last close for the evening trains and before eleven p. m., which, had it not been for the fast-mail train, would have been delayed twenty-four hours. And judging from the complaints which now come in of having to use extra force to get their correspondence off on the trains as now run, it would seem that the people do appreciate a train leaving at night.

So far as New York and Chicago were concerned no train could be run that would advance the mails more than the fast-mail train. It left New York after all letters were in and reached Chicago in time for the first morning delivery. Had it left at night it would have reached Chicago after all business was done, and letters would have then only been delivered by the first morning delivery; and in that case it would have been no benefit to New England, and it would have delivered in the Northwest during the night to such places as were large enough to receive a special pouch, for the reason that all railway post-offices are upon the day trains out of Chicago, and to all other places the second day.

Had it left at noon, as some suggest, and arrived in Chicago at noon or a little later, it then would have been in truth a New York and Chicago train; for it would have reached Cleveland, Toledo, and other places where connections are made for all parts of the country midway between the departure of trains, and mails for all these sections would have been forced to lay there until the regular trains started. This would have been an extravagance which the Department could ill afford. As it was Boston and New York and surrounding country had a dispatch for Chicago, Saint Louis, and Cincinnati, and all the country beyond, leaving the former cities after all mails were in, both city mail and that from concentrating roads, reaching Chicago and Cincinnati early in the morning, connecting with all trains beyond, reaching Saint Louis at two p. m. in ample time for delivery.

On this fast-mail train during the last six months of its existence about sixty-five million letters and about sixty million pieces of other mail were distributed, besides nearly as much more was sent through to other lines in bulk.

It carried from New York nearly thirty tons of mail daily. And of this thirty tons, or sixty thousand pounds, not to exceed fifteen hundred pounds, or 2½ per cent., was made up of daily newspapers; which is far below the percentage of daily newspapers sent out on the regular morning trains.

The limited mail has been withdrawn from the Pennsylvania road; this train corresponded to the fast-mail train on the Northern road, delivering all mails from New England and the North of the day previous through New Jersey, Pennsylvania, District of Columbia, Maryland, and Delaware the day of its starting from New York, making through connections to Cincinnati, New Orleans, Saint Louis, and all portions of the Southwest.

The following extract from a report to Postmaster-General Tyner, under date of July 21, will explain the situation pretty fully:

"The Pennsylvania Company leaves postal service on that road through to Saint Louis on the best postal train (5.55 p. m.) from New York to the Middle States and Southwest. This was the train on which we tried so hard to get them to shorten the time and put cars at the time of starting the limited mail over the road instead of starting in the morning, as they insisted upon doing. The Pennsylvania Railroad, by denying us mail facilities upon the day express and fast line leaving Pittsburgh at 8.45 a. m. and 8.10 p. m., respectively, even for mail in bulk, will practically place an embargo upon all mail from the Southwest for the East, excepting such as we can forward via Toledo and Cleveland.

"So far as local service is concerned, we will have about the same on the Pennsylvania Railroad as we had previous to the establishment of the 'fast' mail trains.

"On the New York Central and Lake Shore, however, we are seriously crippled. The speed of the 'fast mail' enabled us to concentrate most of the service upon that train. Between New York and Buffalo, therefore, we had but one additional service, leaving New York at 8 a. m., connecting with the postal car leaving Boston at 5 a. m., at Albany; giving us a very complete local service. Previous to the fast train there was a local service leaving Albany at 7 a. m., taking the New England mail leaving Boston the night previous and New York mail leaving at 11 p. m., which was of course merged into the 'fast' train. This will not be restored, and its absence will be most seriously felt through New York and New England.

"On the Lake Shore there are very ample facilities left for local service, and sufficient car space and cars in which to handle all New England mails for the West; but not sufficient to handle any part of the through mails from New York to the West, which are very heavy.

"These companies also will carry such mails as can be put into the baggage-cars on all trains upon which they now carry them, but these facilities are not sufficient for a tithe of the mails.

"The Erie has a double daily line of postal cars through to Hornellsville, and a single line from there to Dunkirk, where they connect with the Lake Shore.

"We can put a force of clerks in these cars, as we had previous to the fast train, and work mails for Michigan, and Ohio, and Indiana, or such parts of the two latter States as will be forwarded via the Lake Shore.

"This will prevent too great delay to the mails for those States, and give us an outlet for mails that can by no possibility be forwarded on the New York Central owing to the refusal of facilities."

So far as expense is concerned, the fast-mail trains were no additional expense to the Government, but were economical.

The mails are paid for by weight, and whether carried on one road or a dozen at one hundred miles per hour or ten, the compensation is $25 per ton per mile of road per annum for all weights over five thousand pounds.

Running mails at a high rate of speed would and did naturally concentrate on those roads performing the service all mails that could be advanced to its destination, but running at a high rate of speed involves expense, while the compensation for service did not increase in the same ratio.

In fact if all the service performed by three roads could be performed by one, it would make a considerable reduction in the aggregate compensation. For instance, if 21,000 pounds of mail was carried by one road the compensation would be—

For the first five thousand pounds, $200 per mile	$200
Each additional two thousand pounds, at $25 per mile	200
Total	400

Four hundred dollars per mile per annum.

If that was divided between three roads, each carrying seven thousand pounds, the compensation would be—

For the first five thousand pounds, at $200 per mile	$200
Each additional two thousand pounds at $25 per mile	25
Total	225

or two hundred and twenty-five to each road or $675 aggregate compensation to the three, a difference of $275 per mile of road per annum in favor of concentrating the mails, and in this way the fast-mail service worked economy.

So far as distribution is concerned, that must be made at some place, and it is economy to do it on the cars.

If done at a post-office it must be made in a limited time, as the mails are mostly deposited at the latest possible moment before closing-time, or the departure of the trains. To distribute these mails in the post-office, force enough must be on hand to do this as quickly as possible.

If this work is performed on the cars, the clerks have all the time the mails are in transit to do it, and can thus distribute the work over their whole working hours. This work of distribution if done at post-offices is going on in a great number of them while one railway post-office car passes along and makes the distribution for each office.

Now that the postal facilities have been withdrawn, much of this maill will be forced into different post-offices for distribution. The working force of these offices organized upon the supposed continuance of this service has been reduced to correspond to the reduced appropriations made by the present Congress, which will make this sudden increase of work result in very serious delay and detriment to the corresponding and reading public.

The effect of all this is already fully felt, and will result in a unanimous demand from the great public that their mails be given them again with as much promptitude as heretofore.

It must be borne in mind that all fast-mail service so far was more experimental than otherwise. That is, the idea of running trains at high rates of speed involving connections with the thousands of railroads in all parts of the country could not be developed in perfection from the start; that the possibilities of the idea were greater than was anticipated.

It was hoped that it could be made an object to the railroads not only to continue it, but to improve it from time to time as it was found possible to be improved. This was prevented in a great measure by the fact that the companies who undertook this gigantic scheme of running a train upon a schedule and with such perfect system as has never been approached in any country, found that in their opinion its expenses exceeded its revenue; at least that, together with the fact that the compensation was reduced 10 per cent., led to the abandonment of this class of service.

It was in operation long enough for the Department and the public to find,

First. That the fast-mail trains advanced mails to their destination in advance of the time by which they could be delivered by any train leaving the night previous, even if they did start in the morning, and that, too, for sections of country very close to its initial point. To the section of country within a radius of three hundred miles of New York the withdrawal of the fast trains and the consequent retardation in the transmission of mails will be more felt than the whole saving resulting from their discontinuance will counterbalance, even if it was such an expensive luxury as has been claimed. But it has already been shown that it involved no additional expense, and for that reason the abandonment is the more criminal.

Second. It was also ascertained that certain improvements could be made in its schedule which would render it even more far-reaching in its benefits. But any change to this end was defeated by the uncertainty of congressional action in the matter of compensation, and which has unfortunately resulted as it has.

Very respectfully,

THEO. N. VAIL,
General Superintendent Railway Mail Service.

Hon. H. HAMLIN,
United States Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and seventeen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, August 4, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

SAINT PAUL, MINNESOTA.

Mr. DUNNELL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, without amendment, a bill (S. No. 413) establishing the port of Saint Paul, Minnesota, as a port of appraisal.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUNNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHICAGO PENSION AGENCY.

Mr. HURLBUT, from the Committee on Civil Service Reform, which had been instructed to inquire into the truth of certain allegations in regard to the Chicago pension agency, reported the testimony taken by the committee, together with the report of the committee upon the subject.

Mr. FOSTER submitted the views of the minority of the committee upon the same subject.

Mr. HURLBUT moved that the reports be printed and laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANE. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table at this time and put upon its passage Senate bill No. 538, to which there can be no possible objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that particular bill, but we must at an early hour proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. RANDALL. This taking particular bills from the Speaker's table is an unusual proceeding, and it places those whose bills are left there at a disadvantage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proposition of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] can only be admitted by unanimous consent.

Mr. LANE. If the bill is read, I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. EDEN. I will reserve my right to object until the bill is read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. No. 538) to create an additional land district in the Territory of Idaho.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think my friend from Oregon [Mr. LANE] will consent that that bill remain on the Speaker's table for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

HEAD-STONES FOR NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

Mr. BANNING, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted a unanimous report on the matter of the contract to furnish soldiers' head-stones; and moved that the report be printed and the committee discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EVANS. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage at this time Senate bill No. 944.

Mr. LANE. I reserve the right to object until the bill is read.

Mr. RANDALL and Mr. PIERCE called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. HEREFORD,] as the Chair understands, desires to ask for a committee of conference.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. HEREFORD. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table at this time House bill No. 3022, with the Senate amendments thereto, being a bill making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes. And I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to move a non-concurrence in the Senate amendments, and to ask for a committee of conference thereon.

Mr. EDEN. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. HEREFORD.] Is the object of non-concurring in the Senate amendments and asking for a conference to increase the aggregate amount of appropriations as contained in the bill as it comes from the Senate; or is the object simply to re-adjust the different items of appropriations?

Mr. HEREFORD. I have no objection to answering the question of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN.] There is no intention on the part of the committee of conference to ask the House to increase the amount of appropriations in the bill as it comes from the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the motion first in order is to concur in the amendments of the Senate, inasmuch as the motion that tends to bring the two Houses together in their action takes precedence of the motion to non-concur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to concur is first in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as I wish to submit that motion, while opposed to the entire bill, I desire to state that the bill, as it comes from the Senate, at least reduces the amount of appropriations contained in the House bill. There is, as I understand, a reduction of $800,000 from the bill as it passed the House. I therefore propose to submit a motion to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. ATKINS. To concur without knowing what the amendments are?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think most of us know what they are. If any gentleman desires it I will ask that the amendments of the Senate be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to concur takes precedence of the motion to non-concur, even when the previous question has been ordered upon a motion to non-concur.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] would prefer it, I have no objection to referring this bill with the Senate amendments to the Committee on Commerce, so that they may report to the House what changes, if any, should be made in the Senate amendments. But in the absence of any report of a committee to the House, it seems to me that we should act upon the information which we now possess, and which we derive from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as to what action the Senate has taken. Upon such a bill as this I hope the House will not consent to non-concur in amendments reducing appropriations nearly a million of dollars, over $800,000, without a report from a committee. Therefore if the gentleman from West Virginia prefers it, instead of acting upon these amendments in the House now, or going into Committee of the Whole to consider them as we have a right to do, I will move that the bill with the amendments of the Senate be referred to the Committee on Commerce for their report.

Mr. ATKINS. To report at any time?

Mr. LUTTRELL. I wish to ask one question. If the House proceeds under the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to consider these amendments, will it be in order as they come up to offer amendments to the Senate bill as it comes back to us?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think it would be more in accordance with the custom of the House to refer these amendments for consideration to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I understand that there are extensive changes made in the bill; and if we are to carry out the theory of gentlemen on the other side, that the Senate has no right to amend appropriation bills, if the House is to control appropriation bills altogether, then these amendments ought to be considered in Committee of the Whole, where every member can have an opportunity to offer amendments and speak upon them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; let the gentleman make that point if he thinks proper.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think the Committee of the Whole is the proper place for the consideration of these amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think so, too, if they are to be considered otherwise than under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the amendments of the Senate be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DUNNELL. The course suggested by the gentleman from Iowa has not been adopted in any case during the present session. I hope that the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia will prevail. It is in harmony with our action heretofore during the present session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state, however, that the motion of the gentleman from Iowa is strictly parliamentary.

Mr. DUNNELL. It may be parliamentary, but it is not in harmony with the action thus far taken during the present session.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] whether he indorses the management of appropriation bills during the present session?

Mr. DUNNELL. I am in favor of a uniform course of procedure throughout the session. I do not propose to single out this bill and make it the object of a particular attack.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We ought to forsake our evil ways as soon as we can.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say a word in reference to the different motions submitted in regard to this bill.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is the regular order. The question has been raised by unanimous consent, and it is now before the House.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill as passed by the House appropriated about $5,800,000. The House committee worked upon the measure for three or four months as faithfully and laboriously as any committee ever worked upon any bill. They read the report of the engineers in reference to every case that they acted upon. They called before them the Representatives of every district affected by any proposition in the bill. They received before them any Senator desiring to make suggestions in reference to the formation of the bill.

The purpose of the committee at first was to frame a bill which should not appropriate more than $5,000,000; but before it was completed the amount, in response to demands of members of the Senate and the House and upon the reports of the Engineer Department, was increased about $800,000 beyond what we originally designed. Indeed, some of us were in favor of making the amount as low as $4,000,000 if an equitable bill of that amount could be framed. The bill went to the Senate. The Senate has struck out some items and inserted others, making a reduction of about $603,000, and making the aggregate appropriation $5,200,000.

Having been an earnest laborer in the formation of the House bill, and having examined carefully the amendments made by the Senate, I wish to say that they create an inequitable and unjust distribution of the amounts proposed to be appropriated. I trust, therefore, that the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. HEREFORD] will be adopted and that upon a free conference of the two Houses there may be a redistribution of the amounts appropriated, without augmenting the aggregate appropriation and possibly making a still further reduction, which I think practicable. Thus the bill may, I hope, be put in a form more equitable and just, which will satisfy both Congress and the country better than the present Senate bill which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] proposes to take as it is.

One of the reasons in favor of the course which I advocate is that the House bill was not acted upon in the Senate by the Committee on Commerce but by the Committee on Appropriations, and at a late hour in the session when it was impossible for the committee to give it one-tenth of the consideration that was given to it by the House committee. I have no complaint to make of the action of the Senate committee; because I presume that in the time allowed them they did the best they could except in this: notwithstanding the general aggregate of the bill is reduced about $600,000, there is in particular States a considerable increase of the amounts appropriated. It is not a reduction all 'round upon an equitable basis, but it shows it was just acted on according to the judgment of the committee without time to consider the reports and the facts in relation to the different works. This being so, there is no way to correct it except by a conference. To accept the bill as it now is would be to do injustice to many States and many districts. The want of equity in the bill can in some measure be supplied by a committee of conference, and without the attainment of that end I say the bill is so inequitable as it now stands that the House ought to defeat rather than pass it.

Mr. HEREFORD rose.

Mr. REAGAN. One moment. My colleague on the committee suggests if I have not done it, and I think I may do so without impropriety, to say that whoever represents our committee in the conference under the instructions contained in the resolution will keep the bill down to $5,000,000 or below it. So the committal of the bill to a conference, and I hope the gentleman from Indiana will hear me, if the desire of the House committee can be followed, is not to increase the provisions of the Senate bill but to decrease them, if that can be done.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then let it go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I rise to a question of order. The regular order has been called, and that is a motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The consideration of this question was agreed to by unanimous consent of the House. It is now fully before the House, and it is too late to make any objection. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. HEREFORD. If I can get the attention of the House for a few moments I will be very much pleased. The motion I made under the instructions of the Committee on Commerce was that we should non-concur in the Senate amendments and ask for a committee of conference. A motion has been made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] which the Chair has ruled takes precedence. The first motion to be voted on, therefore, is one of concurrence in Senate amendments.

Now I desire to say to the friends of this bill in the House that I hope they will vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, and thereafter that they will sustain the motion I have made under the direction of the Committee on Commerce.

The question simply reduces itself to this: Shall we have a river and harbor bill or not? Evidently the object of the gentleman from Indiana—which I presume he will not deny—is to kill the bill in toto. Therefore I hope, inasmuch as the Speaker of the House has ruled the first question is one of concurrence, this House will vote down that proposition, and then sustain the motion I have made to non-concur and give the House a committee of conference between the two Houses, so we may pass this bill to-day, provided the two committees of conference can agree. We are not going to remain here much longer. This bill has been debated in the other end of the Capitol for weeks and weeks. We are now on the eve of an adjournment, and if this bill has friends on this floor, if there are gentlemen on this floor who are in favor of improving the great highways of the country, of cheapening the means of getting the produce of the poor man to market, of giving us cheap transportation, they will vote in the direction I have indicated.

And with these remarks I have nothing further to say. I do not desire to discuss any feature of the bill or the merits of the bill. The fate of the bill rests now on the success of the motion I have made, and I hope gentlemen of both political parties who are in favor of a river and harbor bill will vote non-concurrence. Give the House a committee of conference and let us see whether we can prepare a bill equitable to all parties. I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I think the course which the House takes with regard to the disposition of this bill will determine whether we will have any river and harbor bill this year or not. Of course the action of the House heretofore and I believe the feeling of every member of the House is that a proper, judicious river and harbor bill is in the common interest of the whole country. Sir, my experience on the Committee on Commerce has taught me that it is an exceedingly difficult task from engineers' reports and from the demands made upon the Committee on Commerce by individual members and Senators, and chambers of commerce, and representatives of the different interests all over the country—that it is an exceedingly difficult task to prepare any river and harbor bill which shall be in every particular exactly just and exactly the most fair of all bills; for the general object of that bill is to improve the means of cheap transportation of the country, and each particular region desires that improvement shall be as full as possible, each member desires that shall be as full as possible in his own region, where he sees the necessity of it most.

Now, sir, I am free to say that I think the river and harbor bill reported by the Committee on Commerce this year was in the main fair and equal and in the common general interest of cheap transportation throughout the whole length and breadth of our country. I would not agree with all its provisions. No individual perhaps would, looking over the bill; but very few men have read the reports of the engineers for the last five, six, seven, eight, and ten years, forming a continuous history up to this time of each work and showing the necessity for it; and very few members can do so or have the time to do so. But, sir, this bill when sent to the Senate was not acted upon, as has been remarked, by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, whose duty and whose privilege it was to bring their knowledge on commercial and navigation questions to the consideration of this bill. It was turned over to the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, which never has had charge of that class of questions.

Now, sir, I am free to say that in the particular position in which that bill appeared in the Senate the Senate have done far better than I had any reason to expect they would. They have made changes, in some respects judicious and in some respects injudicious. Were it a matter personal to me and my State, I might have great reason to complain of what I might think was a seeming unfairness to the State I in part represent or a seeming partiality to other States which are represented in the bill. But no man in this House can take up these two or three hundred matters in that bill, and without years of study, without at least months of careful study of the reports, can tell what is fair and what is just, even limiting the appropriation to any given amount. I am happy to state that I believe the Committee on Commerce made and sent to the Senate a bill as fair and as just as such bills can generally be made, and in the real interest of commerce and of cheap transportation.

But the House and the Senate disagree. Now, shall we send this into the Committee of the Whole for me and you and every other man to give his views upon his choice for his own locality? For that is all it means. If amended there, it will be amended, if I may say so, by the concurrence of those who can get improvements for their own particular regions by joining with others. In that case, sir, this bill will be lost. And I venture to say that the only manner in which this bill can be amended so as to meet the joint views of the House and of the Senate is by placing it in charge of a conference committee of gentlemen who have made it their study, and who will be able to meet the Senate committee, and who will explain to them from their own study and their intimate knowledge of every one of these appropriations why they ask for changes in the Senate bill, if they do ask for them.

Now, sir, this bill is the people's bill par excellence, the bill that the grangers, the farmers all over the United States demand shall be passed, that they may have cheap transportation and that the freights shall not eat up the entire value of their produce. Feeling that, I desire that the House shall pursue the course which shall most surely provide some proper bill for carrying on these valuable improvements throughout the whole country; and I believe that referring it to a committee of conference is the only way in which a proper bill can be passed in this brief remainder of the session.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. HEREFORD. I now call the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Michigan, if it is not too late in the season now to accomplish much by this bill?

Mr. CONGER. It is not too late, because a large part of these appropriations is for material, and a large portion of the material must be procured in the winter-time. It is essential that the bill should pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it is too late to be of much use.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] demands the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to interpose a motion to refer the bill and amendments to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion cannot be entertained unless the call for the previous question is voted down.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. As the gentleman from West Virginia calls the previous question to shut off any opportunity for reply, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks which I desired to make in the direction in which my friend from Michigan has spoken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection; and leave was granted. [See Appendix.]

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The main question having been ordered, the first question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that they be reported.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Senate amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I presume most gentlemen have followed the course of these amendments in the other branch of Congress. I will not ask therefore that time be consumed in further reading them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question then recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. EDEN. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear it.

Mr. EDEN. I wish to ask the Chair if the House votes to concur in the Senate amendments whether that passes the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That unquestionably will pass the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senate amendments reduce the amount appropriated over $800,000 below the bill as it passed the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. FOSTER. Are we not under the five-minute rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is not in Committee of the Whole.

The question being taken on Mr. HOMAN'S motion, it was not agreed to.

So the House refused to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move to lay this bill and the Senate amendments on the table, for the reason that so much of the season has gone by as to render the appropriation of this vast sum of money of no value.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana is not debatable. The gentleman from Michigan will state his point of order.

Mr. CONGER. My point of order is that the previous question is now operating.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question only operated upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, and the present motion of the gentleman from Indiana is now in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 48, nays 142, not voting 95; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, John H. Baker, Bell, Blackburn, Bland, Boone, John Young Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Cannon, Collins, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Eden, Fort, Frye, Glover, Hoar, Hoge, Holman, Hurlbut, Jenks, Le Moyne, Maish, Miller, Morgan, Mutchler, Neal, Packer, Poppleton, Powell, Rainey, Randall, Rice, Robinson, Savage, Sheakley, Singleton, William E. Smith, Southard, Springer, Stenger, Stevenson, Thompson, Charles C. B. Walker, Walsh, Wike, and James Williams—48.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atkins, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Bradford, Bright, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Cason, Caswell, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Conger, Cook, Culberson, Davis, Davy, Dibrell, Dobbins, Dunnell, Durand, Durham, Eames, Ely, Evans, Felton, Finley, Forney, Foster, Franklin, Freeman, Garfield, Gibson, Goode, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Hartridge, Hartzell, Haymond, Henderson, Hereford, Abram S. Hewitt, Hopkins, House, Hubbell, Hunton, Hurd, Thomas L. Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kehr, Kimball, Franklin Landers, Lane, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Levy, Luttrell, Lynch, Mackey, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, McFarland, Metcalfe, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Morrison, Nash, New, Norton, O'Brien, O'Neill, Page, Payne, Phelps, Pierce, Piper, Platt, Potter, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, Riddle, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Scales, Schleicher, Sinnickson, Slemons, Smalls, Strait, Stone, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Tufts, Van Vorhes, John L. Vance, Waddell, Wait, Gilbert C. Walker, Ward, Warren, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, White, Wigginton, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Woodburn, Yeates, and Young—142.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Ashe, Bass, Beebe, Blair, Bliss, Blount, Bradley, William R. Brown, Buckner, Burleigh, Campbell, Candler, Chapin, Chittenden, Clymer, Cowan, Cox, Crapo, Crounse, De Bolt, Denison, Douglas, Egbert, Ellis, Faulkner, Fuller, Gause, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henkle, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hooker, Hoskins, Hunter, Hyman, Frank Jones, Kelley, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lewis, Lord, Lynde, Magoon, McMahon, Meade, Money, Odell, Oliver, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Plaisted, Pratt, Purman, James B. Reilly, John Robbins, Sobieski Ross, Sayler, Schumaker, Seelye, A. Herr Smith, Sparks, Spencer, Stowell, Swann, Tarbox, Martin I. Townsend, Turney, Robert B. Vance, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiting, Whitthorne, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, James D. Williams, William B. Williams, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, and Woodworth—95.

So the motion to lay the bill on the table was not agreed to.

Mr. HEREFORD. I now call the previous question upon my motion that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof Mr. HEREFORD's motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEREFORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. HEREFORD, Mr. REAGAN, and Mr. DUNNELL.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business is the call of committees for reports of a private nature, and the morning hour begins at one o'clock p. m. and the call rests with the Committee on Patents.

HORACE L. EMERY.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY, from the Committee on Patents, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 675) to enable Horace L. Emery to make an application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters-patent for improvement in cotton-ginning machines.

The bill was read, as follows:

That Horace L. Emery, of Albany, in the State of New York, have leave to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of the letters-patent granted to him for an improvement in cotton-ginning machines of date the 4th day of September, 1860, for the term of seven years from and after the date of such extension by the Commissioner of Patents; such application to be made in the same manner and to have the same effect as if the same had been filed not less than ninety days before the expiration of the aforesaid original term of said patent; and upon such application so filed, the Commissioner of Patents shall be authorized to consider and determine the same in the same manner and with the same effect as if the application had been duly filed within the time prescribed by law, and as if the original term of said patent had not expired: Provided, That no person shall be held liable for the infringement of said letters-patent, if extended, for making use of said invention since the expiration of the original term of said letters-patent and prior to the date of the extension.

Mr. HURLBUT. I call for the reading of the report in that case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a report from the Senate committee accompanying the bill, which will be read.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

That, from the evidence submitted, it appears that said Emery's improvement in cotton-ginning machines is a new and useful invention; that his patent was issued on the 4th day of September, 1860; that the said Emery has used due diligence in introducing the invention during the original term of his letters-patent, but that, without fault or negligence on his part, and owing to the interruption of business by the late war and to other circumstances beyond his control, he has not been adequately remunerated; that he has received, as a profit from his interest in manufacturing the said machines, the sum of $7,250, which has been mainly absorbed by his expenses in attending fairs, exhibitions, advertising, &c., for the purpose of introducing said invention.

That, in the opinion of the committee, the said improvement is capable of saving to the public a very large amount upon the annual crop of cotton made in the United States, by reason of the increased capacity of the machine, the more uniform cleanliness of picking, the improved condition and greater value of the staple, the economy of force required to drive the machine, and the exemption of danger from firing.

That the applicant had made preparations in time to visit Washington for the purpose of making application to the Commissioner for an extension of his patent, but supposing that the ninety days' notice required was a rule of the Commissioner of Patents and subject to his discretion to some extent, and not a statutory enactment, he did not reach Washington until fifteen days after the time limited, being seventy-five days before the expiration of the original term, when he learned that his only remedy was through an enabling act by Congress. That he has since been diligent in pressing his case upon the attention of Congress, and though it received the favorable action of our committee at the last session, the said committee were unable to submit their report.

Your committee are of the opinion that the applicant is entitled to relief from the effects of his mistake, and therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The question was put upon ordering the bill to a third reading; and upon a division there were—ayes 7, noes 31.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. I call for tellers; but before the vote is taken I should like to say a word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has a right to be heard.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. This bill is designed simply to correct an error or inadvertence on the part of the patentee. He was entitled under the statutes to the extension of his patent, but he was about ten days too late in making his application, and this bill is merely to correct that error. This patent was issued in 1860. It is for a machine which is used exclusively in the South, and on account of the war the patentee was unable to transact any business. Since then he has been introducing the machine, but has received no adequate reward for his invention.

Mr. HURLBUT. Why is it that this patentee did not go before the Commissioner——

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. He was under the impression——

Mr. HURLBUT. He was ignorant of the law.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. No; he made a mistake of ten days in applying for his extension.

Mr. NEAL. Does not this report show that this patentee has already received over $7,000 for his machine?

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. Yes; but he has expended it all in introducing his machine.

Mr. NEAL. The question, then, seems to be this: whether the Government shall not only give this patentee a term of fourteen years of exclusive privilege, but shall further insure the success of his patent?

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. He has not had fourteen years' advantage of his patent; only about five or six years.

Mr. NEAL. He was granted a patent for fourteen years.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. That is true; but the war came on, and he could not introduce his machine during the first portion of that period.

Mr. NEAL. And you want the Government to insure the success of this patent?

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. No. I simply ask the House to correct the error which the man made in applying for his extension. This bill was discussed in the Senate at length, and unanimously passed by the Senate, to give the man the privilege of again going before the Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is there any provision in this bill to protect parties who in good faith had manufactured this machine since the expiration of the patent?

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. There is such a provision. But the patentee has manufactured all these machines himself. He proposes to continue their manufacture himself, and not to license other parties for a royalty to manufacture them. I hope the bill will pass.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No quorum having voted, the Speaker will order tellers under the rule, and appoints the gentleman from New York [Mr. J. H. BAGLEY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] to act as telllers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 55, noes 68; no quorum voting.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 49, nays 123, not voting 113; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Cason, Caulfield, Conger, Darrall, Davy, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Ely, Finley, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Harris, Haymond, Henkle, Abram

S. Hewitt, Hoar, Hoge, Hurd, Hyman, Franklin Landers, Lane, Leavenworth, Lord, Nash, Norton, O'Brien, O'Neill, Page, Pierce, Platt, Rainey, Rea, Reagan, Sinnickson, Smalls, Stowell, Wait, Charles C. B. Walker, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, Alpheus S. Williams, Willis, and Woodburn—49.

NAYS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Baker, Bell, Blackburn, Bland, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Cannon, Caswell, Cate, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Culberson, Cutler, Danford, Davis, Dibrell, Durham, Eden, Evans, Felton, Forney, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Gibson, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Hale, Andrew H. Hamilton, Hancock, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Henderson, Holman, House, Hubbell, Hunton, Hurlbut, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Joyce, Kasson, Kimball, Lawrence, Le Moyne, Luttrell, Lynde, McCrary, McMahon, Milliken, Monroe, Morgan, Morrison, Neal, New, Packer, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, Piper, Plaisted, Poppleton, Potter, Randall, John Reilly, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Miles Ross, Sampson, Savage, Scales, Schleicher, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Springer, Strait, Stenger, Stevenson, Stone, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Washington Townsend, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Waddell, Gilbert C. Walker, Walsh, Warren, Erastus Wells, Wigginton, Wike, Willard, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, James Wilson, and Yeates—123.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Ashe, Banning, Bass, Beebe, Blair, Bliss, Blount, Bradley, William R. Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Campbell, Candler, Chapin, Chittenden, Clymer, Cowan, Cox, Crapo, Crounse, De Bolt, Denison, Douglas, Durand, Egbert, Ellis, Faulkner, Franklin, Fuller, Garfield, Gause, Gunter, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Hereford, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hooker, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hunter, Frank Jones, Kehr, Kelley, King, Knott, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lapham, Levy, Lewis, Lynch, Mackey, Magoon, Maish, Mac Dougall, McDill, McFarland, Meade, Metcalfe, Miller, Mills, Money, Mutchler, Odell, Oliver, William A. Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Purman, James B. Reilly, Rice, Sobieski Ross, Rusk, Sayler, Schumaker, Seelye, A. Herr Smith, Sparks, Spencer, Swann, Tarbox, Teese, Martin I. Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Robert B. Vance, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Whitthorne, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Young—113.

So the bill was not ordered to a third reading.

Mr. CONGER. I move that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Patents, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to lay the bill on the table. What is the use of killing these bills constantly, and having them always coming up?

Mr. CONGER. This bill has not been killed.

Mr. RANDALL. It has been pretty well scotched, and we may as well kill it at once.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was laid on the table, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF EMPLOYÉS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana, from the Committee of Accounts, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized to pay to the parties whose names appear on the annexed schedule the sums set opposite their names; the total sum to be paid amounting to $1,341.87.

Mr. RANDALL. Read the schedule.

Mr. HURLBUT. Let the names be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. Some sixteen employés of the House who were discharged on the 30th of June did not receive their pay at that time, and could not receive it until the 22d day of July. A resolution was passed by the House the other day directing the Committee of Accounts to inquire into the propriety of allowing them compensation up to the time when they received their pay for June. We have agreed to this resolution allowing them pay up to the 22d of July.

Mr. HURLBUT. Do I understand that the chairman of the Committee of Accounts [Mr. WILLIAMS] reports here a proposition to pay men for time that they have not served—for time after they had been discharged from service?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] will remember that it has been the common practice to give employés a month's extra pay. A resolution is offered at almost every session of Congress to pay the pages of the House for an entire month after the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. HURLBUT. But the gentleman from Indiana always opposes it.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is unimportant. I am merely speaking of the practice, which has been to pay a full month's compensation in excess of the time of actual service. This practice seems to prevail in almost every Department of the Government.

Mr. HURLBUT. But I wonder at the gentleman from Indiana, who is the great fugleman of reform, proposing to pay men for work that they have not done and to pay them for staying over here in order to be paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am simply calling the attention of the gentleman to what has been a very common practice. My colleague [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the Committee of Accounts are merely following, and to a partial extent only, a practice which has been almost universal for many years past.

Mr. KASSON. Have the Committee of Accounts reported in favor of any extra pay for those men who were discharged last December?

Mr. HOLMAN. I would remark that the same thing was done, with the concurrence of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT,] in regard to the employés of the Engraving and Printing Bureau, who were paid a full month's extra compensation. The appropriation of $25,000 for making this additional payment to the discharged employés of that Bureau received, I believe, the universal concurrence of this House. The practice, therefore, is too general to permit any point to be made on this resolution, although I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that the practice is a very unwise one.

Mr. FRYE. Was it not also the "practice" to furnish tea for the use of members? [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. That was the practice, I believe, on the other side of the House.

Mr. WHITE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana whether when the employés of the last Congress were discharged at the beginning of the present session they were allowed a month's extra pay after their discharge? Perhaps I do not make myself understood. If I understand the resolution now before the House——

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. Let me answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. WHITE. Not just now. The effect of this resolution, as I understand, is to allow additional salary to employés who have been discharged already. Now I want to know whether the employés who were discharged by the officers of this House when the administration of its affairs passed from republican into democratic hands were allowed any extra salary?

Mr. FORT. I can answer the gentleman that they were not.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. We did not pay those employés who were discharged last December, because they received the pay that was due them and they did not have to wait here for even one day to get their pay. I am as far as any gentleman on this floor from being willing to pay men for services not rendered; and I would have been very much opposed to paying a single one of these men if they could have obtained their pay when they were discharged; but they could not then be paid. Why? Because the other branch of Congress refused to pass until the 22d of July the bill which had passed this House for the purpose of paying those employés. Consequently these men were detained here for want of money to take them to their homes. We now propose to pay them $77 apiece for the time they were detained here in consequence of not getting their pay.

Mr. WHITE. I would like to ask one other question. I understand that these are clerks of committees, and I would like to know whether this list includes all the committee clerks whose services might be dispensed with.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. There is not a single clerk in this list.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me say that this is the result of the action of the House in reducing the number of employés heretofore employed by the republican House.

Mr. WHITE. That may be a good point; but does this list include all that might be dismissed? I ask that the list be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I call for the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. Let the list be read.

Mr. FORT. I would like to make a remark.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I yield of course to my colleague on the committee, [Mr. FORT.]

Mr. FORT. Since the honorable chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] has made his very cutting remark, I wish to say that if there is any economy in this proposition I would like him to point it out. This House now proposes to pay a man $133 for waiting here thirty days for fifteen days' pay. Is that economy? It will cost us $133 as interest on $45 for thirty days, and they ask us to pay over $1,300 for this delay.

Mr. RANDALL. I will answer the gentleman. It is practically dispensing with the number of officers whom you employed here in the last Congress, and whom we now discharge under the operations of a policy of reduction. Because we were not able to pay them promptly, we give them pay for twenty days that they were detained here waiting for their pay.

Mr. FORT. These were not the employés of the last Congress, but are the appointees of the present democratic House.

For one I do not propose to sit here longer and be lectured by the gentleman [Mr. RANDALL] on economy when his practice will not bear him out. I have asked the names be read by the Clerk. It will be seen that one person was discharged on the 15th of June and who only had pay for fifteen days due him. It is now proposed to pay him $133 as interest on his pay for fifteen days. That is the economy the gentlemen of the other side propose.

Mr. RANDALL. We have reduced the expenses here $100,000.

Mr. FORT. I am willing to pay all discharged men and have been, but no such proposition was ever made by gentlemen on the other side of the House to pay employés discharged when they came into power. Not one single wounded Union soldier ever got one cent additional pay when he was discharged. Gentlemen on that side of the House did not propose to pay them any extra pay. Now I want this list of discharged employés to be read and put into the RECORD. It will show that those gentlemen who are lecturing us on economy do not practice it themselves when it applies to their own party.

I wish it distinctly understood that the other side of the House have made no such proposition to pay republicans who were discharged when they came into power. They have kicked out one-legged and one-armed Union soldiers, and did not propose to pay them one single cent beyond the pay for the days they had rendered their faithful service.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FORT. No; I am not mistaken.

Mr. HOLMAN. It has been explained there has never been but one disabled soldier dismissed from the service, and that was under a misapprehension, and another wounded soldier put in his place at once.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman knows that at least twenty wounded Union soldiers were discharged, and he can find the names of some of them published in the New York Times of August 1, 1876, and in no instance did his party pay them a single cent in addition to what they had earned.

Mr. RANDALL. In reference to this matter of not paying discharged clerks of the last administration, I desire to say we paid them by keeping them here up to December and later, paying them for five months when they did not perform any service at all.

So much for that. As to our action in the administration of this House the record shows that we have reduced the expenditures of the employés about this House about $100,000 since we had the power.

Mr. CONGER. Not if the gentleman adds the expense of clerks employed since the number of clerks was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; the force is enormously reduced.

Mr. CONGER. The force has enormously increased since the gentleman's committee reported the number that should be employed.

Mr. RANDALL. We have adhered mainly to the number we agreed upon, although the other end of the Capitol would not.

Mr. CONGER. The other end of the Capitol did not employ clerks for our committees. I ask now for the reading of those names.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Prior to putting the question on the seconding the demand for the previous question the Clerk will read the list.

The Clerk read as follows:

List of employés of the House.

Names.	Capacity.	Annual salary.	Pay to July 22, 1876.
CLERK'S OFFICE.
George W. Chapman	Folder	$1,440 00	$86 03
Wilmot Leach	do.	1,440 00	86 03
George W. Parvis	do.	1,440 00	86 03
Frank Lamar	do.	*3 60	79 20
DOORKEEPER.
H. T. Burrows	do.	*3 60	79 20
William W. Lester	do.	*3 60	79 20
S. M. Freeman	do.	*3 60	79 20
J. W. Wiggins	do.	*3 60	79 20
R. H. Paxton	do.	*3 60	79 20
Benoni Shindler	do.	*3 60	79 20
William Tucker	Folder	*3 60	79 20
William H. Minnix	do.	*3 60	79 20
Nicholas Dawson	do.	*3 60	79 20
C. H. Sargent	do.	*3 60	79 20
Lewis Y. Ellis	do.	*3 60	79 20
J. H. Walters	do.	†3 60	133 20
Total			1,341 87

*Twenty-two days, to July 22, at $3.60 per day.
†Thirty-seven days, to July 22, at $3.60 per day.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee was adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLERK TO A COMMITTEE.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana, also, from the Committee of Accounts, reported the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Real-Estate Pool and Jay Cooke Indebtedness be, and are hereby, allowed to retain the service of a clerk from the 15th day of July, 1876, to the close of the present session; and the compensation of said clerk shall be $4 per diem.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my colleague allow me to ask this question: Whether the services required of a clerk on that committee are not performed almost entirely by a stenographer?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I am not able to answer that. They have sent a request for the service of a clerk for this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. As my colleague has not inquired into the subject, I ask him to consent to recommit the resolution. Committees engaged in investigations have stenographers employed at high salaries, and as a general thing, so far as I am informed, they do not require the services of a clerk. I hope my colleague will inquire whether the duties performed are not by stenographers instead of by a clerk.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I have been satisfied of that fact all the time; that the investigation had to be performed by a stenographer. But notwithstanding that every committee seemed to be very anxious to have a clerk; and I have only reported this resolution in accordance with the instructions of the majority of the Committee of Accounts and at the request of the committee which desired the services of this clerk. The chairman of the committee can probably explain it.

Mr. HOLMAN. With the consent of my colleague, I will move to recommit the report of the Committee of Accounts with instructions to inquire if the duties are not performed by a stenographer.

The question being taken on Mr. HOLMAN'S motion, there were—ayes 17, noes 45; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist on further count. Gentlemen must know there is an army of clerks unemployed about this House, absolutely unemployed; the duties being performed by stenographers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. Further count being demanded, the Chair will order tellers; and appoints the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. WILLIAMS, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask to have the resolution read again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not interrupt further the public business by insisting on further count, although I am satisfied that this clerk is not required.

Mr. CONGER. Since the gentleman from Indiana has called the attention of the House to the increase of this great army of clerks, I think we ought to have that question decided. Therefore if the gentleman fails to have the courage——

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is not stating correctly what I said. I did not say there was an increase in the number, but that an unnecessary number was employed.

Mr. CONGER. I understood the gentleman to state that there is an enormous increase in the number of clerks employed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is out of order.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers will take their places.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have withdrawn the call for further count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is renewed by the gentleman from Michigan, and the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. CONGER, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. CONGER. I do not insist on further count.

So (further count not being called for) the motion to recommit the report was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs, Will the House agree to the report?

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a point of order. Will it be in order to move to amend this resolution by transferring a clerk from a committee where he does no work to this committee where he may perform service for the $4 per diem?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILLIAMS] yields to the gentleman from Kentucky for that purpose, any amendment may be offered.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield to me for an amendment?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I call for the previous question.

Mr. WHITE. My proposition is that the clerk of the Committee on Education and Labor be assigned to this committee.

Mr. EDEN. I object to debate. I understand the previous question is operating.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILLIAMS] has just demanded the previous question.

The question being taken on seconding the demand for the previous question, there were—ayes 67, noes 14; no quorum voting.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I call for further count.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers; and appoints the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. WILLIAMS, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. BAKER.

Mr. HURLBUT. I wish to inquire if the morning hour has not expired?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is now dividing.

The tellers reported—ayes 109, noes 42.

So the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. WHITE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. And I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. WHITE. I do not yield for that purpose. I ask that the amendment may be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana is in order. No other business being before the House, the gentleman from Indiana has the right to move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the Chair recognized the gentleman from Kentucky to move to reconsider, is it not the universal rule that he should be given the floor for debate if it is a debatable motion? The Chair is entitled to recognize the gentleman having charge of the measure or any other gentleman in favor of it to move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. But if he recognizes another gentleman who moves to reconsider and takes the floor to debate the measure, is he not entitled to the floor for that purpose? The Chair will recollect that that rule was enforced by Speaker KERR at an early period of the session in an important case, the amnesty bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not desire to take the gentleman from Kentucky off the floor. He supposed the gentleman had made his motion and yielded the floor.

Mr. WHITE. I did not yield the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman is recognized by the Chair.

Mr. WHITE. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was just passed, and I will state my object in so doing.

Mr. EDEN. I make the point of order that the morning hour has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Kentucky did not rise from his seat until he had shouted "Mr. Speaker," and therefore that I am entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot take the gentleman from Kentucky off his feet; he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHITE. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Indiana for his courtesy.

Mr. EDEN. I make the point of order that the morning hour has expired.

Mr. WHITE. Then I make the point of order that I shall be entitled to the floor to-morrow upon this motion.

Mr. TUCKER. Oh! "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. HOAR. Is not a motion to reconsider a question so highly privileged that a gentleman who is addressing the House upon it may continue notwithstanding the expiration of the morning hour?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] is recognized.

Mr. WHITE. I do not desire to detain the House for more than a moment in support of the amendment which I desire to offer to the resolution just adopted. I ask that the resolution be read as passed and as I proposed to amend it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman must allow the vote to be taken on the motion to reconsider before he can offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands the gentleman from Kentucky to ask that his proposed amendment shall be read as a part of his remarks, and not as being offered at this time.

The Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. WHITE, as follows:

After the words "present session," add the following:
That the clerk of the Committee on Education and Labor be instructed to perform this labor without extra compensation.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who is always in favor of retrenchment and honest reform, has said that we have an army of officers about this House that are not needed; he has said that at least in substance. Now we have a proposition here to increase that army of officers by one and to give him $4 per day for his work. I make the point that we have a clerk to the Committee on Education and Labor who I think cannot certainly be employed by that committee, and I ask that he be assigned to perform this duty. His name is now upon the roll of the officers of the House and he is receiving compensation I am not sure whether at the rate of $4 per day or $5 per day. That committee have not held a meeting for some weeks, and I ask that their clerk be assigned to discharge these duties and thus save the salary of an additional clerk to the country.

Mr. HARRISON. Why not discharge that clerk to the Committee on Education and Labor?

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. WHITE. The gentleman then is certainly not in favor of retrenchment and reform.

The question was taken on Mr. HOLMAN'S motion, and it was agreed to.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (S. No. 234) to amend section 4698 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to allow a pension of $37 per month to soldiers who have lost both an arm and a leg, in lieu of $24 per month now allowed;

An act (S. No. 307) concerning security on writs of error and appeals, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 526) to amend section 1036 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia; and

An act (S. No. 1007) concerning the employment of Indian scouts.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 2133) to amend section 10 of the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department for the year ending June 30, 1876; and

An act (H. R. No. 361) to reduce the area of the military reservation of Fort Laramie, Wyoming Territory.

The message further announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 846) to punish the counterfeiting of trade-mark goods and the sale or dealnig in of counterfeit trade-mark goods; asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CONKLING, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, and Mr. STEVENSON as managers of the conference on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 3625) providing for the sale of the Osage ceded lands in Kansas by actual settlers, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. INGALLS, Mr. EDMUNDS, and Mr. KERNAN as managers of said conference on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House correcting an error in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. No. 3963) to amend subsections 246 and 251 of section 12 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1874, and for other purposes, and section 3954 of the Revised Statutes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BRIGHT. Pending that motion I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee takes precedence on Friday.

Mr. RANDALL. We want to keep faith with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] as to his speech.

Mr. BRIGHT. The gentleman from Ohio can speak to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This being Friday the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is, under the rules, first in order.

Mr. CROUNSE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Some days since a report was made from a committee of conference on Senate bill No. 779, which report was rejected by the House, and a motion to reconsider entered. The inquiry I desire to make of the Chair is, whether that motion to reconsider can be called up at this time in antagonism of the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This being Friday, under the rule it is private-bill day, and no motion to reconsider the action of the House in relation to a bill of a public character can be entertained on this day, unless the consideration of private business is postponed. Therefore the privileged question before the House at this moment is the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CROUNSE. Will not the gentleman from Tennessee yield just long enough to allow a vote to be taken on the motion to reconsider?

Mr. BRIGHT. I cannot yield to the gentleman. A number of requests have been made to me, and if I should grant them all they would take up an hour or more.

The motion of Mr. BRIGHT was not agreed to; upon a division—ayes 38, noes 110.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FORT. I desire to submit a report from a committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is pending to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted upon their amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate Mr. ALLISON, Mr. SARGENT, and Mr. RANSOM.

COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. EDEN in the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole will resume the consideration of the pending special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 2592) to transfer the conduct of Indian affairs from the Interior to the War Department. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the speech of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] has not yet appeared in the RECORD, so that I might have had its full and authentic text before offering my own remarks in reply. But his propositions were so clearly and so very ably stated, the doctrines that run through it were so logically connected, it will be my own fault if I fail to understand and appreciate the general scope and purpose of his speech.

In the outset, I desire for myself and for a majority, at least, of those for whom I speak, to express my gratitude to the gentleman for all that portion of his speech which had for its object the removal of the prejudices and unkindly feelings that have arisen among citizens of the Republic, in consequence of the late war. Whatever faults the speech may have, its author expresses an earnest desire to make progress in the direction of a better understanding between the North and the South; and in that it meets my most hearty concurrence and approval.

I will attempt to state briefly what I understand to be the logic of the gentleman's speech. He sets out with deploring the evils of party, and expressing the belief that the great mass of the American people are tired of much that belongs to party; and, looking beyond and above mere party prejudices and passions, they greatly desire to remove public corruptions, and reform the manifold errors and evils of administration and legislation; that those errors and evils consist mainly of two things: First, of a generally corrupt state of public administration; and second, of a deplorable state of the civil service; that this state of affairs is buttressed and maintained by an enormous army of 100,000 civil office-holders and 100,000 more expectants for office; and that because of this vast force the people have hitherto been unable to make the reforms they desire. This is his major premise.

The next point, his minor premise, is that the republican party is incapable of effecting the great reforms which the people desire; and his conclusion from these premises is that the democratic party ought to be brought into power in the coming election.

This was the summary, and, I may say, abrupt, conclusion of his reasoning. The gentleman seemed to be aware that there might be some apprehensions in the minds of the people that it would not, quite yet, be safe to recall the democratic party to power; and he endeavored to quiet those apprehensions by stating in the first place that there need be no fear that the South, lately in rebellion, would again control the Government; that they were prostrated; that their institutions had been overthrown; that their industries had been broken up; that in their weak and broken condition there need be no fear that they would again be placed at the head of public affairs; and, finally, that the South has united with the democratic party not from choice, but forced to it by inexorable necessity as their only means of protection.

In the second place, there was apprehension, he said, that the democracy, if they came into power, would not preserve the beneficent results of the war. But he assures us that this fear is groundless; that the people of the South have no aspirations which are not bounded by the horizon of the Union; that they as well as the democracy of the North accept, honestly and sincerely, the great results of the war; and that they can be trusted to preserve all the good that has been gained.

Again he says it is feared, on the part of many, that the colored race, lately enslaved, will not be safe in the full enjoyment of all the rights resulting from the war and guaranteed by the amendments to the Constitution. This he also assures us is a groundless fear, because the people of the South understand the colored race, appreciate their qualities, and are on such a footing of friendship and regard that they are in fact better fitted to meet the wants of that people and help them along in the way of civilization, enlightenment, and peace than those who are further removed from such knowledge.

He emphasizes the statement that the South cheerfully accepts the results of the war; and admits that that much good has been achieved by the republican party which ought to be preserved. I was gratified to hear the gentleman speak of Lincoln as "the illustrious author of the great act of emancipation." That admission will be welcomed everywhere by those who believe in the justice and wisdom of that great act. While speaking of the condition of the South and its wants he deplores two evils which afflict that portion of our country: First, Federal supervision; and second, negro ascendency in its political affairs. In that connection, it will be remembered, he quoted from John Stuart Mill and from Gibbon; the one to show that the most deplorable form of government is where the slave governs; and from the other to show the evils of a government which is in alien hands. The gentleman represented the South as suffering the composite evils depicted by both these great writers. That I may be sure to do him justice I quote a paragraph from the Associated Press report of his speech:

> The inevitable effect of that reconstruction policy had been to draw one race to its support and drive the other race to its opposition. He quoted Gibbon, the historian, as saying that the most absurd and oppressive system of government which could be conceived of is that which subjects the native of a country to the domination of his slave. He also quoted from John Stuart Mill to the effect that when a government is administered by rulers not responsible to the people governed, but to some other community, it is one of the worst of conceivable governments, and he said that the hideous system established in the South is a composite of those two vicious systems. The people are subjected to the domination of their former slaves, and are ruled over by people whose constituents were not the people for whom they should act, but the Federal Government

Now, I have stated—of course very briefly but I hope with entire fairness—the scope of the very able speech to which we listened. In a word it is this: the republican party is oppressing the South; negro suffrage is a grievous evil; there are serious corruptions in public affairs in the national legislation and administration; the civil service of the country especially needs great and radical reform; and therefore the democratic party ought to be placed in control of the Government at this time, by the election of Tilden and Hendricks.

It has not been my habit, and it is not my desire, to discuss mere party politics in this great legislative forum. And I shall do so now only in so far as a fair review of the gentleman's speech requires. My remarks shall be responsive to his; and I shall discuss party history and party policy only as the logic of his speech leads into that domain.

From most of the premises of the gentleman, as matters of fact and history, I dissent; some of them are undoubtedly correct. But, for the sake of argument only, admitting that all his premises are correct, I deny that his conclusion is warranted by his premises; and, before I close I shall attempt to show that the good he seeks cannot be secured by the ascendency of the democratic party at this time.

Before entering upon that field, however, I must notice this remarkable omission in the logic of his speech. Although he did state that the country might consider itself free from some of the dangers which are apprehended as the result of democratic ascendency, he did not, as I remember, by any word attempt to prove the fitness of the democracy as a political organization to accomplish the reforms which he so much desires; and without that affirmative proof of fitness his argument is necessarily an absolute failure.

It is precisely that fear which has not only made the ascendency of the democratic party so long impossible, but has made it incompetent to render that service so necessary to good government—the service of maintaining the position of a wise and honorable opposition to the dominant party. Often the blunders and faults of the republican party have been condoned by the people because of the violent, reactionary, and disloyal spirit of the democracy.

He tells us that is one of the well-known lessons of political history and philosophy; that the opposition party comes in to preserve and crystallize the measures which their antagonists inaugurated; and that a conservative opposition party is better fitted to accomplish such a work than an aggressive radical party who roughly pioneered the way and brought in the changes. And to apply this maxim to our own situation he tells us that the differences between the republican and the democratic parties upon the issues which led to the war and those which grew out of it, were rather differences of time than of substance; that the democracy followed more slowly in the republican path, but have at last arrived, by prudent and constitutional methods, at the same results; and hence they will be sure to guard securely and cherish faithfully what the republicans gained by reckless and turbulent methods. There is some truth in these "glittering generalities," but, as applied to our present situation, they are entitled only to the consideration which we give to the bright but fantastic pictures of a Utopian dream.

I share all that gentleman's aspirations for peace, for good government at the South; and I believe I can safely assure him that the great majority of the nation shares the same aspirations. But he will allow me to say that he has not fully stated the elements of the great problem to be solved by the statesmanship of to-day. The actual field is much broader than the view he has taken. And before we can agree that the remedy he proposes is an adequate one, we must take in the whole field, comprehend all the conditions of the problem, and then see if his remedy is sufficient. The change he proposes is not like the ordinary change of a ministry in England when the government is defeated on a tax bill or some routine measure of legislation. He proposes to turn over to the custody and management of the Government to a party which has persistently and with the greatest bitterness resisted all the great changes of the last fifteen years, changes which were the necessary results of a vast revolution—a revolution in national policy, in social and political ideas—a revolution whose causes were not the work of a day nor of a year but of generations and centuries. The scope and character of that mighty revolution must form the basis of our judgment when we inquire whether such a change as he proposes is safe and wise.

In discussing his proposition we must not forget that as the result of this resolution the South, after the great devastations of war, the great loss of life and treasure, the overthrow of its social and industrial system, was called upon to confront the new and difficult problem of two races; one just released from centuries of slavery, and the other a cultivated, brave, proud, imperious race, to be brought together on terms of equality before the law. New, difficult, delicate, and dangerous questions bristle out from every point of that problem.

But that is not all of the situation. On the other hand, we see the North, after leaving its 350,000 dead upon the field of battle and bringing home its 500,000 maimed and wounded to be cared for, crippled in its industries, staggering under the tremendous burden of public and private debt, and both North and South weighted with unparalleled burdens and losses—the whole nation suffering from that loosening of the bonds of social order which always follows a great war and from the resulting corruption both in the public and the private life of the people. These, Mr. Chairman, constitute the vast field which we must survey in order to find the path which will soonest lead our beloved country to the highway of peace, of liberty, and prosperity. Peace from the shock of battle; the higher peace of our streets, of our homes, of our equal rights we must make secure by making the conquering ideas of the war everywhere dominant and permanent.

With all my heart I join with the gentleman in rejoicing that—

The war-drums throb no longer and the battle-flags are furled, and I look forward with joy and hope to the day when our brave people, one in heart, one in their aspirations for freedom and peace, shall see that the darkness through which we have traveled was a part of that stern but beneficent discipline by which the Great Disposer of events has been leading us on to a higher and nobler national life.

But such a result can be reached only by comprehending the whole meaning of the revolution through which we have passed and are still passing. I say still passing; for I remember that after the battle of arms comes the battle of history. The cause that triumphs in the field does not always triumph in history. And those who carried the war for union and equal and universal freedom to a victorious issue can never safely relax their vigilance until the ideas for which they fought have become embodied in the enduring forms of individual and national life.

Has this been done? Not yet.

I ask the gentleman in all plainness of speech and yet in all kindness, is he correct in his statement that the conquered party accept the results of the war? Even if they do I remind the gentleman that accept is not a very strong word. I go further. I ask him if the democratic party have adopted the results of the war? Is it not asking too much of human nature to expect such unparalleled changes to be not only accepted, but, in so short a time, adopted by men of strong and independent opinions?

The antagonisms which gave rise to the war and grew out of it, were not born in a day, nor can they vanish in a night.

Mr. Chairman, great ideas travel slowly, and for a time, noiselessly as the gods, whose feet were shod with wool. Our war of independence was a war of ideas, of ideas evolved out of two hundred years of slow and silent growth. When, one hundred years ago, our fathers announced as self-evident truths the declaration that all men are created equal, and the only just power of governments is derived from the consent of the governed, they uttered a doctrine that no nation had ever adopted, that not one kingdom on the earth then believed. Yet to our fathers it was so plain, that they would not debate it. They announced it as a truth "self-evident."

Whence came the immortal truths of the Declaration? To me, this was, for years, the riddle of our history. I have searched long and patiently through the books of the doctrinaires to find the germs from which the Declaration of Independence sprang. I found hints in Locke, in Hobbes, in Rousseau, and Fénelon; but they were only the hints of dreamers and philosophers. The great doctrines of the Declaration germinated in the hearts of our fathers, and were developed under the new influences of this wilderness world, by the same subtle mystery which brings forth the rose from the germ of the rose-tree. Unconsciously to themselves, the great truths were growing under the new conditions until, like the century-plant, they blossomed into the matchless beauty of the Declaration of Independence, whose fruitage, increased and increasing, we enjoy to-day.

It will not do, Mr. Chairman, to speak of the gigantic revolution through which we have lately passed as a thing to be adjusted and settled by a change of administration. It was cyclical, epochal, century-wide, and to be studied in its broad and grand perspective—a revolution of even wider scope, so far as time is concerned, than the Revolution of 1776. We have been dealing with elements and forces which have been at work on this continent more than two hundred and fifty years. I trust I shall be excused if I take a few moments to trace some of the leading phases of the great struggle. And in doing so, I beg gentlemen to see that the subject itself lifts us into a region where the individual sinks out of sight and is absorbed in the mighty current of great events. It is not the occasion to award praise or pronounce condemnation. In such a revolution men are like insects, that fret and toss in the storm, but are swept onward by the resistless movements of elements beyond their control. I speak of this revolution not to praise the men who aided it, or to censure the men who resisted it, but as a force to be studied, as a mandate to be obeyed.

In the year 1620 there were planted, upon this continent, two ideas irreconcilably hostile to each other. Ideas are the great warriors of the world; and a war that has no ideas behind it is simple brutality. The two ideas were landed, one at Plymouth Rock from the Mayflower, and the other from a Dutch brig at Jamestown, Virginia. One was the old doctrine of Luther, that private judgment, in politics as well as religion, is the right and duty of every man; and the other that capital should own labor, that the negro had no rights of manhood, and the white man might justly buy, own, and sell him and his offspring forever. Thus freedom and equality on the one hand, and on the other the slavery of one race and the domination of another, were the two germs planted on this continent. In our vast expanse of wilderness, for a long time, there was room for both; and their advocates began the race across the continent, each developing the social and political institutions of their choice. Both had vast interests in common; and for a long time, neither was conscious of the fatal antagonisms that were developing.

For nearly two centuries there was no serious collision; but when the continent began to fill up, and the people began to jostle against each other; when the Roundhead and the Cavalier came near enough to measure opinions, the irreconcilable character of the two doctrines began to appear. Many conscientious men studied the subject, and came to the belief that slavery was a crime, a sin, or as Wesley said, "the sum of all villainies." This belief dwelt in small minorities for a long time. It lived in the churches and vestries, but later found its way into the civil and political organizations of the country, and finally found its way into this Chamber. A few brave, clear-sighted, far-seeing men announced it here, a little more than a generation ago. A predecessor of mine, Joshua R. Giddings, following the lead of John Quincy Adams of Massachusetts, almost alone, held up the banner on this floor, and, from year to year, comrades came to his side. Through evil and through good report he pressed the question upon the conscience of the nation, and bravely stood in his place in this House, until his white locks, like the plume of Henry of Navarre, showed where the battle for freedom raged most fiercely.

And so the contest continued; the supporters of slavery believing honestly and sincerely that slavery was a divine institution; that it found its high sanctions in the living oracles of God and in wise political philosophy; that it was justified by the necessities of their situation; and that slaveholders were missionaries to the dark sons of Africa, to elevate and bless them. We are so far past the passions of that early time that we can now study the progress of the struggle as a great and inevitable development, without sharing in the crimination and recrimination that attended it. If both sides could have seen that it was a contest beyond their control; if both parties could have realized the truth that "unsettled questions have no pity for the repose of nations," much less for the fate of political parties, the bitterness, the sorrow, the tears, and the blood might have been avoided. But we walked in the darkness, our paths obscured by the smoke of the conflict, each following his own convictions through ever-increasing fierceness, until the debate culminated in "the last argument to which kings resort."

This conflict of opinion was not merely one of sentimental feeling; it involved our whole political system; it gave rise to two radically different theories of the nature of our Government: the North believing and holding that we were a nation, the South insisting that we were only a confederation of sovereign States, and insisting that each State had the right, at its own discretion, to break the Union, and constantly threatening secession where the full rights of slavery were not acknowledged.

Thus the defense and aggrandizement of slavery and the hatred of abolitionism, became not only the central idea of the democratic party, but its master passion; a passion intensified and inflamed by twenty-five years of fierce political contest, which had not only driven from its ranks all those who preferred freedom to slavery, but had absorbed all the extreme pro-slavery elements of the fallen whig party. Over against this was arrayed the republican party, asserting the broad doctrines of nationality and loyalty, insisting that no State had a right to secede, that secession was treason, and demanding that the institution of slavery should be restricted to the limits of the States where it already existed. But here and there, many bolder and more radical thinkers declared, with Wendell Phillips, that there never could be union and peace, freedom and prosperity, until we were willing to see John Hancock under a black skin.

That we may see more clearly the opinions which were to be settled by war, I will read two passages from the Congressional Globe, not for the purpose of making a personal point against any man, but simply to show where honest men stood when that contest was approaching its crisis. I read from a speech made on the 19th day of December, 1859, by the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. SINGLETON,] then and now a member of this House:

> The South will never submit to that state of things. It matters not what evils come upon us; it matters not how deep we may have to wade through blood; we are bound to keep our slaves in their present position. And let me ask you, what good would you bring to the slaves by this process of abolition? You may possibly have the object in view of benefiting the slave or benefiting the white race or both; but suppose you could carry out your plans and confine us to our present area and suppose that the institution of slavery should abolish itself, what would you have done? You know it is impossible for us to live on terms of equality with them. It is not to be supposed for a moment that we can do so. The result would be a war between the races, which would perhaps involve the utter annihilation of one or the other; and thus you see that instead of benefiting either you would have brought disaster upon both.
>
> But I tell you here, to-day, that the institution of slavery must be sustained. The South has made up its mind to keep the black race in bondage. If we are not permitted to do this inside of the Union, I tell you that it will be done outside of it. Yes, sir, and we will expand this institution; we do not intend to be confined within our present limits; and there are not men enough in all your borders to coerce three million armed men in the South, and prevent their going into the surrounding Territories.

In the course of that debate, the same gentleman said:

> I am one of those who have said, and here repeat it, if the black republican party elect a President I am for dissolving the Union.

I have no doubt the gentleman fairly and faithfully represented the opinions of his State. Not long before the date of this speech, it will be remembered that two distinguished members of the republican party had uttered their opinions on this question. Mr. Lincoln had said, that it was impossible for a country to remain partly slave and partly free. And Mr. Seward had said, that there was an irrepressible conflict between the systems of free and slave labor, which could never cease until one or the other was wholly overthrown. The republican party, however, disclaimed all right or purpose to interfere with slavery in the States; yet they expressed the hope that the time would come when there should be no slave under our flag. In response to that particular opinion, the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR,] then a member of this House, on the 23d day of December, 1859, said this:

I was upon the floor of the Senate when your great leader, William H. Seward, announced that startling programme of anti-slavery sentiment and action. * * * And, sir, in his exultation he exclaimed—for I heard him myself—that he hoped to see the day when there would not be the foot-print of a single slave upon this continent. And when he uttered this atrocious sentiment, his form seemed to dilate, his pale, thin face, furrowed by the lines of thought and evil passions, kindled with malignant triumph, and his eye glowed and glared upon southern Senators as though the fires of hell were burning in his heart.

I have read this passage to mark the height to which the antagonism had risen in 1859. And this passage enables us to measure the progress he has since made.

I mark it here as one of the notable signs of the time, that the gulf which intervenes between the position then occupied by the gentleman from Mississippi and the position he occupies to-day, is so deep, so vast, that it indicates a progress worthy of all praise. I congratulated him and the country that, in so short a time, so great a change has been possible.

Now I ask the gentleman if he is quite sure, as a matter of fact, that the democratic party, its southern as well as its northern wing, have followed his own illustrious and worthy example in the vast progress he has made since 1859? He assures us that the transformation has been so complete, that the nation can safely trust all the most precious fruits of the war in the hands of that party who stood with him in 1859. If that be true, I rejoice at it with all my heart; but the gentleman must pardon me if I ask him to assist my wavering faith by some evidence, some consoling proofs. When did the great transformation take place? Certainly not within two years after the delivery of the speech I have quoted; for two years from that time, the contest had risen much higher; it had risen to the point of open, terrible, and determined war. Did the change come during the war? O, no; for in the four terrible years ending in 1865, every resource of courage and power that the Southern States could muster was employed not only to save slavery but to destroy the Union. So the transformation had not occurred in 1865. When did it occur? Aid our anxious inquiry, for the nation ought to be sure that the great change has occurred before it can safely trust its destinies to the democratic party. Did it occur in the first epoch of reconstruction—the two years immediately following the war? During that period the attempt was made to restore governments in the South on the basis of the white vote. Military control was held generally; but the white population of the Southern States were invited to elect their own legislatures and establish provisional governments.

In the laws, covering a period of two and a half years, 1865, 1866, and a portion of 1867, enacted by those Legislatures, we ought to find proof of the transformation if it had then occurred. What do we find? What we should naturally expect: that a people, accustomed to the domination of slavery, re-enacted in almost all of the Southern States, and notably in the States of Mississippi and Louisiana, laws limiting and restricting the liberty of the colored man; vagrant laws and peonage laws, whereby negroes were sold at auction for the payment of a paltry tax or fine, and held in a slavery as real as the slavery of other days. I believe that this was true of nearly all of the Southern States; so that the experiment of allowing the white population of the South to adjust that very question proved a frightful failure; and then it was that the national Congress intervened. They proposed an act of reconstruction, an act which became a law on the 2d of March, 1867.

And what was that act? Gentlemen of the South, you are too deeply schooled in philosophy to take any umbrage at what I shall now say, for I am dealing only with history. You must know, and certainly do know, that the great body of the nation which had carried the war to triumph and success, knew that the eleven States that had opposed the Union, had plunged their people into crime; a crime set down in the law—a law signed by President Washington—at the very top of the catalogue of crimes: the crime of treason and all that follows it. You certainly know that, under that law, every man who voluntarily took up arms against the Union could have been tried, convicted, and hanged, as a traitor to his country. But I call your attention to the fact that the conquering nation said, in this great work of reconstruction, "We will do nothing for revenge, everything for permanent peace;" and you know there never was a trial for treason in this country during the whole of the struggle nor after it; no man was executed for treason; no man was tried. There was no expatriation, no exile, no confiscation after the war. The only revenge which the conquering nation gratified was this: In saying to the South "You may come back to your full place in the Union when you do these things: join with the other States in putting into the Constitution a provision that the national debt shall never be repudiated; that your rebel war debt shall never be paid; and that all men, without regard to race or color, shall stand equal before the law; not in suffrage, but in civil rights; that these great guarantees of liberty and public faith shall be lifted above the reach of political parties, above the legislation of States, above the legislation of Congress, and shall be set in the serene firmament of the Constitution, to shine as lights forever and forever. And under that equal sky, under the light of that equal sun, all men, of whatever race or color, shall stand equal before the law."

That was the plan of reconstruction offered to those who had been in rebellion, offered by a generous and brave nation; and I challenge the world to show an act of equal generosity to a conquered people. What answer did it meet? By the advice of Andrew Johnson, a bad adviser, backed by the advice of the northern democracy, a still worse adviser, ten of the eleven States lately in rebellion contemptuously rejected the plan of reconstruction embraced in the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution. They would have none of it; they had been invited by their northern allies to stand out, and were told that when the democracy came into power they should be permitted to come back to their places without guarantees or conditions.

This brings us to 1868. Had the transformation occurred then? For remember, gentlemen, I am searching for the date of the great transformation similar to that which has taken place in the gentleman from Mississippi. We do not find it in 1868. On the contrary, in that year, we find Frank P. Blair, of Missouri, writing these words, which a few days after they were written, gave him the nomination for the Vice-Presidency on the democratic ticket.

There is but one way to restore government and the Constitution; and that is for the President-elect to declare all these acts—to declare all these acts null and void, compel the Army to undo its usurpations at the South, and disperse the carpet-bag State governments and allow the white people to re-organize their own governments and elect Senators and Representatives.

And the constitutional amendment with them—

Because he wrote that letter he was nominated for Vice-President by the democratic party. Therefore, as late as July, 1868, the transformation had not occurred.

Had it occurred in 1872? In 1871 and 1872 all the amendments of the Constitution had been adopted, against the stubborn resistance of the northern and southern democracy. I call you to witness that, with the exception of three or four democratic Representatives who voted for the abolition of slavery, the three great amendments, the thirteenth, the fourteenth, and the fifteenth, met the determined and united opposition of the democracy of this country. Each of the amendments, now so praised by the gentleman, was adopted against the whole weight of your resistance. And two years after the adoption of the last amendment, in many of your State platforms, they were declared to be null and void.

In 1871 and 1872 occurred throughout the South those dreadful scenes enacted by the ku-klux organization, of which I will say only this, that a man facile princeps among the democrats of the slave-holding States, Reverdy Johnson, who was sent down to defend those who were indicted for their crimes, held up his hands in horror at the shocking barbarities that had been perpetrated by his clients upon negro citizens. I refer to the evidence of that eminent man, as a sufficient proof of the character of that great conspiracy against the freedom of the colored race. So the transformation had not come in the days of ku-klux of 1871 and 1872.

Had it come in 1873 and the beginning of 1874? Had it come in the State of Mississippi? Had it come in one-quarter of the States lately in rebellion? Here is a report from an honorable committee of this House, signed by two gentlemen who are still members, Mr. CONGER and Mr. HURLBUT—a report made as late as December, 1874, in which there is disclosed, by innumerable witnesses, the proof that the white-line organization, an armed military organization formed within the democratic party, had leagued themselves together to prevent the enjoyment of suffrage and equal rights by the colored men of the South. Without detaining the House to read them now, I will quote two or three paragraphs from that report, dated December 14, 1874, and printed House Document No. 265.

THE "WHITE LINE."

This interior organization has not yet assumed definitely in the State of Mississippi such precise form and so distinct an existence as in the State of Louisiana, but is unquestionably an extension into Mississippi of the "white league" organization, whose headquarters are in New Orleans. In Warren County it is sometimes called the "White Line," and by that name is familiarly spoken of by the leading papers of Vicksburgh, as well as by some of the prominent witnesses before this committee. It is also known as "people's clubs;" but in all instances the formation of the clubs or civil organization is accompanied by establishing within the clubs themselves a military organization, officered, equipped, and armed.

Thus the clubs and the tax-payers' league are open associations, apparently directed toward objects in which all citizens might lawfully unite, but controlled from within by the military and partisan organizations whose purposes are special and unlawful.

The purposes of these clubs or white-line companies are these, as they are openly avowed or secretly cherished:

1. They are first to make a census and enrollment of all the white men in the State.
2. To incorporate into the interior military organizations all the whites who will join with them.
3. To set aside, by whatever means may be necessary, the election of colored men to office, and to nullify in practice the enabling and enforcement acts of Congress, granting and enforcing the right of all citizens, without distinction of color, to hold offices, if properly elected to them.
4. To allow none but white men to be elected to office or to hold office.

And how was it about the same time and even later in other States? Here is a report upon Louisiana, the report from which the gentleman quoted, a report that exhibits the same condition of affairs, signed by the gentleman who sits in front of me, [Mr. HOAR.] Although by a minority of the committee, it is a report of great power and of indubitable truth. I quote from page 18:

The White-League is an organization which exists in New Orleans, and contains at least from twenty-five hundred to three thousand members, armed, drilled, and officered as a military organization. Organizations bearing the same name extend throughout many parts of the State.

* * * * * * *

On the 14th of September, 1874, it arose upon and attacked the police of the city, the pretext of the attack being the seizure of arms which it had imported from the North; and having defeated them with considerable slaughter, it took possession of the State-house, overthrew the State government, and installed a new governor in office, and kept him in power until the United States interfered. This rising was planned beforehand.

* * * * * * *

The White-League of New Orleans itself was and is a constantmenace to the republicans of the whole State.

* * * * * * *

We cannot doubt that the effect of all these things was to prevent a full, free, and fair election, and to intimidate the colored voters and the white republicans.

So the transformation had not occurred in August, 1874. I come down now to 1875, to the late autumn of that year, and ask if the transformation had then occurred. I will not detain the House by reading the testimony of the cloud of witnesses which gathers around me, but will print a few specimens of the proof, most of them relating to the recent State election in Mississippi. While I say, to the honor of the gentleman from Mississippi, that in his own State he spoke against the organization of the White Line, it is unquestionably true that he was not supported by a like action on the part of the great mass of his political associates. With the permission of the House I will quote from a number of papers in his State, which say with the utmost boldness that though Colonel LAMAR spoke against the White Line, and though the State convention ignored it, yet back of the convention, and back of the gentleman himself, the White Line was formed and carried the election, and intends in the same way to carry the next.

The following quotations need no comment:

[From the Columbus (Mississippi) Index, August, 1875.]

Already do we see signs in our State of the good effects of the color line. Prior to its organization there was no harmony or unity of action among the whites. The negroes had perfected their race in organizations and were able to control the politics of the State. The whites, after having attempted every scheme to secure an intelligent government and a co-operation of the negroes in this behalf, wisely gave it up and determined to organize themselves as a race and meet the issue that had presented itself for ten years.

Now we recognize the fact that the State is most thoroughly aroused, more harmonious in its actions, and more determined to succeed in the coming election than it has been since the days of secession.

* * * * * * *

So the grand result of the color line has been accomplished in organizing the white people of the State and placing them in a position to control the coming election. No other policy could have effected the result.

[From the Shubuta Times.]

Call it what you please. Some call it the color line. It looks to us like the white line. It shall be seen who in this emergency can choose to stand with the negroes as against the whites. Mark them.

[From the Handsborough Democrat.]

We are in favor of the color line as a principle, a necessity, and a policy.

[From the Meridian Mercury.]

Rally on the color line, boys, beyond the platform, every man to his color and colors, and make these negro pretenders to govern this great country to come down, else put 'em down. What do the young men say to the old men's battle-cry in this political campaign, "Step across the platform, boys, and go for 'em!"

[From the Forest Register.]

The body of the democratic party will carry their colors of the White Line over the State. Some of the auxiliaries in a scout or bushwhacking maneuver may use a mild conservative face over the flag, but still it will rest on a white journal. To the radicals we say just superintend your structure; we will raise our own flag and colors.

The Vicksburgh Herald, speaking of the State democratic convention of August 9, 1875, says:

The color line was by common consent ignored. It was only mentioned incidentally, and it was not "killed off" either by the speech of Colonel LAMAR or by a vote of the convention. The representatives of the people expressed no opinion on the subject. The convention left each county to manage its own affair in its own way.

Speaking of the State democratic platform of August 9, 1875, the Columbus Index says:

We stand on the color line, because it is tacitly indorsed by the platform, and because we believe it to be the only means of redeeming this and other counties from negro rule.

Again, from the same paper:

The necessities of the State of Mississippi recall this injunction and give emphasis to the parallel—put none but democrats in office.

We have gained a great victory—Bull Run or Chickamauga. Let us follow it up to the securing of results.

The white people must be welded into one compact organization. All differences of opinion, all personal aspirations, must be settled within our own organization, and from its decision there must be no appeal. Otherwise each recurring election produces its disorders.

[From the Meridian Mercury.]

Our correspondent at Running Water Mills makes his points well. His positions cannot successfully be contradicted. The miserable bunglers who have put the negro in the Constitution have certainly written themselves down asses all. When we accept "results of the war" we do not accept the notion of statesmen, but the blunders of unreasoning malice and stupidity, and of course we continue to accept it only so long as we are compelled to.

[From the Jackson Clarion.]

Appeal after appeal has been made in vain to the colored people. No more appeals will be made to them.

[From the Alabama Examiner.]

The present contest is rather a revolution than a political campaign; it is the rebellion, if you see fit to apply that term.

[From the Forest Register.]

In this connection we will state that the white men who ally themselves with negroes in this conflict need not expect any better fate than they; fact is, they will be the first to suffer, if the Caucasian can find them at all when trouble comes.

In July, 1875, the Raymond Gazette, whose editor is now a member of the Legislature, and which is published only eight miles from Clinton, where the bloody riot of last September occurred, made this startling demand:

There are those who think that the leaders of the radical party have carried this system of fraud and falsehood just far enough in Hinds County, and that the time has come when it should be stopped—peaceably if possible, forcibly if necessary. And to this end it is proposed that whenever a radical pow-wow is to be held, the nearest anti-radical club appoint a committee of ten discreet, intelligent, and reputable citizens, fully identified with the interests of the neighborhood and well known as men of veracity, to attend as representatives of the tax-payers of the neighborhood and the county, and true friends of the negroes assembled, and that whenever the radical speakers proceed to mislead the negroes and open with falsehoods and deceptions and misrepresentations, the committee stop them right then and there, and compel them to tell truth or quit the stand.

The Clinton riot was the direct outgrowth of this demand. What follows? The same paper, of date July 26, 1876, shows that this vicious policy has been renewed in Hinds County, as follows:

DEMOCRATIC CENSORS.

The county executive committee of the democrats and conservatives of Hinds County held a meeting at Raymond the other day, at which, on motion, it was ordered that each club in the county appoint a special committee whose business it shall be to attend any and every radical meeting held in its vicinity, and that each of said committees shall report to its own club and to this executive committee the action, attendance, and general tone and temper of said meeting.

A SYSTEM OF COERCION.

A very general system of coercion was adopted throughout the South by democratic clubs and associations agreeing not to employ negroes who voted the republican ticket, not to lease them lands, nor to furnish them with or allow them to obtain for themselves any means of subsistence.

The proofs of this are overwhelming. I read from the Chickasaw Messenger a communication from Buena Vista, Mississippi:

BUENA VISTA, MISSISSIPPI, January 1, 1876.

EDITOR MESSENGER: The following list comprises the freedmen that have been reported by the members of the Buena Vista democratic conservative club as the one-third that would be refused to recontract for the year 1876. You are requested by the club to publish their names in the Messenger.

Respectfully, yours,

C. A. M. PULLIMAN,
Secretary Buena Vista Democratic Conservative Club.

"Fred. Crow, Frank Williams, Dary Holliman, John Doss, Wade Pulliam, Calvin Gladney, Joe Moore, Henry Johnson, Anderson Williams, Ed. Bramlett, John Pulliam, Ben Valliant, Gay Brand, Wash Chandler, Jake Walker, Henry Woodard, Lawson Pulliam, W. Huddlestone, Martin Pulliam, Ed. Kyle, Calvin Gray, John Buchanan, Dan. Punds, Albert Conor, Ed. Nathan, Jim Pulliam, Simon Baskin, Bill Pulliam, George Gates, J. Featherston, Shadi Love, Hilliard Fields.

"We are not familiar with the names of all the leading darkies in Buena Vista, but it occurs to us that many of them do not appear upon the list sent to us. We may not understand aright the action of the Buena Vista club, but our impression was that one-third of the laborers were to be discharged, and that one-third should include such turbulent, vicious rascals as Fred McIntosh, Prince Huddlestone, and others who once held high carnival in that section. Let us have no 'whipping the devil around the stump,' friends, but let us carry our pledges both in spirit and letter."

HOUSTON, January, 1876.

Pursuant to a call of the president, the club met at the court-house at eleven o'clock a. m., W. S. Bates presiding.

On motion of Captain Frank Burkitt, the following resolutions were read:

1. That we solemnly declare our purpose to stand to and abide by our pledges made during the canvass, and that we will hold in utter detestation any man claiming to be a conservative democrat who by any equivocation shall in the least violate the sacred promises made by us previous to the election, either as a club or as individuals.

2. That at no time and under no circumstances will we employ those who are regarded as leaders in the radical party.

3. That we will not employ any laborer who has been discharged by any member of our club because of his past political course.

4. That the members of this club are requested to send into the secretary the names of all persons turned off by them under the above resolutions and that the executive committee of the county is requested to publish their names.

5. That every other club in the county is requested to take like action.

6. That our papers are requested to publish these resolutions and the names of persons sent to them by the executive committee.

7. That colored men are invited to join this club.

8. That this club meet the first Saturday in each month.

J. B. GLADNEY, Secretary.

[From the Okolona (Mississippi) States, November 18, 1875.]

The radical party of Mississippi contend that intimidation won the white-line victory. It is not the first time, neither will it be the last time in which intimidation has been successfully used. The white men have been intimidated in times past, and we wonder which has the best of the bargain. We are so situated that we are obliged to fight the devil with fire. Let the white men not be afraid to intimidate evil-doers. Intimidation is legitimate, perfectly legitimate.

Ex-Governor Benjamin G. Humphries, of Mississippi, made a speech at a reunion of the Thirteenth Mississippi Confederate Infantry, at Meridian, on the 22d of November, 1875, in which he said:

We have surrendered none of our convictions and still claim the right of vindication. In looking back at our past actions and motives, and the wrongs we have suffered and are still suffering, we confess that we have no regrets for the choice we made between the "higher-law" license of majorities in the Union and the sacred security of self-government in the States, between the Federal and confederate governments. We are not conscious of a solitary dereliction of duty, either as citizens or soldiers, and feel that truth, reason, and religion exculpate us from wrong-doing. We know we were right, and though crushed to earth we should ever remember, and teach our children to remember, our cause was just! We are still proud of the cause and glory in the fight we made.

After the election, the Meridian Mercury of November 20, 1875, says:

We have to contend with the blunder of the fifteenth amendment while it stands as best we can. Ridiculous appeals to the reason and judgment of the negro have been the cause of incalculable injury in the inflation of his vanity and making him believe he was of real consequence as a governing element in the body-politic. Now that the negro in this State is down and his personal self-conceit well knocked out of him, it is probably a fit time for the white people to impress upon him that the white people will in future control the politics of this State, and that he should keep himself in his proper sphere and leave to the intelligent white man the exclusive use of statecraft for the best interest of both races. Impress him continually with the idea of his unfitness for the ballot and his proper place on election day away from the polls.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAVAGE. I move that his time be extended.

Mr. HALE. I hope that another hour may be given him.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be the effect of an indefinite extension, to which the Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. I could fill many columns of our RECORD with evidences like those above quoted from the gentleman's own State. In the light of this testimony, is it possible for us to believe that the transformation had occurred in the gentleman's own State in the election of that Legislature that made him a Senator?

If the testimony of the democratic press of Mississippi is to be credited, the late election in the State of Mississippi was tainted with fraud and managed by intimidation unparalleled by anything in our recent political history. Let the gentleman explain this striking fact: There are many thousand more colored than white voters in Mississippi. In the election of 1873 the republican party had 22,976 majority; in the election last autumn the democratic party had 30,922. How came this change of more than 53,000, in the short space of two years, if there was a free and uncoerced vote of the electors of that State?

The President of the United States has sent to the Senate a letter addressed by him to Governor Chamberlain, under date of July 26, 1876, from which I read a few words of high official authority, bearing upon the point I am now discussing. He says:

The scene at Hamburgh, as cruel, bloodthirsty, wanton, unprovoked, and as uncalled for as it was, is only a repetition of the course that has been pursued in other southern States within the last few years, notably in Mississippi and Louisiana. Mississippi is governed to-day by officials chosen through fraud and violence such as would scarcely be accredited to savages, much less to a civilized and Christian people. How long these things are to continue or what is to be the final remedy the Great Ruler of the universe only knows; but I have an abiding faith that the remedy will come, and come speedily, and I earnestly hope that it will come peacefully. There has never been a desire on the part of the North to humiliate the South. Nothing is claimed for one State that is not freely accorded to all others, unless it may be the right to kill negroes and republicans without fear of punishment and without loss of caste or reputation. This has seemed to be a privilege claimed by a few States.

But it is aside from my purpose to go into the question of the validity of the late election in Mississippi. That subject is being investigated by a committee of the Senate, and I shall be surprised, if from the evidence they have taken, they do not concur in the opinion I have expressed. I desire gentlemen to remember that the great question I am discussing is, had the great transformation taken place among the gentleman's constituents in the late autumn of 1875?

The answer of his own people is overwhelmingly in the negative.

I now ask, had the transformation occurred in the winter and spring of the present year?

I hold in my hand the report of an address of Rev. Taylor Martin, of Charlotte, North Carolina, the town to which Congress lately gave a mint building, to be used for school purposes. The address was made on Decoration Day, May 5, 1876. I quote:

The South is to-day ruled over by the miserable thrall of Yankeedom; but they cannot muzzle our chivalry and patriotic devotion to the "lost cause." We have fought for our rights, but in God's dispensation we are vanquished, but not cowed. Slavery was a divine institution, and we must have that institution or the South will ever be bankrupt. They speak of our cause as the "lost cause." If so, shall it be lost forever? No! a new generation has sprung up, and at a not far distant day there will be "stars and bars" floating proudly over our sunny South. In the next political campaign we must, even if in the minority, support a southern man who will build up our interests and hurl the Yankee pickpockets from our midst. We are to-day united to the puritanical host by an artificial tie; but we are a distinct people, and God and the right will enable us to show to the world the truth and the equity of our claims. Our statesmen now in Congress are the cream of that body, and are the only element that reflects credit on the United States. Is it not better to hang on to the "lost cause" than to stay in a government of corruption?

Mr. YEATES. With the consent of the gentleman from Ohio, I want to state that I have seen under the signature of the gentleman from whom he has just quoted a statement denying in toto every word of what has just been read; and a number of gentlemen who heard the speech certify that the quotation is false in every particular.

Mr. GARFIELD. If that be the fact I will cheerfully strike the extract from my speech. I never before heard its authenticity denied.

Mr. YEATES. There is no doubt of the correctness of my statement.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the extract and the denial stand together. But, sir, I will quote a recent utterance of public opinion, the authenticity of which I am quite sure no gentleman will deny. They will neither deny the ability nor the prominence of Robert Toombs of Georgia, formerly a Senator and a Secretary of the Treasury. On the 25th of January, 1876, he addressed the Legislature of Georgia by invitation; and the following extract from that speech will show how far the transformation has taken place in him and in his followers:

We got a good many honest fellows into the first Legislature, but I will tell you how we got them there. I will tell you the truth. The newspapers won't tell it to you. We got them there by carrying the black vote, by intimidation and bribery, and I helped to do it! I would have scorned the people if they had not done it! And I will buy them as long as they put beasts to go to the ballot-box! No man should be given the elective franchise who has not the intelligence to use it properly. The rogue should not have it, for government is made to punish him; the fool should not have it, for government is made to take care of him! Now, these miserable wretches—the Yankees—have injected five millions of savages into the stomach of our body-politic, and the man who says he accepts negro suffrage, I say, accursed be he! I will accept everything; I will accept Grant and empire before I will accept such a democrat! The poor, ignorant negro—talk of him governing you and me! It takes the highest order of intellect to govern the people, and these poor wretches talk of governing us! Why, they can't perpetuate their own negro power. In the countries where they were in the majority they did not preserve their power and perpetuate their rule. My remedy helped us to break that up. We carried them with us by bribery and intimidation. I advised it and paid my money for it! You all know it, but won't say it. But I will say it, for I fear no man, and am prepared to render an account to none but the Great Judge, before whom I must appear in a few years, for my enemies have thought my services to my country so great that they have done me the honor to exclude me from again serving my people. I contest that honor with our chief, Mr. Davis. I am just as good as he is, and he is no better than I am. I demand that they shall place me beside him. I thank them for it! It is very few things that I have to thank them for, but I do thank them for that.

In view of the testimony I have offered, we must wait for an answer to the question, when and where did the transformation occur? It occurred long ago in the philosophical and patriotic heart and mind of the gentleman from Mississippi; but has it occurred in the majority of the eleven millions who joined with him to destroy the Union, to perpetuate slavery, to defend the cause that is now "lost?"

Had it occurred last week in the town of Meridian, in the gentleman's own State. I quote from the Meridian Mercury of July 29, 1876:

We heard LAMAR'S Scooba speech, and while his truth to his beloved South, perhaps, flamed out a little more than common we remarked nothing inconsistent with his other speeches we had heard or read of. The morning of his arrival here the Mercury contained a sharp fling at him about the Sumner oration, and that night at the court-house he ventured to chastise us sharply for it in the house of our friends and was boisterously applauded. We consoled ourself that the applause might have been more in compliment to the excellence of the oratory than in satisfaction at our castigation. We had our revenge, though, in taking which we inaugurated the policy of the canvass in spite of him which carried the State like a prairie on fire. He, and others who wanted to dress up in a nice starched and ironed white shirt that would shame the bloody shirt, established a laundry at Jackson on the 4th of August, and a great many patronized it and came out in snowy white fronts to present themselves creditably before the northern public sentiment. In their party pow-wow of that day, disregarding the deep under-current of public opinion, they declared by formal resolution against the white-line policy.

The Mercury had sounded the depths of that under-current, and we knew it would not do. In heart we felt with the platform, but our judgment assured us that the canvass must be lost on it, and that to practice it were a fatal error. We denounced the platform upon the instant, and took what care we could that LAMAR'S speeches upon his national reputation should not ruin our canvass. We called upon the people to "step across the platform" which denamed it, and form the White Line beyond it. The summons was music to their ears, and the unconquered and unconquerable Saxon race of Mississippi rallied to the slogan.

* * * * * * *

We have got the State; we know how we got it; we know how to keep it; and we are going to keep it without regard to race numerical majority.

Mr. Chairman, after the facts I have cited, am I not warranted in raising a grave doubt whether the transformation occurred at all except in a few patriotic and philosophic minds? The light gleams first on the mountain peaks; but shadows and darkness linger in the valley. It is in the valley masses of those lately in rebellion that the light of this beautiful philosophy, which I honor, has not penetrated. Is it safer to withhold from them the custody and supreme control of the precious treasures of the Republic until the midday sun of liberty, justice, and equal laws, shall shine upon them with unclouded ray?

In view of all the facts, considering the centuries of influence that brought on the great struggle, is it not reasonable to suppose that it will require yet more time to effect the great transformation. Did not the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GEORGE F. HOAR] sum up the case fairly and truthfully when he said of the South, in his Louisiana report of 1874:

They submitted to the national authority not because they would, but because they must. They abandoned the doctrine of State sovereignty, which they had claimed made their duty to their States paramount to that due to the nation in case of conflict, not because they would, but because they must. They submitted to the constitutional amendments which rendered their former slaves their equals in all political rights, not because they would, but because they must. The passions which led to the war, the passions which the war excited, were left untamed and unchecked, except so far as their exhibition was restrained by the arm of power.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] says there is no possibility that the South will again control national affairs, if the democracy be placed again in power. How is this? We are told that the South will vote as a unit for Tilden and Hendricks. Suppose those gentlemen also carry New York and Indiana. Does the gentleman believe that a northern minority of the democracy will control the Administration? Impossible! But if they did, would it better the case?

Let me put the question in another form. Suppose, gentlemen of the South, you had won the victory in the war; that you had captured Washington, and Gettysburg, and Philadelphia, and New York; and we of the North, defeated and conquered, had lain prostrate at your feet. Do you believe that by this time you would be ready and willing to intrust to us—our Garrisons, our Phillipses, and our Wades, and the great array of those who were the leaders of our thought—to intrust us the fruits of your victory, the enforcement of your doctrines of State sovereignty and the work of extending the domain of slavery? Do you think so? And if not, will you not pardon us when we tell you that we are not quite ready to trust the precious results of the nation's victory in your hands? Let it be constantly borne in mind that I am not debating a question of equal rights and privileges within the Union, but whether those who so lately sought to destroy it ought to be chosen to control its destiny for the next four years.

I hope my public life has given proof that I do not cherish a spirit of malice or bitterness toward the South. Perhaps they will say I have no right to advise them; but at the risk of being considered impertinent I will express my conviction that the bane of the southern people, for the last twenty-five years, has been that they have trusted the advice of the democratic party. The very remedy which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] offers for the ills of his people, has been and still is their bane. The democratic party has been the evil genius of the South in all these years. They yielded their own consciences to you on the slavery question, and led you to believe that the North would always yield. They made you believe that we would not fight to save the Union. They made you believe that if we ever dared to cross the Potomac or the Ohio to put down your rebellion we could only do so across the dead bodies of many hundred thousands of northern democrats. They made you believe that the war would begin in the streets of our northern cities; that we were a community of shop-keepers, of sordid money-getters, and would not stand against your fiery chivalry. You thought us cold, slow, lethargic; and in some respects we are. There are some differences between us that spring from origin and influences of climate—differences not unlike the description of the poet, that—

> Bright and fierce and fickle is the South;
> And dark and true and tender is the North, differences that kept us from a good understanding.

You thought that our coldness, our slowness, indicated a lack of spirit and of patriotism, and you were encouraged in that belief by most of the northern democracy; but not by all. They warned you at Charleston in 1860.

And when the great hour struck, there were many noble democrats in the North, who lifted the flag of the Union far above the flag of party; but there was a residuum of democracy, called in the slang of the time "copperheads," who were your evil genius from the beginning of the war till its close, and ever since. Some of them sat in these seats, and never rejoiced when we won a victory, and never grieved when we lost one. They were the men who sent their Vallandighams to give counsel and encouragement to your rebellion and to buoy you up with false hope, that at last you would conquer by the aid of their treachery. I honor you, gentlemen of the South, ten thousand times more than I honor such democrats of the North.

I said they were your evil genius. Why, in 1864, when we were almost at the culminating point of the war, their Vallandighams and Tildens (and both of these men were on the committee of resolutions) uttered the declaration, as the voice of the democracy, that the experiment of war to preserve the Union was a failure and that hostilities should cease. They asked us to sound the recall on our bugles, to call our conquering armies back from the contest, and trust to their machinations to save their party at the expense of a broken and ruined country. Brave soldiers of the lost cause, did you not, even in that hour of peril, in your heart of hearts loathe them with supremest scorn? But for their treachery at Chicago, the war might have ended and a hundred thousand precious lives been saved. But your evil genius pursued you, and the war went on. And later, when you would have accepted the constitutional amendment and restoration without universal suffrage, the same evil genius held you back. In 1868 it still deceived you. In 1872 it led you into

> A gulf profound as that Serbonian bog
> Betwixt Damiata and Mount Casius old,
> Where armies whole have sunk.

Let not the eloquence of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] lure you again to its brink.

Mr. Chairman, it is now time to inquire as to the fitness of this democratic party to take control of our great nation and its vast and important interests for the next four years. I put the question to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] what has the democratic party done to merit that great trust? He tried to show in what respects it would not be dangerous. I ask him to show in what it would be safe. I affirm, and I believe I do not misrepresent the great democratic party, that in the last sixteen years they have not advanced one great national idea that is not to-day exploded and as dead as Julius Cæsar. And if any democrat here will rise and name a great national doctrine his party has advanced, within that time, that is now alive and believed in, I will yield to hear him. [A pause.] In default of an answer, I will attempt to prove my negative.

What were the great central doctrines of the democratic party in the presidential struggle of 1860? The followers of Breckinridge said slavery had a right to go wherever the Constitution goes. Do you believe that to-day? Is there a man on this continent that holds that doctrine to-day? Not one. That doctrine is dead and buried. The other wing of the democracy held that slavery might be established in the Territories if the people wanted it. Does anybody hold that doctrine to-day? Dead, absolutely dead!

Come down to 1864. Your party, under the lead of Tilden and Vallandigham, declared the experiment of war to save the Union was a failure. Do you believe that doctrine to-day? That doctrine was shot to death by the guns of Farragut at Mobile, and driven, in a tempest of fire, from the valley of the Shenandoah, by Sheridan less than a month after its birth at Chicago.

Come down to 1868. You declared the constitutional amendment revolutionary and void. Does any man on this floor say so to-day? If so, let him rise and declare it.

Do you believe in the doctrine of the Broadhead letter of 1868, that the so-called constitutional amendments should be disregarded? No; the gentleman from Mississippi accepts the results of the war! The democratic doctrine of 1868 is dead!

I walk across that democratic camping-ground as in a grave-yard. Under my feet resound the hollow echoes of the dead. There lies slavery, a black marble column at the head of its grave, on which I read: Died in the flames of the civil war; loved in its life; lamented in its death; followed to its bier by its only mourner, the democratic party, but dead! And here is a double grave: Sacred to the memory of squatter sovereignty. Died in the campaign of 1860. On the reverse side: Sacred to the memory of Dred Scott and the Breckinridge doctrine. Both dead at the hands of Abraham Lincoln! And here a monument of brimstone: Sacred to the memory of the rebellion; the war against it is a failure; Tilden et Vallandigham fecerunt, A. D. 1864. Dead on the field of battle; shot to death by the million guns of the Republic. The doctrine of secession; of State sovereignty. Dead. Expired in the flames of civil war, amid the blazing rafters of the confederacy, except that the modern Æneas, fleeing out of the flames of that ruin, bears on his back another Anchises of State sovereignty, and brings it here in the person of the honorable gentleman from the Appomattox district of Virginia, [Mr. TUCKER.] [Laughter.] All else is dead.

Now, gentlemen, are you sad, are you sorry for these deaths? Are you not glad that secession is dead? that slavery is dead? that squatter sovereignty is dead? that the doctrine of the failure of the war is dead? Then you are glad that you were outvoted in 1869, in 1864, in 1868, and in 1872. If you have tears to shed over these losses, shed them in the grave-yard, but not in this House of living men. I know that many a southern man rejoices that these issues are dead. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] has clothed his joy with eloquence.

Now, gentlemen, if you yourselves are glad that you have suffered defeat during the last sixteen years, will you not be equally glad when you suffer defeat next November? [Laughter.] But pardon that remark; I regret it; I would use no bravado.

Now, gentlemen, come with me for a moment into the camp of the republican party and review its career. Our central doctrine in 1860 was that slavery should never extend itself over another foot of American soil. Is that doctrine dead? It is folded away like a victorious banner; its truth is alive forevermore on this continent. In 1864 we declared that we would put down the rebellion and secession. And that doctrine lives and will live when the second Centennial has arrived! Freedom, national, universal, and perpetual—our great constitutional amendments, are they alive or dead? Alive, thank the God that shields both liberty and Union. And our national credit, saved from the assaults of Pendleton; saved from the assaults of those who struck it later, rising higher and higher at home and abroad; and only now in doubt lest its chief, its only enemy, the democracy should triumph in November.

Mr. Chairman, ought the republican party to surrender its truncheon of command to the democracy? The gentleman from Mississippi says, if this were England, the ministry would go out in twenty-four hours with such a state of things as we have here. Ah, yes! that is an ordinary case of change of administration. But if this were England, what would she have done at the end of the war? England made one such mistake as the gentleman asks this country to make, when she threw away the achievements of the grandest man that ever trod her highway of power. Oliver Cromwell had overturned the throne of despotic power and had lifted his country to a place of masterful greatness among the nations of the earth; and when, after his death, his great scepter was transferred to a weak though not unlineal hand, his country, in a moment of reactionary blindness, brought back the Stuarts. England did not recover from that folly until, in 1689, the Prince of Orange drove from her island the last of that weak and wicked line. Did she afterward repeat the blunder?

For more than fifty years, pretenders were seeking the throne; and the wars on her coast, in Scotland and in Ireland, threatened the overthrow of the new dynasty and the disruption of the empire. But the solid phlegm, the magnificent pluck, the roundabout common sense of Englishmen steadied the throne till the cause of the Stuarts was dead. They did not change as soon as the battle was over, and let the Stuarts come back to power.

And how was it in our own country, when our fathers had triumphed in the war of the Revolution? When the victory was won, did they open their arms to the loyalists, as they called themselves, or tories, as our fathers called them? Did they invite them back? Not one. They confiscated their lands. The States passed decrees that no tory should live on our soil. And when they were too poor to take themselves away, our fathers, burdened as the young nation was with debt, raised the money to transport the tories beyond seas or across the Canada border. They went to England, to France, to Nova Scotia, to New Brunswick, and especially to Halifax; and that town was such a resort for them, that it became the swear-word of our boyhood. "Go to Halifax" was a substitute for a more impious, but not more opprobrious expression. The presence of tories made it opprobrious.

Now I do not refer to this as an example which we ought to follow. O, no. We live in a milder era, in an age softened by the more genial influence of Christian civilization. Witness the sixty-one men who fought against us in the late war, and who are now sitting in this and the other Chamber of Congress. Every one of them is here because a magnanimous nation freely voted that they might come; and they are welcome. Only please do not say that you are just now especially fitted to rule the Republic, and to be the apostles of liberty and of blessings to the colored race.

Gentlemen, the North has been asked, these many years, to regard the sensibilities of the South. We have been told that you were brave and sensitive men, and that we ought not to throw fire-brands among you. Most of our people have treated you with justice and magnanimity. In some things we have given you just cause for complaint; but I want to remind you that the North also has sensibilities to be regarded. The ideas which they cherished and for which they fought, triumphed in the highest court, the court of last resort, the field of battle. Our people intend to abide by that verdict and to enforce the mandate. They rejoice at every evidence of acquiescence. They look forward to the day when the distinctions of North and South shall have melted away in the grander sentiment of nationality. But they do not think it is yet safe to place the control of this great work in your hands. In the hands of some of you they would be safe, perfectly safe; but to the hands of the united South, joined with the most reactionary elements of the northern democracy, our people will not yet surrender the Government.

I am aware that there is a general disposition "to let by-gones be by-gones," and to judge of parties and of men, not by what they have been, but by what they are and what they propose.

That view is partly just and partly erroneous. It is just and wise to bury resentments and animosities. It is erroneous in this, that parties have an organic life and spirit of their own—an individuality and character which outlive the men who compose them; and the spirit and traditions of a party should be considered in determining their fitness for managing the affairs of a nation. For this purpose I have reviewed the history of the democratic party.

I have no disposition nor would it be just to shield the republican party from fair and searching criticism. It has been called to meet questions novel and most difficult. It has made many mistakes. It has stumbled and blundered; has had some bad men in it; has suffered from the corruptions incident to the period following a great war; and it has suffered rebuke and partial defeat in consequence. But has it been singular and alone in these respects? With all its faults, I fearlessly challenge gentlemen to compare it with any party known to our politics. Has the gentleman shown that the democratic party is its superior either in virtue or intelligence? Gentlemen, the country has been testing your qualities during the last eight months. The people gave you a probationary trial by putting you in control of this House. When you came here, in December last, the same distinguished gentleman to whom I am replying, addressed you on the evening of your first caucus in these words:

> There has been for some time in the public mind a conviction profound and all-pervading that the civil service of the country has not been directed from considerations of public good, but from those of party profit, and for corrupt, selfish, and unpatriotic designs. The people demand at our hands a sweeping and thorough reform, which shall be conducted in a spirit that will secure the appointment to places of trust and responsibility of the honest, the experienced, and the capable.

That is sound doctrine; and I have advocated here and elsewhere and during the last eight years. I remind him that the pernicious doctrine that "to the victors belong the spoils," is of democratic origin; that nearly half a century of democratic tradition and practice has fastened upon the country. We found it, and have been cursed by it ever since; and though some efforts have been made to reform it, the good work is hardly begun. When, therefore, the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR,] as chairman of the democratic caucus, at the opening of the session, announced the doctrine I have quoted, we had reason to hope that a new era of civil service had dawned upon the Capitol. But what performance has followed his high-sounding proclamation? No sooner did this reforming party take possession of this House, than it began the most wholesale, sweeping changes of officials from the highest to the humblest employés of the House, that has been known in our history. Many of these officers had come to us from our democratic predecessors; but they were almost all dismissed to give place to hungry partisans. Sixty-seven Union soldiers, who were faithfully doing their duties here, were turned out, and among those who filled their places were forty-seven rebel soldiers.

Mr. WILLIS. May I inquire of the gentleman how many Union soldiers were put in office?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not know the precise number.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will institute a comparison he will find that it is decidedly favorable to the democratic party so far as patriotism and favoritism to Union soldiers is concerned.

Mr. GARFIELD. The facts do not bear the gentleman out in his statement. This is the practice which followed your professions of civil-service reform.

Mr. HOLMAN. As a matter of justice and fair play the gentleman from Ohio certainly knows and should admit that a large number of disabled soldiers who are republicans are still holding offices in this House.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the gentleman from Indiana interrupting the gentleman from Ohio. Let the gentlemen opposite give our side an opportunity to be heard for once.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am almost through and will soon yield the floor.

In answer to the gentleman from Indiana, I understand that a considerable number of democratic Union soldiers were appointed; but I was discussing civil-service reform and the declaration of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] that appointments to office should not be used as party rewards.

I desire to glance for a moment now at the career of this House and at what they have done and omitted to do. Passing by their treatment of contested-election cases, their appointment of officers, employés, and committee-clerks who have reflected no credit upon the House, I desire to ask what valuable work of general legislation has this House accomplished?

We had hardly been here a month, when, among the first things demanded was that, in disregard of the deep feelings of the northern people, it was proposed to crown Jefferson Davis with full and free amnesty, notwithstanding he had contemptuously declared he never would ask for it; and this was to be done, or no amnesty was to be granted to any one. And when we objected because he was the author of the unutterable atrocities of Libby and Andersonville prisons, the debate which followed disclosed the spirit and temper of the dominant party.

We were hardly in our seats when the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] brought in a bill to repeal a statute of 1866 which no democrat had before that proposed to disturb, so far as I know; a statute which provided that no man who voluntarily went into the rebellion against the Union should ever hold a commission in our Army or Navy. And a democrat from my own State, [Mr. BANNING,] the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, became the champion of that bill; and this House passed it.

Again, we had passed a law to protect the sanctity and safety of the ballot in national elections, so that the horrors of the Ku-Klux and the white-linisms should not run riot at the polls, and among the earliest acts of this House was a clause added to one of the appropriation bills to repeal the election law; and to effect that repeal they kept up the struggle lately under the fierce rays of the dog-star. They have been compelled by a republican Senate to abandon the attempt.

Again, what have they neglected? Early in the session, indeed in the first days of it, a proposition was made, introduced by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. Blaine,] so to amend the Constitution as to remove forever from the party politics of the country the vexed and dangerous question of church and state by preventing the use of the school funds for sectarian purposes. That amendment was sent to the Committee on the Judiciary to sleep, perhaps to die; for it is said to have been three times voted down in that committee.

Again, the Secretary of the Treasury officially informed us that his power was exhausted further to refund the debt; and that if we would give him the requisite authority he could refund four or five hundred millions more at so favorable a rate as to save to the Treasury at least 1 per cent. per annum of the whole amount. The Senate passed the bill more than six months ago, but this House has taken no action upon it.

Our revenues have been threatened with a deficit and our industries have been shaken with alarm by bills reported to the House but never been brought to a vote; for example, the tariff bill, floating lazily upon the stagnant waters of the House,

> As idle as a painted ship
> Upon a painted ocean—

a promise to free-traders, a threat of danger to manufacturers, but with no prospect or purpose of acting upon it.

And the Government has been crippled by the withholding of necessary appropriations; withheld, as I do not hesitate to say, for the purpose of making political capital at the coming election, in which the gentleman from Mississippi desires his party to succeed in the name of honesty and reform. His colleague was frank enough to declare that he wanted to reduce the general appropriations, so as to have money enough to devote to some scheme for his section, such as the cotton claims and the Southern Pacific Railroad.

But party necessity has held many waiting schemes and claims in leash. They are anchored in the lobbies and committee-rooms of this House, till the election is over. There is the bill to refund the cotton tax to the amount of $60,000,000, waiting to be launched, when the election is over. A subsidy of a hundred millions upstairs (Pacific railroad committee-room) is waiting to come down upon us for the Southern Pacific Railroad, when the election is over. There are $38,000,000 of private claims, southern claims, war claims, waiting to burst up from the committee-rooms below stairs, when the election is over.

While these things surround us; while the very earth shakes with the tramp of the advancing army of schemers, who are coming "with the Constitution and an appropriation," the gentleman from Mississippi thinks that as a measure of reform the democratic party ought at once to be brought back into power!

Meanwhile what has been the chief employment of this House? It has divided itself in a score of police courts, in the hope of finding corruption. Like those insects that feed upon sores, it has hoped to live and thrive upon the corruption of others. Like that scavenger of the air, the carrion bird that buries its beak in the rotton carcass, so the democratic party seeks to fatten on the refuse which is here and there thrown out of the public service.

This House has adopted eighty-three resolutions of investigation, besides a legion of resolutions of inquiry of the several Departments. Twenty-five standing committees and eight select committees, up to the 20th of June, in all thirty-three committees, have been raking all the slums of the nation, to find, if possible, some savory morsel with which to impregnate the air during the coming election.

And what have they found? Has any one of these committees found that a single dollar has been stolen from the Treasury of the United States? If so, let them declare it. Why, sir, the republican party for the last three years has been investigating its own Administration far more effectually than you have investigated it. It has had not only the courage of its opinions, but the courage to punish its own rascals.

But, gentlemen, after all that may be said of corruptions and wrong-doing, do you show, on that ground, any good reason why the republican party should surrender the Government to the democracy? Would it be better? It is a matter of official record that the Treasury suffered a far greater percentage of loss, by mismanagement and defalcation, under your administration than it has suffered under ours.

In an official letter to the Senate, under date of June 19, 1876, the Secretary of the Treasury copies from his records the aggregate losses by defalcations and the loss per $1,000 in each period of four years since 1834 in all the Departments and Bureaus of the Government. Without quoting the table at length, the grand aggregate stands thus:

From January 1, 1834, to July 1, 1861, the total disbursements of the Government were $1,369,977,502.52; the total defalcations were $12,361,722.91; or a loss of $9.02 to the $1,000.

From July 1, 1861, to July 1, 1875, the total disbursements were $12,566,892,569.53; the total defalcations were $9,905,205.37; or a loss of twenty-six cents to the $1,000. In the latter period the disbursements were nearly ten times as great as in the former, and the defalcations one-third less.

Is this country so given over to corruption as the gentleman from Mississippi suggests? I will answer by quoting two distinguished witnesses. In his able speech on the impeachment trial, one of the democratic managers, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LORD,] said:

> Senators, I am one of those who believe in progress. I believe that this age is the best age which the sun has ever shone upon; I believe there is more of religion, more of humanity, more of love, more of charity in this age than in any age that has preceded it.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> There is now a higher and healthier sentiment than in any former age. Men are held to official responsibilities now, thank God, that they never were before. The time has been in the recollection of many of you when a person thought he had the right to use his official position for his own advantage; but that time has gone by, and a good deal of what we see and hear which leads a great many so mournfully to say that the age is going backward and we are receding to barbarism, very much which occasions the apparent increase of wrong arises from the higher demands of a greater civilization, from the higher plane of an enlightened people.

Now, I ask the Clerk to read a paragraph which I have marked from the centennial address of Rev. Dr. Storrs, a man fit to be the teacher of his race.

The Clerk read as follows:

> I scout the thought that we as a people are worse than our fathers. John Adams, at the head of the War Department in 1776, wrote bitter laments of the corruption which existed in even that infant age of the Republic, and of the spirit of venality, rapacious and insatiable, which was then the most alarming enemy of America. He declared himself ashamed of the age in which he lived. In Jefferson's day all federalists expected the universal dominion of French infidelity. In Jackson's day all whigs thought the country gone to ruin already, as if Mr. Biddle had had the entire public hope locked up in the vaults of his terminated bank. In Polk's day the excitements of the Mexican war gave life and germination to many seeds of rascality. There has never been a time, not here alone, in any country, when the fierce light of incessant inquiry blazing on men in public life would not have revealed forces of evil like those we have seen or when the condemnation which followed the discovery would have been sharper. And it is among my deepest convictions that, with all which has happened to debase and debauch it, the nation at large was never before more mentally vigorous or morally sound.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now, Mr. Chairman, after all the fearful corruption of his time described by John Adams, our fathers never thought it necessary to call the tories back to take charge of their newly gained liberties.

I will close by calling your attention again to the great problem before us. Over this vast horizon of interests North and South, above all party prejudices and personal wrong-doing, above our battle hosts and our victorious cause, above all that we hoped for and won, or you hoped for and lost, is the grand, onward movement of the Republic to perpetuate its glory, to save liberty alive, to preserve exact and equal justice to all, to protect and foster all these priceless principles, until they shall have crystallized into the form of enduring law and become inwrought into the life and the habits of our people.

And, until these great results are accomplished, it is not safe to take one step backward. It is still more unsafe to trust interests of such measureless value in the hands of an organization whose members have never comprehended their epoch, have never been in sympathy with its great movements, who have resisted every step of its progress, and whose principal function has been across the pathway of the nation.

> To lie in cold obstruction

It is most unsafe of all to trust that organization, when for the first time since the war, it puts forward for the first and second place of honor and command, men who, in our days of greatest danger, esteemed party above country, and felt not one throb of patriotic ardor for the triumph of the imperiled Union, but from the beginning to the end hated the war and hated those who carried our eagles to victory.

No, no, gentlemen; our enlightened and patriotic people will not follow such leaders in their rearward march. Their myriad faces are turned the other way; and along their serried lines, still rings the cheering cry, "Forward!" till our great work is fully and worthily done. [Loud and continued applause.]

REMONETIZATION OF SILVER.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to discuss the two irritating questions that have occupied so much of the time of this House for the last two days. There are other questions of greater magnitude that we should look to and pass upon in the few remaining days of this session.

It is a bootless question at this time as to what the Judiciary Committee has done or may do with Mr. Blaine. The judgment of this House in his case has been suspended until next session, and I do not now propose to waste time with a consideration of it. And it is also now a bootless question as to the terms and conditions upon which the war was ended or as to how the people of the South suffered upon the close of that war. I sympathized with them as deeply and felt for them as keenly and deplored as much as any gentleman on this floor the harsh manner in which they were persecuted by the Administration and the party in power. But all that is of the past, and I think it most wise to let those irritating questions pass into history and no longer seek to inflame the passions of the people and to array one section against another. Let us hear no more of war or rumors of war; let us turn our attention and direct our steps to the paths of peace. We all accept the situation, and it is our duty as patriots to utilize that situation for the benefit of the people, the whole people, in all parts of the country.

In the few remarks I shall make I propose to discuss another and different question, one that absorbs as much of the public attention, if not more, than any other question with which this Congress has had to deal: it is the remonetization of silver.

As the bill offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] presents that question more fairly than any one now pending before the House, I will ask the Clerk to report the title of the bill and also its fourth section.

The Clerk read as follows:

> A bill (H. R. No. 3635) to utilize the product of gold and silver mines, and for other purposes.
>
> SEC. 4. That the coin-notes issued under the provisions of this act shall be receivable without limit for all dues to the United States; and the coin mentioned in this act shall be a legal tender for all debts of the United States, public and private, not specified to be paid in gold coin.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. In addition to this bill I wish to say that upon the first opportunity I have I will offer the following resolution:

> Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be, and they are hereby, directed to report a bill to this House providing for the coinage of silver coin of the United States as it existed prior to the 12th day of February, 1873, the same to be a legal tender for all debts as it was under the laws existing prior to that date.

If this Congress shall persistently and improperly refuse to repeal the specie-resumption clause of the act of 1875 there will remain a renewed necessity to return to a double metallic standard, a necessity such as the present generation never knew and, I may add, no past generation ever experienced. This necessity is keenly seen and felt and feared by the people. The fact is apparent that the great body of the people demand its repeal; their future prosperity demands and depends upon it. We have recently witnessed the sessions of two national conventions, one at Cincinnati and the other at Saint Louis. At Cincinnati the delegates did not meet the question fairly and deal with it frankly. Nothwithstanding a large preponderance of the republican members on this floor and in the Senate and the candidates of that party are in favor of enforcing that act, and thus driving the debtor class to the wall, their delegates at Cincinnati did not dare to insert a plank in their platform opposing its repeal, while at Saint Louis, one of the largest conventions that ever assembled on this continent, composed of delegates from all sections of the country and fresh from the people, representing their views, its repeal was demanded in unequivocal terms. It remains to be seen whether democratic Representatives in Congress will repudiate the instructions from the people as expressed through their delegates in that convention. If that act is not to be repealed there will continue to remain, I repeat it, a necessity such as the Anglo-Saxon race never witnessed before for a return to a double metallic standard.

The debt of the United States is about $2,100,000,000, and it was stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] a few days ago that private citizens of the United States owe probably $2,500,000,000 more. Now, sir, take it that the figures I have just quoted are substantially correct and contemplate for one moment the situation. It will be seen that the relation of debtor and creditor in the United States involves about $5,000,000,000. With that vast debt hanging over the heads of the American people, a mortgage on their property and involving the honor of the country, it is gravely proposed to resume specie payment on the 1st day of January, 1879, and that all this vast debt from and after that date shall be paid in coin; not in the coin that the fathers and founders of the Republic made legal tender, but in gold coin alone.

Why, sir, do gentlemen remember that if this resumption act goes into operation the $369,000,000 in legal-tender currency is to be paid off with gold raised by the sale of interest-bearing Government bonds, which will increase the Government interest by various estimates from twenty to thirty-five millions of dollars annually? The annual interest now amounts to nearly $100,000,000, and where is it and this additional amount to come from? Gentlemen say it can be easily paid in gold, but do they forget that the annual interest of this Government upon bonds now outstanding and bonds to be issued to pay off the three hundred and sixty-nine millions of legal-tenders will amount to more money than the whole world's annual production of gold? Yet such is the fact. Upon this subject I quote from the speech of Hon. JOHN P. JONES, delivered in the United States Senate April 24, 1876:

I allude to the interest on the public debt, which debt is very largely held abroad. This interest now amounts to nearly $100,000,000 per annum. By selling bonds to the extent of $350,000,000, say at 10 per cent.—for it is perhaps hopeless to expect to do it at a lesser sacrifice—you will add $35,000,000 a year to your gold-interest debt, and those $35,000,000 to the portion held abroad. Where are these $35,000,000 to come from? Where are the whole $135 000,000 to come from? Your annual-interest charge will alone amount to more than the whole world's product of gold.

Is it not insane to talk or even think of paying the vast indebtedness of this country, public and private, in gold or upon a currency floated upon a gold basis? It is simply a physical and financial impossibility. If that is the fixed purpose of this national Legislature, the destruction of the hundreds of thousands of the debtor class will be complete. The circumlocution of resorting to specie resumption might as well be avoided, for the result could be more directly but not more effectively reached by a simple statute transferring the lands and tenements, goods and chattels, of the debtor class to the bondholder, the broker, the banker, and the money-changer. I repeat, that if you would stay the hand of financial destruction and avert the cries of sorrow and woe that would otherwise fall upon our ears, you must remonetize silver and postpone the day of resumption. Resumption may be possible and within the grasp of the people; it may be accomplished without detriment to any class; but this will require time and rigid economy, that economy which has been inaugurated in this House at this session, and which will save $40,000,000 annually to the people. Resumption must come, when it does come, through prosperity and not through contraction, distress, and adversity. Our bonds were bought, or a large portion of them were bought, at forty cents on the dollar in gold, and since then they have been legislated up to par and even beyond par. The interest is paid in coin and the bond is exempt from taxation. Therefore the bondholder is in a condition to resume, but the mass of the people are not.

Remonetize silver, infuse confidence among the people, and in a few years the financial affairs of the country will be in a healthy condition. We may thus be able to tide over the threatened trouble. But why not remonetize silver? I have heard with pain and regret from two members of this Congress, one from Pennsylvania [Mr. TOWNSEND] and the other from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] that they oppose the remonetization of silver for the reason, among others, that the great supply of American mines has tended to reduce its market value. Why, sir, the British dominions are the largest gold-producing sections of the world, and hence the Englishman, true to his interest, true to his government, and ever ready to add to its strength and material wealth and to add to the purchasing power of gold, has demonetized silver and reduced its market value; but why an American should join in the crusade against America's production, his own country's coin, I cannot understand. It is a high constitutional duty that this Congress owes to the country to provide for the coinage of silver as of its former purity and to make it a legal tender for all debts, public and private. This will go far to enhance its purchasing power both in Europe and America. European capitalists hold large amounts of our bonds, and will be induced by their interest to give silver its proper place and standard in value in the coinage of the world.

It is safe to assume that our fathers, the framers of the Constitution of the United States, were as patriotic and as far-seeing as we are. By the eighth section of the first article of that Constitution they conferred upon Congress the power "to coin money and to regulate the value thereof;" and by the tenth section of the same article they conferred upon the States respectively the power to make gold and silver a legal tender for the payment of all debts. Under this power so conferred upon Congress gold and silver were made and continued legal tender for three-quarters of a century, during which time with silver as a legal tender our area was more than doubled; our increase in population and wealth and progress in the arts and sciences stand unrivaled in the history of the world. If Congress shall deny to the people the relief to which under the Constitution they are clearly entitled, and shape legislation for the benefit of the favored and wealthy few, it will devolve upon the States, each speaking and acting for itself, to resort to the power quoted above and declare gold and silver a legal tender for contracts between man and man and for all dues to the State.

But it is to be hoped that this Congress will not adjourn without providing by appropriate legislation for the issue of silver coin and to restore it and gold to their former relative values, whatever the present value of either may be. Give it the weight and fineness to make it equal to gold and it will soon return to the old standard.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] flippantly flaunts the question in the face of this House and demands to know whether, since the passage of the act of 1869 to strengthen the public credit, any man dare say we can pay the public debt in silver? I dare to say we can, and I further dare to say and feel it my duty to say that the act of 1869 was a flagrant outrage and wrong, that its practical effect was to swindle, and it did swindle, the people of this Government out of millions of money, and elevate the basis of the payment of the bonds referred to to a much higher and more costly standard than was contemplated upon the passage of the act authorizing their issue. Why, sir, it is known that the very language of the law authorizing the issue of some of those bonds only required the interest to be paid in coin; that the principal was payable in currency. Need I remind the gentleman that the great commoner of Pennsylvania, Thaddeus Stevens, here on the floor of this House, as its leader and in its presence, so declared? That opinion was then held and has since been promulgated by a prominent gentleman of the same State who lends dignity to this presence by occupying a seat on this floor as the oldest member of this House, a gentleman whose influence, learning, and experience, republican though he is, has been upon this currency and silver question steadily, so far as I have observed, in the interest of the people as against ring capitalists. I need not remind the House that I refer to Judge KELLEY. His teachings upon this money question at least are sound and worthy of emulation. Upon the feasibility and practicability of specie payment I beg to quote from a letter of Hon. H. C. Carey to Hon. Moses W. Field, dated August 18, 1875:

Forty years since the use of gold as money was almost as rare with us as it now is among the Esquimaux. Contracts abounded here and elsewhere providing for the payment of interest and ultimately of principal in silver dollars of certain weight and fineness; but it may be doubted if ever a single one could have been found providing for such payment in the more costly metal.

Just then, however, the gold mines of the South were becoming so productive as not only to have caused large expenditure for southern mints, but also to have produced a determination on the part of southern men to force their product into that home circulation which, until then, had been held exclusively by the Mexican silver. To that end, while professing an utter abhorrence of governmental interference in any matter of trade, they by law raised the price of gold to 16 for 1 of silver, and so intent were they on the accomplishment of their object that I myself heard an eminent Senator, of the South Carolina delegation, assert that should it prove to be required they would proceed still further, giving to the gold a legal-tender value as high as 17 to 1.

Of all American writers whose attention was then given to monetary questions, there was, as I think, none whose opinions in relation thereto were held in more respect than were those of my friend Mr. Condy Raguet, from whose work, published in 1839, I take the following passage:

"Prior to the passage of the gold bill above referred to, the metallic currency of the United States had been virtually, as above stated, a currency of silver since the establishment of the Government, gold very rarely appearing, while that of Great Britain was of gold. The consequence was that the currency of each was independent of the other, and the contraction or expansion of each did not necessarily act upon the other. The contraction in England, which preceded the resumption of specie payments, in 1821, after a long suspension of twenty-four years, produced no convulsion on this side of the Atlantic; nor did our contraction, distressing and durable as it was, after the removal of the public deposits from the Bank of the United States, on the 1st of October, 1833, which brought down the prices of stocks from 20 to 50 per cent., and led to the importation of $3,793,293 in silver from England alone during the year ending on the 30th of September, 1834, produce any convulsion whatever in that country. Such would have continued to be the case had the mint regulations remained without alteration; but no sooner was gold, by a change in its relative value to silver, rendered the more profitable of the two metals to import than we found the currency of England disturbed to a degree that rendered necessary an immediate reduction of her paper issues, although the amount of gold drawn from her between the passage of the law in June, 1834, and the 30th of September, of the same year, was but $1,922,960. To the importations of gold in the years 1835 and 1836, instead of silver, may be ascribed that further contraction of the British currency which led to the crisis of the latter year that was so fatal to American credits and American cotton, by which millions of dollars were lost to the country.

"Now, as like causes will produce like effects, it behooves us to examine well into this matter, and, if we find that we have committed an error, it is our duty to retrace our steps. Thus far very little progress has been made toward introducing gold into actual circulation, notwithstanding that a large amount had been imported; still a long perseverance in the law will give us a gold currency, but it will be most dearly purchased. It will so closely ally our fortunes with those of Great Britain that no convulsion can take place in the currency of that country that will not act directly and powerfully upon ours; while, on the other hand, none can take place on our side that will not act directly upon hers, and in so doing break down the prices of cotton and tobacco and other American products in the markets of Europe, to the great injury of our planting interest."

The extreme importance of the view here presented, to wit, the necessity for avoiding "entangling alliances" in reference to a matter so important as the monetary machinery of exchange, was made clearly obvious when in 1866, like a clap of thunder in the clearest sky, the great crisis of that year, greater than any by which it had been preceded, brought ruin to hundreds of what had been considered the strongest British houses, and made demand on all the world for aid if the Bank of England itself were to be enabled to avoid suspension. The crash was terrific, yet it never affected our domestic operations for even a single hour. Our monetary independence had been established. Our machinery of exchange being a non-exportable one, we had no use for gold, and if it were needed abroad we could say, "why let it go!" Accordingly, no less than $30,000,000 were at once dispatched; the bank was saved, and injury was thus avoided to an extent that would scarcely be exaggerated were it counted by hundreds of millions of pounds; and thus did Britain benefit by the fact that the currencies of the two countries were different.

Had we been using gold, where should we then have found ourselves? In the midst of a crisis greater than the country had ever known. Every golden dollar would have been withdrawn. Banks, after running their customers, would themselves have been driven to suspension. Mills and mines would have ceased to work, and the power to pay for foreign merchandise would have disappeared, to the great loss of Britain, whose market in this country, owing to depression at home, became so greatly enlarged as to aid materially in the work of recuperation.

To the two countries thousands of millions of dollars were saved by the simple fact that our currency was of a character not liable to be affected by the financial movements of a neighbor nation that seeks to control the universal monetary movement, and yet is more than any other liable to convulsions by means of which disturbance is produced throughout the world at large.

The more perfect the independence of individuals, the greater is their power to aid each other in case of sudden or unforeseen trouble. So precisely is it with nations; and yet, every step that has been, or now is, urged upon us, has tended, and is now tending, to make us more and more dependent on foreign money markets; liable at any moment to disturbances like to those by which the year 1866 stands so much distinguished

I also commend to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] an extract from a speech made in this House March 16, 1876, by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY:]

Mr. KELLEY. It always received the money which it made the people receive. It receives its own paper for taxes, for government dues, and thus for the time being it demonetizes gold. It was our dishonoring of our own paper that called the "gold-room" of New York into existence, that brought thither the vampires of the world to fasten and fatten upon the industries of the country. It was the dishonesty of the American Congress and Government in repudiating the money it created and forced the people to receive that has cost us the countless millions made and lost in the "gold-room" of New York and through its influence.

I have said, and here repeat, that if this Congress does not afford the relief which the people of the country are clamoring for, distress, deep and heart-rending distress, must follow. The productions of the farmer, manufacturer, and laborer are dropping down to ruinously low figures. One instance, sir, from my own State: live stock is being sold in the eastern markets to-day for less money than was paid for it last fall; the farmer loses the grain that it consumed, loses the interest upon the money, which, bythe way, is generally borrowed capital, and also loses his own time and the use of his farm, and while thousands of idle men are begging for work at fifty cents per day he cannot afford to give them employment. Everything but money is upon the decline; and yet gentlemen are urging a speedy resumption of specie payment. I have heard a good deal said upon this floor about the injustice of forcing the creditor to accept depreciated silver in payment of debts; but there is another view of this question. The existing debts of the country were contracted upon a greenback basis and should be paid in greenbacks, or in silver, if the debtor prefers it. A speedy return to a gold basis will largely increase those debts and compel the debtor to pay more than he contracted to pay. That is to say, his indebtedness will be increased just in proportion to the premium of gold over greenbacks. If the debt is $1,000 and payable in greenbacks, $1,000 will pay it; but if specie resumption is forced upon the country and gold shall bear a premium of 12 per cent., it will require $1,120 in greenbacks to discharge the obligation. As there is not gold enough in the country to meet the wants of exchange the debtor must pay in its equivalent.

Now, it is said that silver is only worth seventy-nine cents on the dollar, say, for illustration, eighty cents on the dollar in gold. If the debtor had nothing other than silver with which to pay he would be required to advance $1,200 of that metal to pay his debt, which a few months before might have been discharged with $1,000 in greenbacks. And this is the just and humane legislation that gentlemen demand in this House.

History is repeating itself. We have only to look to England as far back as 1819, when Peel's currency bill "for the restoration of cash payments" was enacted, "beginning with an issue of gold at £4 1*s.* the ounce in 1820, and ending with the standard unit price of £3 17*s.* 10½*d.*" It also, among other things, provided for a gradual return to cash payments. This bill passed with a unanimity rarely ever witnessed in legislation, and seemed to quiet the fears of nearly all classes. There were a few experienced financiers, however, who foresaw that it could not meet the necessities of the hour; and it did not. Mr. Cobbett was among this number. He had the boldness to say that "Before this bill can be carried out a million of persons at least must die of hunger." As to how far the predictions of Mr. Cobbett were verified let the historian speak.

Distress is the real parent of crime. Keep a people at ease, and their moral teachers must be at fault indeed if the mass is not well-conducted and honest. Plunge them into misery and desperation, and vice and criminality shall begin to stalk through the land. We have already seen that from the increasing pressure of the debt and taxes, and from the ease with which it was effected, the time of uttering forged bank-notes had grown until the juries got sick of blood; and executions as a spectacle even ceased to interest the strangely constituted minds that find a pleasure in such exhibitions. Well might this be when we learn the appalling fact that in the single year of 1820 one hundred and fifty persons were tried at the Old Bailey alone for uttering false notes; and that of these, forty-six suffered death, being at the rate nearly of a victim per week through the twelve months. This, however, was only a part of the mischief of the time.

* * * * * * *

They made political libels felonies, punishable by transportation; and lastly, they surrounded the press with so many difficulties, publishers of newspapers being compelled to give security beforehand, to answer for any libel which possibly might be inserted therein, and to deposit at the stamp-office a copy of every paper they published, that unless backed by one of the great political parties that ruled the state, to conduct a political journal became a matter of deadly peril; and freedom of writing was at an end. Every man who really opposed in writing the existing system of tyranny and deception was sure of pecuniary ruin and the loss of liberty—perhaps of life. The few honest and intelligent public writers at that time existing were exiled or silenced; and, upon the whole, the most dismal and dark year of English history was perhaps that of 1819. That famous bill, however, which we have just seen the Houses of Parliament passed so unanimously, soon made amends for all. Some of "the six acts" were temporary, and expired. The laws concerning the press, however, remain to this hour; but the changes produced by the workings of the bill of Peel have enabled the people partly to overgrow them, and their sting is all but gone.

Such were the fruits of the revulsion of the paper money, as far as respect for the maxims of constitutional law was concerned; but it produced more novelties than these. Amid the doubts, fears, and general want of confidence caused by appalling ruin which flowed from the sudden drawing in of the paper, and by the bloody outrages and bitter persecutions which again flowed from the effects of that ruin, it was felt necessary to attempt to draw, if possible, the ties that bound the middling classes of the nation to the funding and paper system still closer, and to add, if such a thing could be accomplished, to the strength and number of these ties. Close observers, and those especially behind the scenes of this strange drama, saw that the fabric was now beginning to show signs of dissolution. The people, amazed that a state of peace, instead of its usual blessings, had brought a palpable increase of difficulty and suffering, showed a marked and alarming impatience under their manifold burdens. In proportion as the discontent was strong, had the government of a sudden become weak. That strength which is derived from the power of lavishing immense sums of money was gone forever. The eight hundred millions of debts were borrowed and expended. No increase could be made here; and those who carried on the government were henceforward bound by the bill of Peel to pay the interest of that debt in convertible money of the value of £3 17*s.* 10½*d.* to the ounce of gold, and to raise all their taxes in money of the same value, which was (had they known it) a virtual bar to any future increase in the proportionate issues of paper, however desirable the ease obtainable from such issues might be.—Doubleday's Financial History of England, pages 250-253.

Mr. Chairman, I will, even at the expense of being regarded tedious, make one other quotation from the same author:

The distress, ruin, and bankruptcy which now took place were universal, affecting both the great interests of land and trade; but among the landlords, whose estates were burdened by mortgages, jointures, settlements, legacies, &c., the effects were most marked and out of the ordinary course. In hundreds of cases, from the tremendous reduction in the price of land which now took place, the estates barely sold for as much as would pay off the mortgages, and hence the owners were stripped of all and made beggars. (Ibid., page 271.)

I will not recount the scenes of blood and suffering and death that followed and flowed from this blunder of the English Parliament, but content myself with warning the American Congress against a similar mistake. The people of this country are in no frame of mind to be driven to the wall and beggared. They will not go into involuntary bankruptcy nor have their property improperly wrung from them to pay in coin Government bonds that should and would without question have been paid in greenbacks except for the fraudulently procured acts of Congress to strengthen the public credit. As to how those bonds should be paid I will take a future opportunity to discuss.

We are told there is a plethora of money in the great monetary centers of New York, Philadelphia, and other cities of this Union. And yet we see it stated that during the first week in June of this year over one thousand properties were knocked down under the hammer at forced sale in Philadelphia. Upon this subject I commend to the House the following article, taken from the Wilmington Herald of June 21:

O THE TIMES! THE TIMES!

The first Monday of each and every month is the time fixed by act of Assembly to sell real estate by the sheriff of Philadelphia. The first Monday of this month was the bluest day that city ever saw. Over one thousand properties were sold by the sheriff, and in almost every instance the property was bought in by the mortgagee or judgment-creditor. The rich are enriching themselves by obtaining for a debt, representing say 40 per cent. of the value of a piece of real estate, a property worth more than twice the amount of the debt. This is harrowing. Think of the sheriff's hammer falling successively for eight hours, and each stroke the type of ruined hopes, the sad ending of a struggle to have a shelter for the declining days of one's life. Is it not enough to make strong men shudder? "Next sale," said the sheriff, "will be still larger." "Next sale" will be upon the 3d of July. How many groans of sorrow will be mixed with the popular gratulations of the centennial eve.

The most alarming statement in this connection is the fact that in almost every instance the property was bought in by the mortgagee or judgment-creditor. What good then, I ask, results to the people from this plethora of money if property goes for a song and the owner and his little ones are turned out houseless and homeless?

But, again, I see by the papers yesterday morning that in the great monetary center of the country, the city of New York, one thousand unemployed workmen held a meeting and called at the office of the mayor of that city, peaceably demanding work that they might have bread. When such scenes as these are enacted in the very heart of the two largest and wealthiest cities in the country, where the money of they country is locked up and her bonds held by hundreds of millions, do gentlemen yet insist upon inviting us to the resumption feast on the 1st day of January, 1879? I commend to this House the following brief newspaper extract:

The Pittsburgh Post (democratic) says: "Bread or blood. This is an ugly cry to be heard in the land, and shows that we are terribly misgoverned."

I will not longer trespass upon the time of this House. We are about entering upon an eventful chapter in the history of this country. The times demand just and humane legislation—that all classes in all sections and of all colors shall be protected. Do this, and this centennial year will be a year of jubilee.

[At the conclusion of his speech Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, yielded the remainder of his hour to Mr. HARRISON.]

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRISON] will yield I will move that the committee rise. He will have the floor when the House again goes into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the House again go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. RANDALL. I think that in all human probability it will.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to submit some remarks; and unless there is a tolerably fair certainty that I shall have an opportunity hereafter I prefer to speak now.

Mr. RANDALL. So far as I am concerned I cannot promise anything as to the future action of the House, but I think it probable that the gentleman will have his opportunity hereafter.

Mr. HARRISON. With the understanding that I retain the floor in Committee of the Whole, I yield for the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. EDEN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly a bill (H. R. No. 2592) to transfer the conduct of Indian affairs from the Interior Department to the War Department, and had come to no resolution thereon.

UNSECTARIAN DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC FUNDS.

Mr. LORD. I hold in my hand a report from the Committee on the Judiciary upon House resolution No. 1, which is known as the Blaine amendment to the Constitution. I had been directed by the committee to make this report, and intended to do so early in the day, but was prevented. I now present the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is this a privileged report?

Mr. LORD. I do not understand that there is any objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] asks unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on the Judiciary a resolution which will be read.

Mr. SAMPSON. I ask the gentleman to yield for the appointment of a conference committee before we enter upon the consideration of this report.

Mr. LORD. This will meet with no antagonism; it is the unanimous report of the committee. I will ask the reading of the report.

Mr. SAMPSON. I apprehended that this might occupy some time.

Mr. CONGER. I reserve the right to object until I hear the report read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hold that the right to object continues until the resolution has been read. The Clerk will read the report and the resolution.

Mr. LORD. There is a motion to reconsider pending, which I can call up as a matter of high privilege.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If a motion has been entered to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was referred, then the gentleman should ask to take up that motion.

Mr. LORD. I will put it in that form.

The SPEAKER, pro tempore. The gentleman from New York calls up at this time the motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution which will be read was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONGER. Does the record show that that motion was entered?

The SPEAKER, pro tempore. The Chair accepts the statement of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LORD. It was entered by Mr. Blaine in my hearing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will first read the report of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary respectfully report that they have had under consideration House resolution No. 1, and have amended the same by adding thereto that the article should not vest, enlarge, or diminish legislative power in the Congress. Thus amended the resolution was unanimously adopted. While there may be a difference of opinion as to the necessity of such a constitutional amendment, all agree that the underlying principles are right and in accordance with the spirit of the age.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of each House concurring therein,) That the following be proposed to the several States of the Union as an amendment to the Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE XVI.

No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no money raised by taxation in any State for the support of public schools, or derived from any public fund therefor, nor any public lands devoted thereto, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect; nor shall any money so raised or lands so devoted be divided between religious sects or denominations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments proposed by the committee will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12, after the word "sect," insert the words "or denomination."

At the end of the article add the following: "This article shall not vest, enlarge, or diminish legislative power in the Congress."

Mr. KASSON. Is it proposed to act on this now?

Mr. LORD. I move the previous question.

Mr. LAWRENCE. There are two amendments in the body of the resolution.

Mr. CONGER. I reserve the right to object until the amendments are all in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The right to object cannot obtain. The only question that can be raised is the question of consideration. The gentleman from New York rises to call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which this resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which motion, the Chair is informed, is pending. The question of consideration can be raised upon that motion; but the right of objection does not lie against it.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair will recollect that the proposition as put to the House was upon the request to make a report from the committee, and not upon calling up a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That was subsequently corrected.

Mr. KASSON. I want to ask the gentleman from New York whether, in view of the present condition of the House, which is very thin, he will not consent to call this up to-morrow when the House will be full?

Several MEMBERS. O, no.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman let me ask him one question: Is this proposed constitutional amendment now in the same form as when it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. LORD. Precisely, except in two particulars. We have inserted the words "or denomination" after the word "sect," so as to make the language correspond with that in another portion of the proposition; and at the conclusion we have added a provision that this article "shall not vest, enlarge, or diminish legislative power in Congress."

Mr. HALE. Otherwise, as I understand, the resolution is not changed.

Mr. KASSON. I would inquire whether this provision that it shall not enlarge the power of Congress does not defeat the very purpose of the proposition? [Cries of "Regular order."]

Mr. FRYE. Will the gentleman from New York allow me a word?

Mr. WADDELL. I object to any debate.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I asked the Speaker a moment ago whether this matter was subject to objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair then supposed that it was from the manner in which it was called up; but he has since been corrected by the Clerk as to the position of the joint resolution. It comes up on a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and it is not subject to objection. It is only subject to the question of consideration.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Well, sir, I move that the joint resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That motion, I believe, is not debatable. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask that the resolution, as amended, be read.

The joint resolution, with the proposed amendment, was again read.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. KASSON. Then I ask a separate vote on the last amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that the amendments are in the form of a substitute.

Mr. LORD. This is offered as a substitute.

Mr. KASSON. As I understand, this comes up on a motion to reconsider; and when the original proposition is before the House these are proposed as amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ascertain the state of the case. The motion, as I understand, is simply to reconsider the vote by which this subject was referred to the Judiciary Committee. The previous question being called operates on that. When the subject comes before the House, then the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] can offer his substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is unquestionably the condition of the bill.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. What is the decision of the Speaker as to how far this motion for the previous question applies?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Only to the question of reconsideration.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. LORD. I now propose the resolution with the amendments as read by the Clerk as a substitute for the resolution as originally proposed; and on that I call the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. I call attention to this parliamentary point: We have now reconsidered simply the reference to the Judiciary Committee, and the motion now pending is, therefore, Shall the resolution be referred to that committee?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a correct point; the Chair recognizes it as such. The question is, Will the House refer this resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The question was decided in the negative.

Mr. LORD. I now propose my substitute, and call for the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. I raise the point of order that this proposition has not been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and they have no right to report upon it, and the gentleman from New York has no control of the matter to bring it before the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. The answer to that is very clear. Any gentleman has the right to call up the motion to reconsider. The gentleman from New York having the floor has called it up. The resolution is now before the House; and the gentleman from New York upon his own responsibilty offers this substitute.

Mr. LORD. With the unanimous approval of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONGER. Then I object to its consideration to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection cannot lie. The matter is before the House.

Mr. CONGER. Then I insist upon the proposition that this House has decided that this matter is not in the hands of the Judiciary Committee, and therefore cannot be reported from that committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. McCRARY. I wish the gentleman from New York would allow me a moment.

Mr. LORD. I will as soon as the substitute is read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of each House concurring therein,) That the following be proposed to the several States of the Union as an amendment to the Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE XVI.

No State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no money raised by taxation in any State for the support of public schools, or derived from any public fund therefor, nor any public lands devoted thereto, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect or denomination; nor shall any money so raised or lands so devoted be divided between religious sects or denominations. This article shall not vest, enlarge, or diminish legislative power in the Congress.

Mr. LORD. Before demanding the previous question, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCREERY,] who was not present at the meeting of the committee this morning, and desires to occupy a few moments.

Mr. McCRARY. Mr. Speaker, the situation of this question before the House as I understand it is this: The original proposition to amend the Constitution as offered by the late member from Maine, Mr. Blaine, is the main proposition pending before the House. The gentleman from New York offers a substitute for that original amendment, and I suppose the first vote will be on adopting the substitute for the original proposition. I desire to say, sir, that I am in favor of the original resolution, and hope it will be adhered to by the House, and I am opposed to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from New York.

The difference between the two is this: the original is a plain proposition to amend the Constitution upon the matter before it. The substitute embodies the original proposition and adds to it what I can consider in no other light than a nullifying clause.

Mr. KASSON. That is it.

Mr. McCRARY. It amends the Constitution and denies to Congress the power to legislate for enforcing the amendment after you have made it. Now, sir, a proposition like that is too plain for discussion. If the House, if the people of the country, desire the Constitution of the United States to be amended in this particular, then it follows it ought to be so amended that the legislative body that makes laws for the National Government shall have power to enforce it by proper legislation.

It would be an anomaly, it would be a strange proceeding indeed, to put a provision in the Constitution of the United States and accompany it with another proposition that the law-making power of the United States shall have no power to enforce it. Therefore I hope the substitute will not be adopted, but the original proposition will be sustained by the House.

Mr. LORD. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of amending the Constitution of the United States. If adopted by Congress and by the State Legislatures it will be irrepealable. I do not think any gentleman in the House, on reflection, will insist that such a matter as that should be put through without reasonable opportunity for discussion.

I am sorry to detain the House, but I have something I desire to say on this subject. I am heartily in favor of the substitute reported by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LORD.] I think it is better than the original proposition. It makes no difference to me in dealing with an amendment to the Constitution from what quarter the proposition may come.

Now, sir, the Constitution of the United States was framed with two principles running through its entire frame-work. One was this: that where the Constitution asserted certain rights of citizens or prohibited to the States or Congress certain legislative powers, the right to enforce those provisions of the Constitution was left to the courts. And the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly held that a provision like this in the first article of amendments, and various provisions in the Constitution itself relating to State Legislatures were to be enforced solely and were enforced sufficiently by the power of the Supreme Court of the United States to declare such things null and void, although they vested no legislative power in Congress whatever.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that was the purpose of the distinguished gentleman from Maine in drawing this original amendment, as anybody will see by looking at its language. He did not intend, and he could not have intended when he drew that amendment, to imply that Congress should have the legislative power to enforce it. He did not intend that or he would have put it in as we put it in the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, when it was deemed necessary, for reasons which need not now be repeated. But when the Constitution enacts that no State Legislature shall pass a law of a particular character, the Supreme Court of the United States will hold such law null and void, and that constitutional principle is perfectly adequate and sufficient; and if Mr. Blaine's amendment were adopted without the addition now proposed, it would mean exactly the same thing it means with the addition proposed.

The proposition of the Judiciary Committee does not alter the meaning of the amendment of Mr. Blaine in the least. Why, then, do you add to the original proposition when you do not alter its meaning? The reason is this: This constitutional amendment has got to pass the jealous scrutiny, not merely of both branches of Congress, but of three-fourths of the States, by the action of their State Legislatures or conventions. There is great anxiety and jealousy for fear the powers of Congress, if any now exist under any particular circumstances to affect the school systems in the various States, may be extended, or on the part of those who do not believe they exist, may be asserted. It is therefore for the purpose of commending this proposition to the people of the United States, and that no jealousies, or alarms, unreasonable as they would be, may exist, that we propose to express in terms that this shall be one of the class of amendments, like similar provisions in the Constitution, which do not enlarge the legislative powers of Congress. Nobody wants Congress shall undertake to legislate in regard to the school systems of the States, when there is no power except so far as it may be involved in the power to secure republican government.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, I go as far as any man on this floor in the desire that if the States refuse altogether to establish school systems, Congress, under the power to secure a republican government, should interpose. I do not know there is any other gentleman on this floor who is prepared to go as far as I do in that direction. I think they can do it in such a case just as, if a State should refuse to establish courts altogether, they could interfere. But it was not intended to embarrass this proposition for an amendment to the Constitution by alarming the fears or exciting the opposition of any American citizen in regard to that subject. And therefore I heartily concur with this amendment, which I had the honor to suggest in substance in the Judiciary Committee, and I trust it will be adopted.

Mr. LORD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.]

Mr. KASSON. Before the gentleman from Massachusetts resumes his seat I desire to ask him one question. I observe that the language of the proposed constitutional amendment embraces grants of land for school purposes, including all those made by the United States, which we all know are numerous.

Mr. HOAR. No, sir.

Mr. KASSON. Certainly they are numerous. It covers all grants of land or money. Now it struck me as remarkable that when the proposition seemed broad enough to cover every grant made by the United States, whether of money or lands, you should deny to the United States the power of that legislation that would be necessary to see to the administration of the funds or lands thus granted; or, rather, not to see to the administration, but to guard against maladministration.

Mr. LORD. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman is discussing an abstract question, which does not arise under this joint resolution.

Mr. KASSON. By the courtesy of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I have been pointing out that the last clause had a scope beyond what he suggested.

Mr. HOAR. If the gentleman will hear the proposed amendment read again I think he will see that his objection entirely disappears.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again read the resolution as proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

No State shall make any law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; and no money raised by taxation in any State for the support of public schools or derived from any public fund therefor, nor any public lands devoted thereto, shall ever be under the control of any religious sect or denomination, nor shall any money so raised or lands so devoted be divided between religious sects or denominations.

This article shall not vest, enlarge, or diminish legislative power in the Congress.

Mr. KASSON. Now, my point has reference to the clause, "nor any public lands." If the United States finds that a portion of its public lands have been diverted to a religious sect, under this last clause it would be deprived of all power of enforcing this constitutional amendment.

Mr. HOAR. The answer to that is this: The remedy is in the courts. It is true, if the State appropriates to this unconstitutional purpose land originally granted by the United States, it would be included in this prohibition. But it is equally true that the remedy in the courts is ample. Such an act would be null, waste paper; and the courts so declaring it, no title could be given under it.

Mr. KASSON. But no suit against the State can be brought.

Mr. LORD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.]

Mr. LAWRENCE. I shall vote for this resolution to submit to the States the proposed amendment to the Constitution, whether the House shall put it in the form recommended by the Judiciary Committee or shall determine to adopt it in the form in which it was originally presented to the House. I am so much in favor of the purposes contained in this proposed constitutional amendment that I am ready to take it in either form. I would prefer that it should be adopted in the form in which it was originally presented to the House, adding only in the body of the proposed amendment after the word "sect" the words "or denomination," which I suggested in the Judiciary Committee this morning, and which I think are necessary, or at least proper, to perfect and make uniform the language and purpose of the original proposition. I assented to the other addition, being the closing sentence of the substitute as agreed upon in the Judiciary Committee this morning; in fact I suggested the final words in which it was adopted in committee. I did so assent because I desired that there should be a unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee in favor of the proposition to amend the Constitution; and I did so because I desired that the House should pass this amendment. And I believe that in all probability it would not be possible to get this amendment adopted unless it was in this form; for there is so much jealousy against the exercise of power by Congress in the affairs of a State that I feared this House would not adopt this proposition unless this amendment or additional sentence should be agreed to.

Undoubtedly there is some authority for saying that where there is an amendment to the Constitution imposing restraints on a State, without a provision expressly declaring that Congress shall have power to legislate to enforce it, that Congress cannot so legislate; but I would prefer to let it rest upon authority or decisions of courts, whatever they are or may be, rather than to add a provision expressly excluding the power of Congress to legislate upon the subject. I would rather leave it just where all the first amendments were left; and in that view, if Congress cannot legislate to enforce the new article, this last and added sentence to it would be unnecessary.

Mr. KASSON. It never has been made before.

Mr. LAWRENCE. On the authorities as they are now claimed to stand this added sentence would not be necessary to exclude the power of Congress to legislate.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. The Constitution provides that—

The Congress shall have power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or officer thereof.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Yes, undoubtedly.

Mr. CONGER. Now I ask the gentleman if this proposition is not a denial to Congress of its power under that article?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I do not think it can exclude any power heretofore given by the clause of the Constitution which has been read, but it is a declaration that this article shall not, per se, vest or enlarge legislative power in Congress. This would seem to go so far as to say that it shall not draw after it any power in Congress to legislate either by virtue of the clause which has been read or any other. But it cannot exclude an existing power to legislate, as the power already existing to establish schools under the authority, to guarantee a republican form of government. This must be so, because this proposition says it shall not "diminish" existing legislative power. It is because the effect will be as I have stated it that I would prefer the original proposition—the constitutional amendment as it was originally introduced in the House—so that if Congress or the courts should ever hereafter determine, as they possibly might, that under the original proposition there is or could be under proper circumstances legislative power in Congress to enforce it, the people would have the benefit of that power. If the States will not submit to the restraints imposed by the national Constitution or carry into effect the rights thereby secured there should be a power somewhere to give them vigorous effect. Congress should have power in such case to do what the States refuse to do. No provision of the Constitution should be left a mockery and a sham.

I may say further that I have repeatedly expressed the opinion in this House that under the Constitution as it now stands, under the power of Congress to guarantee a republican form of government to the States, if a State should fail to provide for common schools, without which no republican government can exist, Congress would have the power to legislate for the establishment of schools in such State.

I adhere to that opinion now, and this power will exist if the proposed amendment to the Constitution should be adopted either with or without the last and added sentence of the pending substitute. The words of this sentence are, "This article shall not vest, enlarge, or diminish legislative power in Congress." Notice the word diminish. This word, or the whole sentence, implies that there is elsewhere in the Constitution some power to legislate on the subject of schools. In this sentence there is an implied concession that under some other provision of the Constitution there is or may be power in Congress to legislate upon the subject of schools in the States.

This is the view I take of this question, and I hope that in some form or other this amendment will be agreed to. If we cannot now secure it in a form to enable Congress to enforce it by legislation, the national courts will at all events have jurisdiction to maintain and give it effect and secure rights under it, and, if necessary, Congress can hereafter be clothed with power to enforce its provisions by legislation. I regret the long delay in reporting this subject to the House for its action. No part of the responsibility for the delay rests on me.

The true theory of our Government, justice, and the enlightened public sentiment of the country require action on this subject, and in the direction and to secure the purposes contemplated by the proposed amendment of the Constitution.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to make the suggestion to the gentleman from Ohio and to my colleague who has spoken upon it that I wish to call attention to the amendment proposed by this joint resolution. If the Constitution is amended so as to secure the object embraced in the principal part of this proposed amendment it prohibits the States from exercising the power they now exercise. Congress at present has no power to legislate upon this subject in any way or form.

If this amendment becomes a part of the Constitution by the concurrence of the States with Congress the amendment declaring that the powers of Congress shall not be enlarged or diminished on the subject then Congress will have no more power to legislate on it than it has now. It absolutely excludes and precludes any legislation by Congress; therefore this amendment takes out of the body of the Constitution that power which was guaranteed to Congress by the old Constitution.

Mr. HOAR here made a remark which was inaudible to the reporters.

Mr. BANKS. What I want to say is that I do not see it in that light. If the Constitution itself precludes any legislation by Congress, and Congress refuses by constitutional amendment to diminish or enlarge the powers of Congress, it cannot, after that amendment is adopted, execute any powers conferred upon it by the old Constitution. But the gentleman from Ohio says that the right to guarantee a republican form of government can have no effect if an express amendment to the Constitution prohibits the exercise of that power.

